There has been a lot of talk tately about the tack of study areas on campus. It is time for a new perspective on the issue. There are study areas on campus, but there is a lack of information about where they are.

Study areas exist in the K-State Union, Seaton and Durland halls, the residence halls and major-specific study areas in Calvin and Seaton halls. These are just a few of which I know, and I am sure there are others. Currently, students receive no information about where and when these study areas are available. Instead of spending our precious University money trying to find more study areas, let us see first if the ones we have are adequate. How about it?

Liberty threatened

Editor,

I am shocked and moved almost beyond words by the front-page article in the March 28 edition of the K-State Collegian concerning the recent elimination of peanut butter from several items in the K-State Union

Stateroom. This outlandish act is clearly a those he falsely accused. That would be askthreat to our civil liberties. There can be no doubt that this treacherousness smacks of conspiracy at the highest levels.

I can think of little else that is more symbolic of America than peanut butter. Millions of our country's citizens have grown up eating peanut butter and jelly sandwiches. I ask you, where would we be without this patriotic and nutritious staple? Did you know that Alexander Graham Bell was thought to be eating a peanut butter sandwich when he invented the telephone? There is documented evidence that Orville and Wilbur Wright had packed a picnic lunch, including peanut butter sandwiches, that triumphant day at Kitty Hawk when the first power-driven airplane flew. You are all aware that one of our recent presidents was previously a peanut farmer. Obviously, the American people feel that the production of peanut butter is a respected and noble profession. My point is simple - peanut butter is one of the culinary cornerstones of the American people.

I can assure you that the Stateroom's patrons and the K-State community will not stand for this blatant dietary terrorism. Economics is not an issue here. I think I speak for everyone when it comes to peanut butter, price is no object. I suggest that those concerned citizens who concur with my opinion unite and form the The Manhattan Coalition for the Protection of Peanut Butter Freedom and Availablility or TMCFTPOPBFAA. Our first goal as TMCFTPOPBFAA is to meet, draft and ratify a constitution. As soon as police protection is available, I will announce the time and place of this meeting.

Stop writing

Editor,

In Matthew Vajnar's March 8 letter to the editor, he spoke of a lack of respect on the part of pro-choice people. Is Vajnar the one who put up graphic posters across campus? Is Vajnar the one who made the unsubstantiated accusation that pro-choicers took the posters? What does Vajnar know of respect?

Will Vajnar apologize? No, I don't expect him to apologize to ing to much. His apology should be directed toward those people who casually glanced at a signboard and saw one of his posters. I think pro-lifers, pro-choicers and all those in between have the right to walk across campus without being exposed to full-color scenes of dismemberment.

I am not a pro-choicer and not a pro-lifer. I am just a guy who got pissed-off at the sight! of Vajnar's disrespectful poster.

One last comment. Both Students for Life and Voices for Choices are adept at reshaping the truth around their own views. For the sake of those who read the newspaper for news, I suggest both groups stop writing letters to the: editor to shove the same old arguments down our throats.

The facts favor neither side, there are only opinions.

Blacks play integral part in armed forces

I would like to respond to the first two sentences of Jennifer Vanderhoof's letter to the editor of Friday, April 5. The sentences read, 'A large, controversial percentage of the military we are currently so proud of is black. This group of individuals was banned from the armed services only 50 years ago."

Here is my response to that - wrong. Blacks have been an integral part of this country's military since before the United States was created. They have served with dignity, valor and perserverance from the days of the colonial militias right up through the present day. Blacks have never, in the history of this nation, been banned from military service.

Have blacks in the military been victims of racism and segregation? They certainly have. In spite of those formidable obstacles, however, they served well in the military of the past and continue to do so in the present. The American military would not be what it is today without the contributions of its black soldiers.

Pressure plays part in eating disorders

VICKI KNIGHT

Collegian Reporter

The desire to be thin is only one of the reason people develop eating

Years of research on eating disorders have uncovered many factors that contribute to the development of an eating disorder such as anorexia, when someone practices starvation, and bulimia, when someone practices binging and purging.

Pam Lathrop, social worker at Pawnee Mental Health Services, said the important thing to realize is that food is not the problem.

Lathrop said the problem is emotional, whether someone has experienced sexual, physical or emotional abuse, or has a low self-esteem.

She said eating disorders are often coping mechanisms, and many of the clients she has seen have difficulty dealing with stress.

Marlys Gardner, psychiatric nurse at Pawnee Mental Health, said there are external sources of stress from what others are expecting of them and internal stress from what they believe must be done for people to like External pressure may come from within the family. Lathrop said getting to know the family situation is important when dealing with an eating-disorder client.

The therapist seeks information about the role of the patient in the family, if expression of feeling is allowed and if there are a lot of control issues in the family.

The skills to appropriately express feelings are often not found in those with eating disorders, Lathrop said.

Also, those with eating disorders are often perfectionists. Finding the reason behind this perfectionism is a part of therapy. Lathrop said the perfectionism may stem from anything, including societal pressure to be thin.

Women may be more susceptible to eating disorders because they are given little attention or self-worth except through appearance, Lathrop said.

Lathrop said it's important to realize there is not a classic example of someone with an eating disorder.

"Uncovering why one has an eating disorder is much more complicated than that," Lathrop said.

Gardner said each case has so many different factors that it would be harmful to isolate a group of people who have experienced something like sexual abuse and assume they will all develop an eating disorder.

Kansans vie for 1991 Beef Cook-off honors

Indoor division winner receives shot at national award

JEFF STURDY

Collegian Reporter

The 1991 Kansas Beef Cook-off was in Justin Hall Saturday afternoon.

Eleven contestants from across the state competed for first place in Kansas and the right to go to the national cook-off, which will be in Colorado Springs in September.

The cook-off is sponsored by the Kansas CattleWomen and the Kansas Beef Council, with assistance from the College of Human Ecology.

Terri Bornholdt, Cook-Off chairwoman, said there were 108 recipes entered this year.

"All the recipes are sent to the Chicago Beef Board and they pick the recipes that are in today's competition," Bornholdt said.

There are two divisions: Indoor recipes that are prepared in the oven or stove and outdoor recipes that are prepared on a barbecue grill, she

"This year we have eight indoor contestants and three outdoor competing for the right to go to nationals," Bornholdt said.
"A panel of six judges picks the winners," she said. "There are two food editors, a professor of food and nutrition from K-State, an excutive chef of the Woodlands and others on the panel."

The first place winner of the indoor division receives $600 and an expense-paid trip to nationals. Second place receives $350, third place receives $125, and the other nonwinning contestants receive $50

One of the main purposes of the cook-offs is to promote beef and show that it has nutritional value.

The winner of the outdoor division receives $350, second place receives $200, and third place re-

Dianna Elias, registered dietician for the Kansas Beef Council, said that more and more entries chosen for competition are chosen because they have a good nutritional make-

"One of the main purposes of the cook-offs is to promote beef and show that it has nutritional value," Elias said. "The trend now is to feature beef as a leaner and healthier product. Producers are meeting the demands of consumers by lowering the fat and cholesterol levels in beef. Today, beef is 27 percent leaner than it was a decade ago."

Glenn Pearson, first-time contestant, said he wasn't nervous but there is that fear that something will go wrong.

Bonnie Aeschliman, head judge, said the entries were judged on taste, the ease of preparation, appeal and appearance.

Aeschliman said the cuts of beef used were tenderloin, sirloin, chuck, round steak, brisket, rump and rib cuts. The most popular ingredients were garlic and olive oil.

The first-place winner in the indoor division was Dan Cherrington of Fairway, whose recipe was "The Whole Enchilada.'

The second-place winner was Sharon Hartwich, Onaga, and her recipe was "Beef-Vegetable

The third-place winner was Carl Scott, Lenexa, with his recipe of 'Brisket in Orange.'

The outdoor division was won by Glenn Pearson, Manhattan. Pearson's winning recipe was "Beef Tenderloin in Grainy Mustard."

The second-place winner in the outdoor division was Barbara Baethke, Lenexa, and her recipe for 'Marinated Grilled Rump Roast." The third contestant was unable to make it to the cook-off.

"It was really hard to chose a winner because all the recipes are really winners," Aeschliman said.

Rivals differ over U.N. membership

By the Associated Press

UNITED NATIONS - South Korea announced Sunday it will formally seek to join the United Nations this summer and urged rival North Korea to request separate membership.

The South Korean government declared, however, that parallel U.N. membership of both Korean states should in no way hinder the ultimate objective of Korea's reunification.

"As a country which maintains almost universal diplomatic relations and as the world's 12th largest trading nation, South Korea is ready to make its due contribution to the work of the United Nations as a full member," the South Korean government said in a statement released in New York and Seoul.

Pro-Western South Korea and Communist North Korea were divided at the end of World War II and fought the Korean war from 1950 to 1953. They are technically still at war because no peace treaty was signed.

North Korea consistently has opposed separate U.N. membership of the two Korean states, saying it would perpetuate the division of the Korean Peninsula. It has called for a single U.N. seat shared by both governments. South Korea has rejected that idea as unworkable.

Both Korean states now hold non-voting observer status in the 159-member United Nations.

Program takes students to Texas-Mexico border to learn and then make other people

CHRISTINE SPLICHAL

Collegian Reporter

Refugees who cross the Mexican border often find themselves in the Valley in Texas, where they are inhumanely treated.

"The sad thing is these people think that once they cross the border, they will be free. Instead when they come to southern Texas to the Valley, they are treated like animals. They are robbed and raped," said Elsa Eaton, junior in industrial engineering and physical science.

The Valley is an area of land near the Texas-Mexico border where many of the refugees from Central America are required to stay.

Eaton is one of four K-State students who traveled to Harlingen, Texas, as part of K-State Community Service's Border Witness Program. "One of the objectives of the trip is aware of the refugee problem near the border," Eaton said. Christopher Ralph, senior in political science, also went on the trip. Raiph said when the detained refugees go to court, they have fewer rights than people of other ethnic groups. He said they have to wear bright orange uniforms, blue slip-on shoes and no jewelry or make-up. "They have no identity, they look horrible," he said.

"The place felt like it wasn't the United States," said Eaton, who is of hispanic descent. "I could have been kept there. It was like Central America all put together in a valley."

If the people are caught, they are either deported or detained until their status is determined, Eaton said. She also said the detained refugees are kept behind wire and given uniforms

"The guards I saw looked like my brother, my father," Eaton said. They are Latino. They are selfish, they don't want to share what they have. They are afraid they'll have to compete for jobs.

Eaton said it a woman gets pregnant, she is let out of detention because authorities don't want to pay the medical expenses for her and her

"These people need food, money and clothing," she said. "All they bring with them is what they have on. And the average bond to get one of these people out of the prisons is

"We met an 11-year-old kid who traveled alone for nine days to the border. Then he got caught and is being detained now. Can you imagine how bad it has to be for an 11-yearold to walk that far?" Eaton said.

Doubles woes doom Wildcat netters

Michele Riniker serves to Colorado's Wendi Kaplan during her 7-6 (7-3), 6-4 win Saturday at the L.P. Washburn tennis courts.

TODD FERTIG Sports Reporter

Though it fought to a 3-3 tie in singles to begin play Saturday, the tennis team watched several opportunities to finish off its opponents slip away. Those failed opportunities haunted the Wildcat netters as the Colorado Buffaloes slipped by in three close doubles matches to win

The Wildcats jumped in front in two doubles matches, which would have clinched the meet. Tracy Parker and Angie Gover grabbed the first set of the No. 3 doubles match 6-2, while Michele Riniker and Thresa Burcham pulled to a 5-4 advantage in their No. 1 doubles contest

What was headed to become a 5-3 match lead and a sure team victory over the Buffaloes suddenly fell in question as Wendi Kaplan and Elke Schaumberg stole the first set from Riniker and Burcham.

While Parker and Gover dropped their second set to Angela Moore and Kelly Dickinson 6-4, the No. 1 tandem gained a reprieve with a 7-6 (7-4) edge to even both matches at

With the chips down, however, the Buffalo doubles teams hit stride. Kaplan and Schaumberg blanked the Wildcats' No. 1 squad in the fi-nal set, and Moore and Dickinson reeled off another 6-4 win at No. 3 doubles to secure the team victory.

In No. 2 doubles, Suzanne Sim and Neili Wilcox fell in straight sets to Renee Marshall and Sonja Panajotovic 6-4, 6-3.

Though encouraged by efforts in singles competition, Coach Steve Bietau could only express his disappointment that the team could not capitalize on the opportunities that presented themselves.

"I thought we had a good shot after the singles matches, but we just couldn't get it done in doubles," Bietau said.

Though doubles competition was where the team saw its chances slip away, it was not the only area where the Wildcats let their opponents off the hook.

Burcham, playing at No. 4 sin-gles, watched a 5-2 first set advantage against Panajotovic vanish. Panajotovic stormed back to win the set 7-5, and when Burcham took the second set 6-4, the first set loss loomed even larger. Saved from defeat, Panajotovic won the final set

"I thought we had a good oppor-tunity," Bietau said. "But for us to take advantage, we have to have a great effort throughout the lineup, and I didn't feel like we got that."

Riniker maintained her undefeated mark in the Big Eight in No. 1 singles. Riniker recorded her fourth win in a row against Kaplan

7-6 (7-3), 6-4.
No. 5 singles player Wilcox battled past Marshall for her second conference win in a row 6-3, 4-6, Gover lifted her season record to 10-6 by winning her third in the last four outings. Gover moved to 2-1 in the conference by beating Schaumberg 6-2, 7-5.

"Neili won her match on sheer
"Bietau" desire, guts and fighting," Bietau said. "Angie won by maintaining her composure, and that's a real step for her.

The loss dropped the Wildcats' dual mark to 4-16 on the spring season. The squad returns to the road later this week, traveling to Iowa State Sunday and to Nebraska Monday.

A handful of dirt tossed to the ground, a skinned knee from a dive or slide, these are joys, not sorrows. The pain one feels as a youngster is fleeting — as fleeting as each season.

But the game remains. It remains for young adults, locked in battle for a spot amongst the elite. The team, the team, the team. Several battle for the chance to be a part of it, few are given that blessing. But the game remains.

For those who pull on a uniform and take several careful steps across the white lines and onto the plush playing fields, serenity sets in.

But it, to be sure, is fleeting. Fame can be fleeting, too. A hero one moment, a goat the next. Laughter one second, tears a time later. Mind racing, heart sinking.

If there's any real running being done here, it's of the emotional gamut.

New-look Royals set for opening tilt

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Some of the most illustrious names in club history will be missing when the Kansas City Royals meet the Cleveland Indians in Monday's season opener, and not just Bo Jackson.

Gone are Frank White, a 17-year fixture at second base and eight-time Gold Glove winner, and center fielder Willie Wilson, a former American League batting champion and offensive sparkplug on two AL pennant winners.

White retired and Wilson was allowed to drift into free agency, where he signed with Oakland. But when Bret Saberhagen delivers that first 1991 pitch at 1:35 p.m. CDT to Cleveland's Alex Cole, the Royals will be counting more new faces than

On the bench awaiting his first start will be Mike Boddicker, the Royals' other major free agent signing who was 17-8 with a 3.38 earned run average for Boston last year and is 5-1 lifetime in Royals Stadium.

And high in the executive suite of Royals Stadium will be the oldest and probably most pressure-ridden rookie of them all - Herk Robinson. It's Robinson's 22nd season opener as a Royals' front office executive, but his first as general manager.

"I think in a way this will be a special opening day for me, sure," Robinson said. Robinson took over when John Schuerholz went to the Batting fifth as designated hitter Atlanta Braves. Robinson, 50, had Lee Rodriguez and Chris Wyrich hit home runs for the Tigers and Scott Stroth hit one for the Wildcats.

Stroth was 5-for-5 and drove in three runs. Stroth also came up just a triple away from hitting for the cycle. Tim Churchman pitched six innings and allowed four runs for K-State, and reliever Brett Bock was the winning pitcher. Brian Conaty took the loss for Missouri.

The Tigers scored nine runs in the bottom of the first and Chuck Fletcher held the Wildcats to five runs in six innings as Missouri won the first game.

In the opener, K-State committed six errors and allowed nine unearned runs. The Wildcats did manage to score six runs in the last four stanzas. For the game, the Wildcats outhit the Tigers 14-12.

After the Saturday losses, Clark sounded off on his team, citing the poor performance as of late.

"We're just not playing well," Clark said. "We needed to put some different kids in there. Some of the ones now just aren't doing the job. They're not ready to play. I don't have the answers. I just needed to find the right combination that will get us back to Oklahoma City."

The K-State men's soccer club suffered a 3-1 setback Sunday afternoon at Frank Anneberg Park at the hands of the Cloud County Community College Thunderbirds.

The lone goal for the 'Cats was scored by Dave Nicodemus. Jason Bergman, soccer club president, said he felt the team had a chance to win but poor play got in the way.

"We just didn't play all that well," Bergman said. "We had a few offsides, and we had a few position changes, and that had a lot to do with that."

Rowing team brings home wins

The K-State rowing team took part in the State Rowing Championships over the weekend in Wichita and came home with a pair of first-place finishes, five second-place finishes and three third-place finishes.

Capturing the first-place finishes were the Men's Junior Varsity Eight in a time of 4:09 and the Men's Open Pair in a Finishing second were the Men's Lightweight Four in a time of 4:54; the Men's Varsity Four in 4:33; Women's Varsity Four in 5:43; the Women's Lightweight Eight in 5:27; and the Women's Varsity Eight in 4:58.

Finishing third were the Women's Novice Eight in 5:37; Women's Novice Four in 4:51; and Men's Varsity Eight in 4:13. Providing a fourth-place finish for the K-State rowing team was the Men's Novice Eight.

Rugby club takes title

The K-State rugby club received the perfect tuneup for this coming weekend's Collegiate Westerns in Lawrence by winning the team title at the Omaha (Neb.) Rugby Festival. In the first game against the Lincoln City Rugby Club, Steve Robke scored two trys and Ty Gray kicked six conversions en route to a 35-0 win for K-State.

Others scoring trys in the first game were Isaac Madison, Tim Dugan, Steve Jackman and Tim Cavanaugh.

In the second game against the host team, the Omaha Goats, Madison, Robke and Brad Steinlage scored trys and Gray converted one more conversion in the 14-0 win.

In the championship game, Robke scored the winning on a pushover try with 45 seconds left in regulation to lift K-State to a 16-12 win over the Omaha Rugby Club. Gray converted on two penalty kicks, a try and one conversion.

K-State lifted its record to 5-2.

The men's sprint medley relay team brought home the gold from the Texas Relays in Austin this weekend.

Foursome wins

Team members Michael Simms, Ernest Greene, Tyrone Watkins and Marcus Wright combined to win with a time of 3:16.42.

The relay consists of legs of 200-meters, 200-meters, 400-meters and the anchor leg of 800-meters.

"I thought we were capable of winning, but down here that also takes a very good effort, no matter what the event is," Coach John Capriotti said. "When they got to the finals (on Friday), I knew they would have a chance to win if they ran well."

Capriotti said he was pleased with the performances of both the men's and women's relay teams during the

"I was very happy with the relays," he said. "We qualified four out of five teams for the finals."

The women's sprint medley relay team of Verida Walter, Latricia Joyner, Markeya Jones and Nicole Green brought home the bronze with a time of 1:41.6.

In addition, the same unit placed sixth in the 4x100-meter relay with a time of 45.83.

Two seventh-place finishes were also recorded by the men's relay teams.

The distance medley team of Jason Goertzen, Corey King, Randy Helling and David Warders turned in a time of 9:53.73, and Todd Trask, Phil Byrne, Goertzen and Warders ran 15:29.33 in the 4x1,500-meter relay. Long jumper Charles Armstead also made strides in qualifying for the NCAA Outdoor Championships by surpassing the provisional qualifying mark in the long jump. His leap of 25-104 gave him second place in the competition. Other men placing for the Wildcats were Jon Rorabaugh, fifth in the javelin (215-7) and Thomas Ran-dolph, sixth in the 100-meter dash (10.62).

The women also enjoyed some strong individual performances.

All-Americans Connie Teaberry and Angie Miller brought home the hardware in two of the weekend's Teaberry took second in the high jump competition with a leap of 6-0 and Miller placed third in the discus at 162-4.

Teaberry tied the winning height, but was awarded the silver due to more missed attempts, Capriotti said. Walter also added an eighth-place finish in the hurdles (14.37) and

Paulette Staats placed seventh in the 1,500-meter run in 4:29.27 Field event athletes Debbie Schmidt and Shanele Stires also placed for the Wildcat women. Schmidt was fifth in the javelin with a personal record throw of 215-7, and Stires was seventh in the shot put with a heave of 47-1. Two Wildcat freshman triple jumpers, Lisa Fager (39-111/2) and Dee Dee Tribue (38-11) set personal bests during the weekend competition. Capriotti said he was pleased with the performances of his teams.

"Overall it was a good day for us," he said. "We competed well in every event."

He said it was important to keep improving as the season continues.

"We started off in the right direction," he said. "We just need to keep it going.'

Coleman's suspension latest in line of troubles at Mizzou

By the Associated Press

COLUMBIA, Mo. - Missouri basketball player Jamal Coleman has been suspended indefinitely from the Missouri basketball team for his involvement in an alleged refund scam at a university bookstore, Tigers coach Norm Stewart said.

Coleman and two other students. both employees of the bookstore, were arrested Friday and held in the Boone County jail. Bail was set at $5,000 each for Coleman and Traynette Jenkins and $10,000 for Terri Cain, who also was charged with one count of forgery

Coleman, who was released from jail Saturday after posting $500 bond, was booked on one charge of felony theft. His arraignment will be at 1:30 p.m. today

"Obviously, there isn't much more we can do at this moment until we learn more about the situation," Stewart said. "But this is very disturbing. In 24 years here, this is the first time we've had something like

"It's very difficult. Jamal had been doing so well for us during the stretch of the season, and I really thought he had gotten on the right track. I just don't understand."

Coleman allegedly was involved in a refund scam, in which refund slips were improperly used to collect at least $2,000 in cash.

The incident is Coleman's third run-in with police in the last two Coleman averaged 10.8 points and 6.5 rebounds a game last season.

Golfers travel to Wichita

ERIC BROWN Sports Reporter

After last weekend's unexpected fourth-place performance at the Vanderbilt-Durango Boot Music City Intercollegiate tournament, it would seem that K-State's men's golf team has actually arrived as a competitive program.

Today and Tuesday, the Wildcats will get a chance to prove their strong showing in Nashville, Tenn., was no fluke.

Yet, as they head to Wichita for the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic, the team's attitude isn't one of doubts and hopes of remaining at their newly-acclaimed level. Instead, it possesses the watery mouth of being close enough to taste the steak of victory, only to have a mere five strokes leaving K-State to gnaw on the leftover scraps.

"We are looking forward to this tournament after coming so close to winning last weekend," said coach Russ Bunker. "Terradyne is a great course to play, and I feel we'll surprise some people."

The meet will include 15 teams, including favorites Baylor, who edged the Wildcats by one stroke last weekend, Iowa State and host Wichita State. The Big Eight conference will also be represented by Nebraska.

K-State will send to battle the same five that made the trip to Vanderbilt successful. The roster includes sophomore Jim Brenneman, who led the team last weekend with below par rounds each time out, junior Bill Graham, sophomore Richard Laing, freshman Will Seibert and junior Brett Vuillemin.

"These kids have earned the chance to play in the Shocker Classic," said Bunker. "I couldn't be more proud of their performance in Nashville."

The meet begins Monday with 36 holes and will be concluded Tuesday with the final 18 holes.

This will be the final tuneup for the young Wildcats before they play in the Big Eight Championships in Kansas City April 29-30.

The Royals are coming off their lowest finish in their 22-year history sixth place in a year when many considered them a good bet to unseat Oakland in the West. But team history indicates an undeniable tendency to follow bad years with handsome rebounds.

"Last year was just not a normal year," said John Wathan, beginning his fourth full season as manager. "We used 23 pitchers, because of injuries. You certainly don't expect that to happen. It was a very unusual year.'

Another reason for hope is Saberhagen's oddball career. It's one of the most fully documented quirks of any active player. But the willowy righthander in even-numbered years is 36-48. In odd-numbered years he has a 61-22 record and two Cy Young Awards. In 1990 he was 5-9,

"I feel like I'm ready to bounce back and have a good year," he said. "Last year I just never could find my curve, or get any breaking pitch consistently over the plate.

Clemens: here; umpires: gone

By the Associated Press

Well, well. Looks like Roger Clemens is going to have the last laugh, after all. Seems that Toronto Blue Jays president Paul Beeston was pretty sure his team wouldn't be seeing Clemens when the Boston Red Sox opened the season Monday at the SkyDome.

So sure he even teased Clemens' agents, whom he knows and likes, in a telephone call to the American League office on the day Clemens appealed his five-game suspension.

But, hee haw, the joke is on the Jays - and the umpires, too. Because when AL president Bobby Brown upheld Clemens' suspension and $10,000 fine, he took his case to commissioner Fay Vincent. So the penalties will not take effect until a hearing later this month, making Clemens eligible to pitch and making for a lot of irony.

While Clemens will be on the field for the opener, the umpires will not be. It was Clemens' cat fight with Terry Cooney in the playoffs that led to all the trouble, and baseball backed the umpires. That is, until it got time to talk about a new contract.

So while Clemens got a deal worth $211/2 million, baseball and its 60 umpires argued about a $750,000 difference. Faced with the prospect of a lockout Saturday, the umpires went on strike and it seemed certain

... he can lose just as easily as win. This guy doesn't walk on water.

Clemens and the rest of the major league season would start with amateur umps.

"It's good to have your ace start the season," Boston catcher Tony Pena said. "We weren't counting on him, but now that we've got him, it's a positive thing. Everybody has a lot of confidence in him. Clemens was 3-0 with a 1.17 ERA against Toronto last season and is 9-4 lifetime vs. the Blue Jays. In his appeal to Brown, Clemens argued that even if he is going to be suspended for his antics in last year's playoffs, he shouldn't skip a start against Toronto, Boston's chief rival in the AL East last year. "Of course, it's good to have him.

But he can lose just as easily as win,' Boston's Wade Boggs said. "This guy doesn't walk on water." Clemens threw the first pitch of the 1990 season, and wound up winning against Detroit that day. He finished the season 21-6 and led the majors with a 1.93 ERA. This year's first pitch will be thrown Monday afternoon at Tiger Stadium by Frank Tanana when Detroit faces Tim Leary and the New York Yankees.

There are five games in the AL and three in the National League, including World Series champion Cincinnati at home against Houston, All other teams begin the season Tuesday.

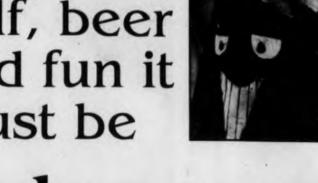

Dave Stieb, who pitched one of the record nine no-hitters last year, will start for Toronto against Boston. Nolan Ryan and Terry Mulholland, who took part in the no-hit parade, will also pitch Monday.

If there is golf, beer and fun it must be

Jim Gordon, senior in architecture, waits for the beginning of play Saturday morning at the golf

After playing nine holes and drinking beer during the day at Cedar Hills Golf Course, Dan Simon, Lawrence, took a break on the back of a car before the night's festivities.

Don Smith, St. Louis, hits an approach shot on the third hole. Players had to carry their own beer across the golf course. Many, like Smith, traveled a long distance to come to the event.

anhattan may notice a beer shortage in the next couple of weeks after the copious consumption of Coors at this year's Jalapeno Fest.

The event, in just its third year, attracted more than 300 people, and all were eager to engage in battles of bachanalia and socializing.

The objective of those who attended was to have fun with friends, eat numerous jalapenos and then quench the fire with a few swallows of cold beer.

The day began at 9 a.m. Saturday with cocktails and breakfast.

Soon the golf tournament started - rules dictated that each participant had to drink at least one beer per hole. The rules committee explained this would count advantageously towards one's score, but could also affect play.

Some contestants weren't able to drink the minimum requirement, but others topped out at 15 beers in the competition.

The caravan of golfers and spectators left for the beautiful links of Cedar Hills Golf Course at 10 a.m.

That was the last thing some of the golfers remembered. "It was the most fun round of golf I've ever played and don't remember," said Bob Mullen, junior in chemical engineering. And some of the golfers didn't get their full day in the sun. "We had 71 golfers, and I think only about half of them finished," said Jim Roth, senior in political science. "I thought the golfing was wonderful, but it was hard to keep up with the beer-a-hole rule. I only played six holes," said Brad Smith, a University of Kansas student. One group had few problems matching the

This, combined with the team's 4-over-par score for the tournament, easily gave them the championship.

After a buffet lunch came the Beer Olympics. Events included a straw race in which the alcohol athletes had to consume a full beer through a straw, and another rule stipulated the cup could not be lifted off the ground. More than 30 people tried their luck in this event.

The most dangerous event proved to be the bat

Participants had to slam a beer, spin around in a circle five times with their foreheads against the tip of a baseball bat — and then run back to their team to tag the next member.

Several people fell laughing to the ground, and skinned knees were bountiful

"I took a nose-dive. I took the rest of my team out when I ran into them - we lost by the way," said Ed Downey, junior in construction science.

After the Olympics, general socializing and partying lasted until about 12:30 a.m., when the 12th and final keg was emptied.

Even though more than 400 jalapeno peppers were eaten, no jalapeno king or queen was announced.

"With the amount of people we had, it was impossible to keep track. We had one claim of about 40 or so, but we didn't have an official winner," Roth said.

Another Jalapeno Fest has come and gone. Everyone has a year to recover and wait for another fun-filled jalapeno weekend followed by a pain-filled Sunday morning.

Not only was Saturday an Open House for K-State, Saturday was a closing house for the Hollis House on the northeastern edge of the main campus.

The KSU Foundation and the KSU Alumni Association moved out of Hollis House last weekend and set up shop in the former Farm Bureau Insurance Building on Anderson Avenue.

The KSU Foundation obtained the property from Farm Bureau through a purchase-gift agreement.

The $4.7 million property, now called the KSU Foundation Center was bought for $1.5 million and the remainder was considered a gift to the University, said Rusty Andrews, Foundation Director of An-

The Foundation has given part of the western tower of the structure to the Alumni Association and is using the rest itself.

The rest of the building may be occupied in the future by other K-State entities, such as the library, if the proper funding can be found to maintain the facilities.

The first option is for the University to occupy the remainder of the structure. They're waiting for the legislature to approve funding the utilities and maintenance," Andrews said.

The first and second floors are virtually vacant for the time being, awaiting new tenants or expansion.

Capping off the structure on the fifth and sixth floors is the KSU Foundation. The Foundation, due to the Essential Edge Campaign, outgrew it's facilities at Hollis House in mid-1988 and rented space in the First Bank Center at Denison and Claflin.

Now that adequate space is available for the entire organization, they have vacated the rented office space and relocated to the fifth and sixth floors of the building.

For all parties making the move across town, their work environment has improved ten-fold, but the desire to be close to campus exists.

"We're going to miss being on campus, with all the activities we're involved in," Renz said.

Indian musicians bring Carmatic music to K-State

the music promises to be good.

The men who will be singing, playing the violin and a drum, called a mridangam, are among the best Carmatic musicians in India. Some of the pieces will be vocal and accompanied by the violin and drum. Many solo pieces will be played on the mridangam, Puliyur said. Kuppusamy Ravindran, graduate in math, said K-State was very lucky to have the musicians make a stop in Manhattan during their U.S. tour. Ravindran said the music was very moving at times and makes the audience either sorrowful or happy. The rhythm of the music begins slowly and continues to build throughout the concert, Ravindran said. It is the type of music that is experienced inwardly, he said.

"The whole mode of Carmatic music has to be experienced. There's a specific combination of musical notes," he said.

Kuppusamy said he enjoys the music because of its energy and "I just like to listen and appreciate," he said.

Puliyur said the three-hour concert is going to be enjoyble.

"It's going to be a really great experience and a lot of fun. These musicians are top Carmatic musicians," he said.

The free concert is sponsored by the International Coordinating Council and is open to everyone.

World perspective necessary for future, Marangu says

DAVID PRITCHARD

National boundaries are breaking down, and the world must learn to understand and respect other cultures to co-exist successfully, said Dr. Leah Marangu, visiting professional to the College of Human Ecology.

Marangu spent several weeks on K-State campus as part of her tour of nine different land grant universities giving lectures, seminars and working with curriculum planners on internationalizing human ecology

'There's a lot to think about with how the international markets affect each other," she said.

"Each ingredient of this mixture has its own input, and we must respect the different ingredients as they enter into this mix," she said.

Marangu said there is a lot being done to understand global issues and has been impressed with the effort she has seen at the universities she has visited.

A new age of international rela- of Kenya, Moxley said.

tions is coming about as first world countries are now asking for help from developing countries, she said.

"Developing countries still have a lot to offer, and it's important that we work as partners without one country being the final authority," she said. Marangu came to the United States in 1989 as a Fulbright scholar from Kenyatta University in Kenya, where she was a professor of home economics. She was the first woman in Kenya to become a full professor.

"She's a very prominent educator in Kenya," said Virginia Moxley, associate dean of human ecology.

"She's quite familiar with U.S. institutions and education in the United States. She's probably the finest consultant we could have brought to K-State in the field of internationalizing human ecology," Moxley said.

The College of Human Ecology is currently working on a program of rural development in Paraguay that's very similar in intent to a program Marangu instituted in her homeland

'Defending Your Life' not overbearing, heavy in investigating question of life after death

According to "Flatliners," all the bad things you've done in the past come back to haunt you. According to "Ghost," they don't take you unless you feel completely good about yourself. In "Defending Your Life," however, when you die, you go on

That's the basis for this new comedy written and directed by Albert

Advertising agent Daniel Miller, played by Brooks, buys himself a new BMW on his birthday. While enjoying his new Barbara Streisand CD in the car, he runs head-on into a bus. When he awakens, he finds himself being taken in a wheelchair towards a tram filled with other passengers in a deadened trance.

Soon Daniel discovers he is not in heaven or hell. Judgment City is his new home for the next four days. He can eat all the food he wants and never gain weight. He can go horseback riding and miniature golfing. People are always there to tell you where to go and what to do. Daniel gets a call from his lawyer, Bob Diamond (Rip Torn), and soon finds out his entire life will be up for examination. Bob explains that Earthlings only use 3 percent of their brains, as opposed to more advanced beings in the Universe.

from Brooks. But it's also something to which everybody can relate. The idea of having someone review your life like a movie and judge whether it was successful or not is so absurd that it's hilarious.

In some ways, Brooks' style of humor can be compared to Woody Allen. He focuses on insecurities. Being successful, according to the judges, seems to have more to do with confronting your fears than overall pleasure. He also invokes the same kind of genuine warmth that many of Allen's films do.

The romance between Daniel and Julia is truly effortless. She talks about how she's had to work so hard for everything in her lifetime, and how their relationship just flows naturally. But it's also doomed from the beginning. They both know they're only in Judgment City for a short time, and they won't end up in the same place afterward.

Some of the funniest scenes in 'Defending Your Life" come from the attitudes of the smarter people.

Bob smirks and chuckles when he talks about the "little brains." He uses 48 percent of his brain and one day can't make it to the trial because he was "trapped in the inner circle of thought.

"Defending Your Life" has several things to say without indicting anyone.

The other part of "Defending You Life" that is so much fun is watching the possibilities of life after death unfold. Brooks has a keen comic mind, and everything, no matter how farout it is, seems to make perfect sense in Judgment City.

Students frustrated in lobbying attempt

Potentially devastating proposals debated by representatives of University have to cut somewhere," Montgomery said. "We would all like to fund

Four students traveled to the Statehouse Friday in a frustrating attempt to lobby for K-State funding and get answers to recent cuts.

Friday afternoon on the third floor of the Statehouse, a student government lobby team member, Tim Beymer, senior in radio and television, met Jake Reisinger, senior in accounting; Jim Persinger, sophomore in political science; and Kevin Graham, junior in political science, who had left earlier in the morning to lobby. They had been talking to legislators for more than three hours.

The effort gained importance Thursday after the Senate Ways and Means committee cut the K-State budget $19 million in part of the proposed budget package for the Kansas Board of Regents.

President John Wefald said Friday morning that if the recommendations year 1992, they will have a devastating effect on the K-State and the regents' institutions.

Wefald said enrollment at K-State has increased by 4,000 since 1986. "If K-State doesn't get the enrollment adjustment, we will be educating 3,000 students with no state appropriations," Wefald said.

He said the budget cuts will also have a terrible effect on retaining or attracting quality instructors because the salaries paid to faculty aren't competitive with peer institutions. 'We are asking the faculty to literally do the impossible," Wefald said. "The faculty has been outstanding. They have added classes and sections, but we can only ask them to do so much. This is very counterproductive in regards to our goals of academic excellence.

"This isn't over yet, our local legislators are doing a first-rate job of representing K-State and the regents become the final budget for fiscal institutions," he said. "The House is on record for supporting the regents, and hopefully, they can get the Senate to support us as well."

Jake Reisinger, K-State Associated Students of Kansas campus director, said the lobbyists grabbed agendas to find out what was being discussed. They were only able to have a few words with Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, as she was hurrying to a committee meeting.

Reisinger said the Senate was busy Friday, heading into session and committee meetings on a tight schedule. He felt talking to senators would be difficult.

"I am weary over the lengthy deliberation over higher education funding. There are two basic opinions floating around the Capitol," he said. "Those who feel additional cuts need to be made to balance the budget, and there are some who felt a tax increase is likely to come up. It is just a waiting game to see who brings Reisinger said he had been trying to find someone to explain the cuts the Senate Ways and Means committee approved. He said members of the committee and its chairman Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, still hadn't explained how the cuts had been devised.

All four members of the group expressed concern about the future of higher education in Kansas.

"How do they see us?" Graham said. "Are they going to see us as an investment in our future? This is a legitimate concern for our state."

Graham and Persinger left the Statehouse to take tests while Reisinger and Beymer remained to try and find someone to answer their questions. They met with success on the fifth floor in the Kansas Legislative research department.

Alan Conroy, principal fiscal analyst, handed Reisinger a six-page document explaining the justification of the budget cuts.

"It was just a proportional cut," Conroy said. "We aren't going to do the tuition increase."

Reisinger said Conroy's explaination helped answer his questions, but added the cuts would still hurt K-ery said. "We would all like to fund all of the budget, but revenue is short. There doesn't seem to be any measures for additional revenue, so we may have to cut across the board."

Reisinger was able to page Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, out of a Legislative session.

Glasscock said that if an income tax increase isn't passed, they will have to structure something to fund K-12, higher education and other

"We will selectively put money back into the budget in ways that make sense and still don't bankrupt the state," Glasscock said. "Education needs to be on the top of the list, but we must also pay our bills."

Glasscock said he would continue fighting for higher education. 'We can't leave them bloodied on

Employment workshops aid international students

Centers work together to provide training information

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter

Many international students graduating in May want to extend their stay in the United States for practical training. In order to do so, they must be prepared to meet deadlines and to spend a couple of hours fine-tuning their resumes.

Two employment workshops April 4 and 5 in the International Student Center Foreign Student Office with the Career and Placement Center informed about 50 students of important regulations on practical training, explained difficult questions in the application forms and how to develop a strong personal resume.

As soon as the coursework required for the degree is completed, every student holding an F-1 visa who has been in a study program other than language study for more than nine months is eligible for up to 12 months of practical training, said Larry Thorpe, assistant foreign student adviser.

Thorpe said people who apply for practical training do not necessarily have to have a job offer.

But, except for practical training during the summer vacation, regulations require students to be enrolled, he said.

After graduation, master's students can stay six months for practical training in the United States. Doctoral students can stay another year, $70 April 11, he said.

in two periods of six months.

Further, both master's and doctoral students have 60 days after completing the practical training the standard grace period - to leave the country, Thorpe said.

The students have to pay attention to a lot of important dates, he said. First, it is important for students to know they cannot apply for practical training sooner than 60 days before and no later than 30 days after graduation, Thorpe said. He said the decisive date is the completion date. However, this date is determined by the students and flexible. It can, for instance, be the day of defense or the day of the graduation ceremony. Thorpe said for doctoral students, the first period of practical training expires after six months.

Everyone who wants to stay for the whole year needs to get another application form for the second period from the International Student Center. This form has to be submitted within 30 days of working on the job to the Immigration Office, which has the jurisdiction over the place of employment.

The employer needs to send a letter stating beginning and ending of the employment and a description of

The application for the second period of practical training also requires a fee, which will increase from $35 to

"A resume is not a biography but a prospectus for the future," said Mar-cia Schuley, assistant director of the Career and Placement Center.

Schuley said a resume is a written communication that clearly demonstrates a student's ability to produce results in an area of concern to selected employers. It should motivate employers to meet the students.

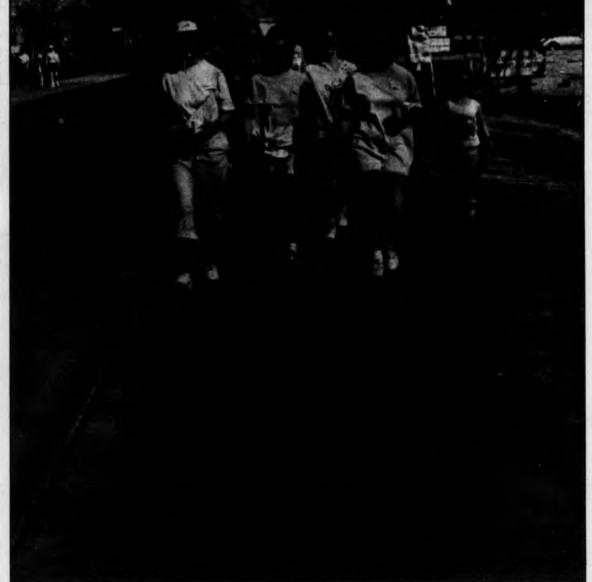

Students applying for practical training should think of what the employer needs and link this with their own skills.

She said the most important thing is to know the readers and identify what would catch their attention and motivate them to meet the students.

Schuley said a resume should be correct, accurate, clean, crisp and bright. It should not only list projects but clearly describe a student's achievement in them.

Salil Jha, graduate student in chemistry from India, said the workshop was very useful and informative for

"I'm very much interested in getting a good job after graduation, because here are more facilities than in India. This workshop gives me some idea how to get about," Jha said.

Liberty Bell ringing celebrates war's end

By the Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA - Mayor W. Wilson Goode and retired Lt. Gen. Thomas Kelly tapped the Liberty Bell Sunday in an internationally broadcast ceremony to celebrate the end of the Persian Gulf War.

"You, America, own an army of the people. And you, America, own the best army in the world,"

About 500 people crowded the sunny courtyard in front of Independence Hall for the half-hour ceremony, which happened a day after Iraq reluctantly accepted United Nations conditions for ending the war over Kuwait.

President Bush declared a ease-fire Feb. 28, and Friday proclaimed this weekend "National Days of Thanksgiving" for the liberation of Kuwait.

The bell ringing was broadcast internationally by Armed Forces Radio to service members around the world. It also was carried nationally by ABC Radio and NBC

"It was victory of freedom and liberty," said Kelly, an Army general who recently retired as the Pentagon's director for Operations of the Joint Staff.

Navy Lt. Jeffrey Zaun sent a taped message from Cherry Hill, N.J., where he was honored Sunday along with 51 other area residents who served in Operation Desert Storm. Zaun, 28, whose aircraft was shot down Jan. 17 during the first 36 hours of the war, was held by Iraqis until the end of the fighting.

In his taped message, Zaun said the Liberty Bell once rang to proclaim freedom in this country but that it rings now to proclaim the march of liberty throughout the

The third annual Hispanic Awareness Month at K-State began Sunday and will continue through April 27.

The month will feature many different activities and speakers encompassing various cultural aspects of hispanics.

The featured speaker for the month is Cesar Chavez, founder of United Farm Workers. He is an activist against the use of pesticides and the unsafe working conditions of migrant farmworkers in the grape industry.

"He's considered to be the Gandhi of our times," said Arleen Baiges, member of the Hispanic American Leadership Organization.

Baiges said Chavez promotes protesting in a non-violent manner, such as fasting. She had the opportunity to hear him speak when HALO went to Chicago last year.

"I think it's great to hear about issues from people with such great influence and for other people to become aware of them," said Sabrina Avila, freshman in pre-occupational therapy and HALO member.

Perez is also organizing a soccer tournament, which is tentatively scheduled for April 21 in Memorial Stadium.

"La Casa de Bernarda Alba" will be performed at 8 p.m. April 16 in McCain Auditorium by Repertorio Espanol, a theatrical company based in New York.

"This is a classic from Spain, and I had to read this in high school. Students in the United States read Shakespeare," Baiges said. "In Puerto Rico, we read this and Don Quixote.

The play will be performed entirely in Spanish with a synopsis provided in English. This is the first time for this company to perform in

Soldier given surprise first class trip home after 5 months in Middle East

DAVID FRESE

Staff Reporter

A couple of weeks ago Spc. Peter Medina of Fort Kiley's 82nd Medical Detachment walked up to the ticket counter at an airport in Georgia wearing his desert camouflage. "Just got back, huh?" the man at the counter asked him. "Yep," Medina said. "I'm going home."

"Well, I'll tell you what," the ticket-man said. "Here's first class on me.' "Excuse me?" Medina said.

'You're one of the best, and you're flying first class," he said.

"It was incredible," Medina said, back at home in Fort Riley. "I wish the rest of the unit knew what was waiting here for them when they get back."

But most of the rest of Medina's unit is still in Saudi Arabia awaiting word of when they, too, will come home.

Medina came home last week on what could almost be called a fluke, five days after he called his wife from Saudi and told her he wasn't going to be back until the middle of

He was sitting around in his desert tent playing cards with his superiors when one of the pilots ran through the camp yelling his

I thought 'Oh no. What did I do now? Medina said. "He said, 'You need to pack, you're leaving.' He didn't say home or nothin'. He said I was just going, so I figured was going back up to the front again."

But that wasn't the case. The pilot told Medina he had been selected to represent his unit in a parade back in Washington D.C. But somewhere along the line the parade plans

"We got to Al-Khabar, and they told us the parade had cancelled," Medina said. "We thought we'd just go back to Saudi, but they told us to continue on home. That was the end of Medina's five-month journey through a four-day land war. A war in which Medina provided medical care for three casualties of war, rode with the French Special Forces and landed in a mine field. Medina said the war started out in a boring fashion. He lived in tents, wondered if war would come and, if war did come, how long it would last. But he mainly just waited for what was to come.

But once the ground war started Medina said his unit mobilized from the initial outpost in Dharhan, Saudi Arabia on into Iraq with the 82nd Airborne

"The first day was very, very quiet - zero, nothing, no missions - which was very good," Medina said. "That meant everything was going well."

Day two was not quite so uneventful as the unit received its first mission, to retrieve a soldier who had sat on a hand grenade. And later that evening, Medina's unit moved to a different location and hooked up with a French unit that had a puppy named "Saddam." It was the unit's mascot, Medina said. "We got a second patient that day who broke his pelvis falling off a truck," Medina said. "But our bird had a bad vibration so we had to take a precautionary landing, and we called in another unit, which transported the patient while we babysat the aircraft."

The unit fixed the helicopter and went back to camp, where Medina was assigned to fly with the French. As soon as he set up, the French unit received a mission to pick up a French casuality.

"We flew out there, landed and the crewmembers wouldn't let me out of the aircraft," he said. "They said, 'Sit! Sit! Sit!' So I'm sitting there thinking, 'The French do this a little differently.

But once Medina got back to a battalion aid-station a French doctor who spoke pretty good English explained.

"The doctor said, 'You landed in a minefield," Medina said. "I guess that's a good reason not to get out of the aircraft."

After that mission he was reassigned to his unit. The next morning the 101st Airborne drove by and told Medina's unit there was a cease-fire.

"That was about it for the four-day war," Medina said. "But after having those precautionary landings and landing in a mine field and thinking 'My number's coming. It's getting close' I don't want to have those four days again."

Medina said the war went so well that the military kept moving up its objectives. For instance, they took positions in five hours that they had planned to take in 18.

Medina saw tanks burnt up alongside the road, bathroom-sized-bunkers Iraqis had hastily built and left behind and, if he looked far enough to the east, he could see a horizon blackened by the smoke of 500 oil fires.

'We were a good 100-150 miles away, and it was just dark," Medina said. "We had a lot of thunderstorms and they said that the rain would mix with all that smoke, and it would be black rain.'

The Iraqis Medina saw were thin, very thin, Medina said. And small, too.

were surrendering to anything that moved," he said. "In fact, I heard a story about a HUM-V that was stuck in the sand, and two Iraqi tanks drove by and they pulled those guys out of the sand and then surrendered to them. It was something else."

Then he received the parade announcement, and the subsequent cancellation. He was flown to New York, then to Georgia and on to Kansas City, where he was picked up by fellow 82nd medic from Fort Riley.

As he walked through Kansas City, people walked up to him and shook his hand and hugged him and kissed him. Medina was surprised at that, he said. Many of the soldiers don't know what's waiting for them back here in the states.

Several wives of the unit have a sign on I-70 that says "Welcome back 82nd Medical Detachment.

"That's good," he said. "I think they'll like that, but it won't ever be over until everybody's back home."

ken among them was Sam Timathwes, a 30-year-old Assyrian Christian from Kirkuk, the key oil town in northern Iraq that the Kurds held briefly before government forces forced the rebels out. "Our children are suffering from hunger and starvation," he told Baker. "You've got to do something to help us." "We know that," Baker replied. It is nearly impossible to get an accurate count of the number of people who have taken refuge in Turkey and those struggling to get here. Turkish military briefers told Baker that 165,000 people were clustered in the area, and that within a week their number would rise to 200,000, then double shortly afterward. One proposal under consideration is Turkish President Turgut Ozal's suggestion that the United Nations create a sanctuary in northern Iraq for the Kurds, by force if necessary. In the last few days, $67 million was pledged to help the refugees by several nations, including the United Baker, who stayed seven minutes, States, which will release up to $10 gathered a crowd. The most outspo- million from an emergency fund.

NICOSIA, Cyprus - Iraqi helicopter gunships have been firing on Kurdish refugees as they try to flee, a Kurdish rebel group said Monday, and a whole village had been wiped out by Iraqi forces, one guerilla leader said.

Foreign governments and aid groups have mounted a huge relief operation to save the hundreds of thousands of refugees, many of whom are sick, hungry and suffering from exposure in the cold of the mountainous border region.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III, who toured refugee camps near the Iraqi border Monday, praised relief efforts but said hope must be given to the people for a return to

In northern Iraq, Kurdish rebel leader Masoud Barzani charged that Iraqi troops had rampaged through Kara Henjir, a village near the northern oil center of Kirkuk, killing the entire population of 2,000 to 3,000

The report could not be confirmed independently.

Thousands of Kurds, fearful of government reprisals, were joining in the flight even from traditional rebel strongholds, said Associated Press reporter Alex Efty. In Rawandiz, Efty said, terrified residents fled in the middle of the night toward the Iranian border, spurred by reports that Iraqi forces were pushing northward. Both Iran and Turkey say they cannot handle the huge influx of refugees, who fled their homeland after failed rebellions by Kurds and Shiite Muslims against President Saddam Hussein's government. Both continued to allow the Kurds to camp inside their borders.

Iraq ridiculed the refugee relief effort for the second day in a row. The official Iraqi news agency said the Baghdad government had sent a letter to the United Nations, complaining the aid should have been distributed through Iraqi channels.

Although it is spearheading efforts to aid the refugees, the United States has said it will not interfere in Iraq's civil war, despite rebel leaders' appeals for help.

President Bush expressed hopes that Iraq's acceptance of U.N. terms for a permanent cease-fire would have a calming effect inside of Iraq. But he also said the refugees' plight has people so outraged there may be ways to bring pressure Rebels and refugees say hundreds of Kurds have died of hunger, exposure and wounds as they try to escape.

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) - Oddsmakers favor Hot to Trot II, the son of Available and Too Hot To Trot, but that could change if Mold Biscuit or Base Board work the stiffness out of their legs.

They're entrants in the Giganteus Stakes at Purdue University's Cockroach Downs. Six-legged critters will compete Tuesday on a track at Entomology Hall as part of Bug Bowl 1991.

F. Thomas Turpin, professor of entomology, designed the class project to keep his students interested.

The Giganteus Stakes will be two furloops or less.

A furloop is a meter or more long. The name evolved from furlong, the eighth-mile distance used in horse racing.

"We decided we needed a similar term to describe our distance," Turpin said. "We are traditionalists. We wanted to keep close to what racing folks would appreciate."

Tuesday's first race will be the Hessian Breeders Cup, named for the Hessian cockroach. It will be one furloop long because Hessians are short on endurance - they are sprinters, somewhat like quarter horses, Turpin said.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) - Yellowstone National Park rangers fatally shot three bison Monday for disease research before a judge temporarily blocked them from killing 22 others.

The hunt was halted by U.S. District Judge George Revercomb in Washington, who issued a week-long temporary restraining order pending a hearing April 15.

The kill was an attempt to determine how many Yellowstone bison are infected with the contagious disease brucellosis. The disease, which is spread by contact with body fluids, can cause domestic cattle to abort their calves.

Brucellosis also can cause incurable undulant fever in humans, especially those who work with infected animals.

The mother, Michelle Murden, and the 11-month old sister suffered smoke inhalation and were hospitalized in good condition Monday, officials said.

Junction City man sentenced

TOPEKA (AP) - A Junction City man was sentenced to a year in prison Monday for allegedly defrauding the Junction City Housing Atuhority of $33,899 between October 1984 and January

Judge Dale Saffels actually sentenced Donald Melella to oneyear sentences on each of 10 fraud counts, but ordered them served concurrently, meaning Melella will have to serve just one

Melella, 46, was ordered to turn himself in April 29 to begin the prison sentence, to follow terms of a three-year supervised release and make restitution of the $33,899 to the housing authority. Melella was executive director of the housing authority during the period that covered the fraud charges, resigning in January 1990. He was accused of filing false financial reports that allegedly concealed theft of rent money and security deposits of housing

Melella pleaded guilty Feb. 4 to one count of defrauding government programs, one count of mail fraud and eight counts of submitting false program information to the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

U.S. Attorney Lee Thompson said he believes the sentence given Melella will discourage other attempts to defraud the

Committee keeps name, picks harmony week theme from 8 choices

JIM STRUBER Consumer Reporter

The 1991 Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week Committee met Monday afternoon to discuss the theme and possible revision of the committee's

The committee quickly decided the committee name would remain the same. Most of the discussion was on the main theme, from which the activities of the week will be derived.

Eight proposals were initially brainstormed, discussed and compromised.

The committee finally decided to accept "Working as One to Overcome" as the new theme by consensus. The members of the committee were upbeat about the theme and quickly suggested programming.

Ann Wallis, sophomore in psychology and committee member, said the theme was synonymous with encouraging the many diverse groups at K-State to come together.

"I think it is succinct, it is perfect," Wallis said.

The Rev. Don Fallon, coordinator of religious activities, said the K-State committee on religion will sponsor activities to promote and emphasize interfaith awareness.

"Jewish, Christian and Islamic theologians will have a panel discussion with dialogue for greater harmony and awareness for religious life in this community," Fallon said.

Phil Anderson, instructor of speech and committee co-facilitator, said the committee will appoint members to subcommittees April 16. They will coordinate the committee's theme in the specific areas such as fund raising, activities and approval of a speaker's list.

"This week provides a unique education for the students of K-State. We have a lot of work to do," said Bill Wisdom, K-State Union administrative officer and committee member.

Group to give concert to Royals fans

SEAN MORAN

Collegian Reporter

The K-State Men's Glee Club will sing in front of its biggest crowd ever tonight when they sing the national anthem for more than 30,000 people before the Kansas City Royals-Cleveland Indians baseball game.

The glee club will also give a 10-minute concert in addition to the national anthem before the ballgame. The concert will consist of such songs as "Splish Splash," "The Auctioneer" and "Old Tom Wilson."

The anthem won't be sung live because the Royals don't allow live versions to be performed. All performances must be lip-synched, and the tapes must be approved before the performance.

The concert will be done a cappella, which presented a small problem for the group last month. The glee club had already taped its concert with piano and had sent it to the Royals for approval. They returned it, saying it had to be done without piano, so the concert had to be retaped.

Gerald Polich, director of the glee club, said he sees this concert as being good for both the group and K-

Professor works with area zoos

Carpenter cares for thousands of species of exotic animals

STACY HILBURN

Collegian Reporter

Ever since he can remember, James Carpenter, associate professor of exotic animal and wildlife medicine, has been interested in science, animals and medicine.

"I am very lucky. My position has all my interests combined," Carpenter said.

Carpenter said his job keeps him busy heading a program with both the Manhattan and Topeka zoos, caring for animals three times a week, teaching, working with students, advising the special species club and doing research.

An exotic animal is one that is not strictly domesticated - unlike dogs, cats and horses. Some animals, like ferrets, are termed exotic although they can be domesticated.

"An exotic animal clinician is the most general generalist," Carpenter said, "We work on 2,000 to 5,000 different species, while the majority of clinicians only work on six." And, he said, being the only faculty in the exotic animal field at K-State, makes his job more difficult. "There's never a dull moment,"

The animals he works with are diverse. For instance, he worked on an 800-pound bear and a 7-gram hummingbird on the same day. The majority of Carpenter's work is with exotic animals. His specialty, however, is wildlife.

He received his bachelor's in wildlife conservation and his master's in wildlife ecology. He practiced for three months until he was offered a job with the U.S. Game and Wildlife Service, where he headed an endangered species propagation program for 15 years.

"The job was so unique, I thought I'd better take it because nothing like it might ever be offered again," Carpenter said.

He also taught a course on wildlife diseases at the University of

One mechanism used to fulfill his interests was the advertised position at K-State.

"I wasn't looking for the job because I have achieved more than I ever envisioned, but I saw it as an opportunity for enhancing a program that already existed," Carpenter said.

Carpenter heads a program that provides service to the Sunset and opeka zoos.

'It's beyond providing just emergency care. There's a preventive medicine program, medical care and a learning opportunity for the students and interns.'

Mitch Finnegan, intern in exotic and wildlife medicine and surgery, said the hands-on experience with the program is a good opportunity for him since he gets to work with the animals he's interested in.

Finnegan said his main interest is also wildlife.

"The zoo animals are a captive version of wildlife animals," Finne-Finnegan also said the zoos are nice because they are smaller and this allows them to get to know the animals and their history better.

The College of Veterinary Medicine has always provided the service for the Sunset Zoo, Carpenter said. The need and recent changes for the zoo, along with Carpenter having the same interests in the quality of care, have enhanced it.

As a group, Carpenter, the interns and students visit the zoo weekly. Beginning next week, they are going to increase the number of these visits.

The Topeka Zoo project, which began in October, was primarily to be done on a trial basis. Carpenter said it is going well, although it is time-consuming. Carpenter said the experience that has affected him most while working with the zoos was the first time he anesthetized a large primate an orangutan. "It was hard to do that to a large endangered species that is so simi-lar to humans," Carpenter said.

Working with the exotic animals is an elective for veterinary medicine students. But, only about 40 percent of all the students in the college can get the hands-on experience, so many students have to be turned-away.

This limited number is a result of the need for each case to have individualized attention, Carpenter students know what options are available for working in veterinary medicine, other than just domestic 'Students are often unaware of the opportunities," he said. "The number of exotic animals as pets is growing. It is a competitive business and this area provides service not offered by many veterinarians."

"If the interest already exists in the student, I can emphasize it," Carpenter said.

Since the field is so diverse, and the hands-on experience is only for three weeks, the students can't be experts after graduation.

They can at least have the confidence and open mind to look at exotics and keep up with the research,"

Carpenter said. "That's half the Keeping up with the necessary research has its difficulties. The species vary widely and knowledge about them is incomplete.

"A lot of reading has to be done and often the type of care has to be adjusted from another species,' Carpenter said.

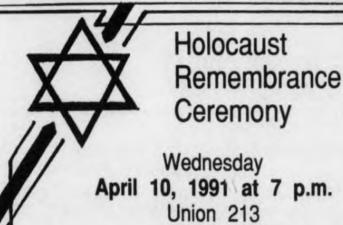

Carpenter said he is always learning. He has only been at K-State for a year, but he is comfortable with the differences from his previous work.

One of the new aspects Carpenter enjoys are the people.

"All clinicians have their specialties, but they are all very supportive of our work, and without that support we couldn't manage."

EDITORIAL

What we watch often speaks loud about us

criticize television, I'm actually an enormous fan of the small screen. It has shown me some wonderful things. Last week, for instance, I saw a story on an Atlanta lawyer, who happened to be married to a prostitute. It was heartwarming.

So to those who argue that television goes too far, I give a big boo-hiss. Television can never go too far. What would America be like today if Geraldo hadn't taken that extra step to discover the contents of Al Capone's tomb? What if Donahue would not have shown the Chippendale dancers? God forbid, what if Dan Rather had chosen to remain silent rather then closing his newscasts with the word "courage." I shudder at the possibilities.

Yet, even with these fine examples of journalistic work behind them, the TV people are not content to merely rest on their laurels. They are working on the ultimate story. The story to end all stories.

A TV station in California has filed suit to gain permission to televise executions. Arguments on why they should be allowed to do so revolve primarily around the freedom of the press to bring the public all the news that's fit to print. Though I don't think they have menespite my tendency to sometimes tioned it in court, I think it might also have something to do with the fact they can make enormous amounts of money.

I find myself divided on whether they should be given the right. On one hand, I support both freedom of the press and the right to make obscene amounts of money. On the other, I know exactly how television would choose to do the broadcast.

The first thing the big TV honchos would do is find a catchy name for what is admittedly an uncomfortable subject. Probably something like "Video Deathhouse." This kind of name would attract both the everimportant teen audience (hence, the use of video in the title) and the white trash who live in trailers with large antennas.

Next would come the all-important job of selecting a host for the festivities. I think Deborah Norville would have to be considered the front-runner for the job. Most executions take place in the early morning and she's already used to getting up. She is perky, intelligent enough to read cue cards and easy on the eyes. Plus, since being dumped by the "Today Show," she's looking for a job.

After finding a catchy title and a blonde host, the next step would be finding a network to broadcast the show. Fox would probably be the most logical choice. Since it's the new kid on the block, it's willing to take a few more chances than NBC, CBS and ABC. Also, as shown by Fox's program "Babes," they have no regards for human dignity. Sounds like a perfect match.

Deciding the actual contents of the show would probably be tricky, but I'm confident that those responsible can do it. After all, they once brought us a show about a chimp who served as a presidential adviser.

"Video Deathhouse" would then probably be a combination of game show/serious news program. Kind of like "Nightline" meets "Wheel of Fortune." You could first have a panel made up of experts on capital punishment debating the various pros and cons of the "ultimate penalty." Maybe there could even be a call-in segment, where Norville could constantly ask "Caller, are you there?" just like Donahue does.

OZONE DEPLETION IS OCCURRING

TWICE AS FAST AS WAS FEARED.

Then would come the big dramatic interview with the condemned man or woman. Norville could use her best "sad" voice to ask questions like "How do you feel?" This would allow the public to get to know the prisoner in the three minutes allotted for this

The game show aspect could be intermingled with the last-minute appeals to the governor's office. The producers could put an enormous "Clemency Clock" right next to the governor's phone. Thus, everyone could watch the minutes tick away. Should time expire without a phone call, an incredibly loud buzzer could go off. For that extra laugh, a camera could be focused on the condemned as the buzzer goes off.

Though someone will probably suggest having a studio audience member "come on down" to pull the switch, I have a feeling that idea will probably get nixed. After all, there is a limit to how far you can go. I wouldn't look for audience participation until ratings start

There are still problems. For instance, what would be done should the prisoner get a stay of execution? Probably the same thing they do on boxing programs. Should a fight not go the distance, they show taped highlights of previous matches.

Therefore "Video Deathhouse" could show the best of previous executions. Highlight programs always do well in the ratings and "A Best of" execution show may very well blow off the proverbial roof.

hould the TV station win the lawsuit, I look for a hit program not too far behind. It may not be quite the same as the one described above, but it'll probably be close. I know it will be a hit. People will wear "Video Deathhouse" shirts and talk about the latest episode over morning coffee. Some critics will like it and some won't. For six months, two or three years, maybe even longer, it will be the "in" thing.

But without fail, it will eventually disappear. Like the "Dukes of Hazzard," "Facts of Life" and now even "Dallas," the ratings will falter, and the show will be canceled. That may say more about us as a people than the fact that we watched "Video Deathhouse" in the first place.

Another perspective

In last week's edition of Newsweek, there was a fictitious help wanted ad:

WANTED: New Soviet Hero. Post recently vacated. Applicant must have thick skin.

That seems to sum up the political situation in the Soviet Union for Westerners. Westerners saw Gorbachev as something of a Russian political messiah. When he faltered, their faith in him faltered as well.

Gorbachev has represented, if anything, a large dose of reality for the world. He understands that the Communist system is not working effectively in the Soviet Union and that reforms are needed. This has alienated hard-line party supporters. At the same time, he understands that Westernization will take time, but the time it is taking is alienating those who favor reform.

Because of those two dissenting opinions, democratization coming too slowly and Communism fading too quickly, Gorbachev is facing the slings and arrows of faith lost on a global scale.

Enter Boris Yeltsin. Yeltsin has seized the moment and made promises to people in such dire straits that they have nothing to

For example, Gorbachev, in order to make the transition to a free market economy, ended government-subsidized artificially low prices on goods setting off public outcry and demonstrations. But the measure, while having an immediately negative effect, will eventually pay off.

Yeltsin, on the other hand, has hinted that lowering prices on goods to make them affordable to the public is needed. This would only solve the immediate problem of public discontent and would have negative long-term effects on the Soviet economy.

The Soviet people need to be patient and stand behind Gorbachev. He has done a great deal for the country; much of it will not be seen for years to come, but it must be allowed to work.

Under Gorbachev, the Soviet Union appears to have taken two steps forward and one step backward. But that still amounts to one step forward.

Truth is beauty

Editor,

Christians have been defending their faith for 2,000 years, so I hardly think they need my help in responding to Brad Seabourn's inflammatory column, "Gospel accounts con-flict, raise question," published the day before Good Friday in the Collegian. However, as an English major, who has spent a great deal of time thinking about literary texts, I would like to point out for the benefit of your readers that journalism is not the only way of depicting reality in words, nor is journalistic accuracy the only kind of truthfulness.

Surely you, Seabourn, who argued with such withering irony against American involvement in the Persian Gulf, are not going to suggest that we actually live in an age of reason, where everyone thinks "independently for once" and suddenly has eyes to see the truth? In fact, if the four gospel narratives completely agreed on every point, and if they were also composed of ideas never heard of before in the history of recorded speech, I for one would be more, rather than less inclined to question their veracity.

Since you and I are both in the business of words, I suggest you take some upper-level courses in my department, especially courses that cover writers with great authority in spiritual matters. You might look into poets like John Milton, William Blake or William Butler Yeats. You could stay closer to home with American writers like Walt Whitman or Flannery O'Connor, or you could venture abroad with poets and writers like Anna Akhmatova or Franz Kafka. Not all these men and women call themselves Christians, but reading any one of them would make you more aware of the immense, very real and completely uncontrollable power of symbols in human life and help you to appreciate those inner presences that Yeats called "self-born mockers of man's enterprise.'

Truth is beauty, as another poet put it, and beauty is truth. Your problem, Seabourn, is that you can't help being ugly about religion. You can't help seeming every bit as provincial, intolerant and uneducated as those people you're pretending to outsmart. To paraphrase something else I read: it's the beam in your own eye that compels you to search for the mote in someone else's. The world is a far bigger, far richer and far more mysterious place than you think, which is exactly why the Christian religion has survived and flourished for 2,000 years and why it will continue to lead a healthy, illustrious life long after your column is forgotten.

George Rueckert graduate student in English

Jesus loves you

I would like to respond to Brad Seabourn's March 28 column concerning the gospel message. Clearly, Seabourn has researched his topic extensively. Clearly, he is a highly intelligent and knowledgeable person. He looks at the gospel with intellectual scorn. It's clearly a bunch of foolishness.

I Corinthians 1:27 states, "God chose the foolish things of the world to shame the wise. "In verse 18, Paul predicts the kind of reaction Seabourn has to the gospel. Paul writes, "For the message of the cross is foolishness to those who are perishing, but to us who are being saved, it is the power of God."

So, is the gospel foolishness? No. It seems foolish. It's foolish that Christ would die for humanity. It's foolish God could love our depraved and mean race that much. But he does. Seabourn, Jesus loves you — no matter how many columns you write rejecting that love. Amy Wichman junior in secondary education

Let's do lunch

Editor,

Mr. Seabourn has brought to me, and I'm sure to all other Christians at this University, a challenge I am more than willing to accept. This is what happened on the third day after Jesus Christ's crucifixion.

You argue the four gospels are not in agreement about the specifics of what happened between the time the empty tomb of Jesus was discovered and the time Jesus appeared. Well, in response I ask you, "What does it matter?" Let's look at it from a "rational" and "independent" viewpoint. All four books agree the tomb was found without Jesus' body. All four books agree Jesus appeared to the disciples, and He blessed them with the power of the Holy Spirit and returned to Heaven before their eyes. They then proceeded to preach of the works of Jesus until they died.

Eleven of the 12 disciples died martyrs' deaths. They must have known something. It doesn't matter what happened in between those two times because all of them weren't there when they found the tomb, so some of it is from an outside source. But if that is true, how can you explain the amazing similarities throughout all four gospels and Acts?

Christianity is based on the fact that Jesus died by crucifixion and rose three days later. Your questions are like asking if you added four ones, or if you added two and two, or if you multiplied two and two to get four in all

Now, you think rationally and independently and get in touch with me, and we will discuss this situation on an intellectual level and see if your atheistic mentality could stand to be thoroughly convinced of my belief rather than your weak attempt at dissuading people of the real truth.

As for why April Fool's day isn't celebrated on Easter Sunday, it was made a special day for people like you.

Student offers wheelchair challenge for experience

JODELL LAMER Collegian Reporter

Tom Hufford wants you to take the wheelchair challenge this week in the K-State Union.

Hufford, senior in accounting and information systems, is promoting the challenge as part of Disabilities Awareness Week. The week was created by a Student Senate resolution.

"We're asking people to get in a wheelchair, go into the Stateroom and get a food or drink item," Hufford said. "The Wheelchair Challenge is a way that people can experience something others experience every day."

"I knew about the Ability Games, and I had heard that last year an instructor had his students spend some time in a wheelchair going to classes," Hufford said. "Being semidisabled myself, I use a cane, I felt that people on campus need to know what people with disabilities go

As a way to support Disabilities Awareness Week, Hufford is confining himself to a wheelchair for and see what it feels like. the week.

"This is absolutely voluntary. I feel if I am promoting this week and promoting activities for it, I should do something to draw attention to it," he said.

Hufford said there were a few things he had to get up from the wheelchair to do, like driving his car or hanging the Disabilities Awareness Week banner in the Union. He also has to walk into his downstairs Heitschmidt and Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, both took the challenge Monday afternoon.

After learning how to control the wheelchair, Franklin went into the Stateroom and purchased a soft

"When I went into the sandwhich part, they didn't know if I belonged in the wheelchair or not. At the Coke station, somebody offered me a lid," Franklin said.

"Because you're sitting so low, you get no eye contact with people. That may be part of the reason you're not helped. In the Stateroom, people have other things to do. 'hey're getting a Coke, they don't think to help you."

He said the hardest part of the challenge was maneuvering inbetween and around people.

Franklin said people with disablilities are very independent.

"It's fascinating what people have been able to do to work with their disabilities," he said.

Franklin made a challenge to all other administrators to ride the chair

Heitschmidt had a slightly different experience with the wheelchair. He took a ride on the Shuttle Service for Physically Limited Students.

Heitschmidt said riding in the chair gives you a whole new perspective.

"It makes you really think about what we all take for granted," Heitschmidt said.

He said loading on the shuttle bus for the first time and sliding around the back of the bus with wet wheels Student Body President Todd was a strange experience.

Heitschmidt said he found it hard to get into Ackert Hall, but had no problem getting into Farrell

After returning from the shuttle ride, Heitschmidt completed the challenge by purchasing a soft drink. He had trouble selecting the right lid for his 24-ounce cup since the tags were on top of the lidholder. He said the wheelchair took up both lanes at the registers.

Franklin and Heitschmidt both said the challenge would be more difficult during the lunch hours in

After hearing of Franklin's challenge to the administration, Heitschmidt made the same challenge to all student leaders.

The challenge will also run today and Friday from a table on the first floor of the Union.

In addition to the challenge, there will be the Ability Games Saturday from 1 to 3 p.m. in Aheam Field House. Anyone can participate in the Ability Games.

"We are asking groups to put together 10-person teams. The teams will compete in five different events," Hufford said.

Each event will simulate a different disability, and prizes will be awarded to the top three teams.

Anyone interested in putting together a team should contact the office of Services for Students with Physical Limitations at 532-6441 by

German youths protest as Polish enter country

Authorities condemn violence local youth cause foreigners

By the Associated Press

FRANKFURT AN DER ODER, Germany — A banner over the bridge welcomed Poles to Germany on Monday, their first day of European travel freedom. But 100 yards into Germany, drunken youths shouted slogans against foreigners. Many local people cringed at the spectacle, and the government condemned scattered violence that injured several Polish visitors and German passersby.

For the Poles, it was a milestone of liberation as they took advantage of a give them visas at the border to visit Germany, France, Italy, Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg.

Previously, Poles were required to get advance visas, some of which had restrictions that kept most Poles from visiting those countries.

German authorities estimated 50,000 people had crossed by midday at 20 border points, far fewer than predictions of as high as a halfmillion. Polish officials said more than 8,000 Poles in about 2,000 cars and 20 buses used the main crossing point near Frankfurt.

This is very good, this is normal," said Zbyslaw Andruszkiewicz, who was taking his wife and daughter from Bydgoszcz in Poland to see a cousin in Berlin. "People in Poland must make trips to the whole world."

Andruszkiewicz waited all night in his car while Polish and German border authorities carefully checked to prevent smuggling.

Fortunately for him, he was traveling on a highway north of Frankfurt and did not encounter the youths who jeered at people crossing another bridge into the center of the Oder River town.

About 30 youths flouted Germany's anti-Nazi laws by yelling They were traveling to visit rela- "Sieg Heil!" as they lurched about, new inter-European agreement to tives, shop for cheaper and more drinking wine and beer. "Germany

The youths clashed periodically with more than 100 border police in riot gear who kept them mostly away from the passing border traffic.

A bottle was hurled at a Polish bus, sending the passengers diving for cover. A German man was hit by flying glass and suffered a slight cut.

Earlier, when the first travelers passed by shortly after midnight, police were unprepared for violence. Stones thrown at a busload of Polish musicians returning from Holland injured two people.

Police reported 15 arrests in predawn clashes, and at least three people were arrested Monday afternoon in Frankfurt.

"This is all madness, childish," said Wolfgang Kuehnel, 58, a retired bus driver. "They are just hooligans out to make a commotion. ... They are only a minority."

Christensen."

It's time for new faces in familiar places for the K-State baseball team.

After some subpar performances in the past few weeks, K-State coach Mike Clark has decided to sprinkle the lineup with some new faces in the doubleheader today with Southwest Missouri State at 5 p.m. at Frank

Myers Field. "We've just been getting some poor performances, and we have some kids who deserve some playing time," Clark said. "We have a couple of kids who will be getting a start in the outfield to show what they can do. Also, this will be a get after it or get out of here outing for Dave

Clark said that the senior hurler had struggled most of this season and needs to make a turn soon or the season could turn for the worse.

"It's usually this time of the year that he steps forward and does some positive things for us," Clark said.
"He hasn't done that yet in the past few weeks, and I hope it happens soon. I don't know if he'll call this year's start disapointing, but it's disapointing to (the coaching staff). I think that it's time he step up and do something."

Christensen has staggered to a 3-4 record in 10 appearances with a 9.36 earned run average.

Also receiving a mound assignment, for the second game, will be

Matt Smith. Smith, who is used primarily as a long reliever, comes into the doubleheader with an earned run average of 4.00 on nine innings of work.

"Right now we have some pitching problems and some depth problems in the bullpen," Clark said. "I think this is an excellent opportunity for these young men to show that they can get the job done."

Getting the nod in the outfield for the doubleheader will be Jason Spalitto and Chris Wolf.

Spalitto, on the season, has played in six games with one start. He has one hit in eight plate appearances with one RBI.

Wolf comes into the contests with having played 16 games, getting the starting role three times. In those 16 contests, Wolf is hitting .333, with six hits in 18 at-bats.

Those two guys deserve the chance to play based on practices that they've had," Clark said. "Plus, Chris had some quality at-bats at Missouri, and I think he can do the job that we're looking for. Jason hasn't really had the chance to show what he can do, but he's had some good batting practices, and I think he can do it.'

In the infield it will be Scott McFall. On the season, McFall has made the most of his appearances, as he has hit .462 with six hits in 13 atbats. He has also scored nine runs and pushed across three runs.

Golfers 7th after 36 in Wichita tourney

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State's men's golf team put a serious wrinkle in their quest for a front-of-the-pack performance Monday at the Diet Pepsi Shocker Classic.

The Wildcats are currently in seventh place in the field of fifteen as they lie 20 strokes behind front-runner Baylor.

Baylor, which beat K-State by one stroke last week at the Vanderbilt-Durango Boot Music City Intercollegiate tournament, is leading after the first 36 holes with a team score of 581. Iowa State is second with 591, followed by Nebraska and host team Wichita State, which are tied for third with a score of 593. The Wildcats sit at 601, which could prove as an unsurmountable deficit heading into the final 18 holes which will be played today.

K-State coach Russ Bunker was disappointed, yet optimistically upbeat at the end of play Monday night.

Sophomore Jim Brenneman leads K-State, as he finished the day tied for fourth at a four-overpar 145. Freshman Will Seibert added yet another solid performance as he shot 150. Sophomore Richard Laing had a 153 followed by juniors Bill Graham and Brent Vuillemin at scores of 155 and 156, respectively.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - They liked his RBI single, and they just loved his triple.

But what Kansas City fans appreciated most about Kirk Gibson and the Royals' 4-2 victory over Cleveland Monday was the rousing way he pumped his arms and lit up the crowd after sliding safely into third base in his first Kansas City at-bat.

Known as a passive, roll-overand-die outfit during last year's 75-86 disappointment, the Royals had an eye toward attitude when they signed Gibson as a free agent from the Los Angeles Dodgers.

"I can sense an entirely new attitude on this ballclub," said rightfielder Danny Tartabull, who had a single and a double and drove in a run. "There's a feeling of brotherhood that we just didn't have on this

Like Tartabull, Wathan senses a different attitude.

'There's a lot more emotion in the clubhouse. There's a tremendous winning attitude right now, for a number of reasons," he said. "Kirk Gibson has that attitude. He's proven he's a winner."

The emotional display at third was not planned.

"I wish I could bottle the adrenaline you feel on opening day. It's a special feeling," Gibson said. "Something like that is just spontaneous.

Bret Saberhagen, winless in his Manager John Wathan noted the two previous Opening Day assignments, gave up six hits and two runs through seven innings. He was 5-9 and injured last season, but bounced back as he struck out five and walked two. Jeff Montgomery pitched two innings of two-hit relief.

Albert Belle, who led the major leagues in spring training home runs, RBIs and total bases, drove in both Cleveland runs with an RBI grounder and a solo home run. Greg Swindell took the loss.

"It was like being in a dream world out there," Belle said. "Opening day. Gorgeous day. Facing Saberhagen. I was kind of in a dream world for a while. It was a great start. I just wish we could have won."

In the second inning, Gibson hit a liner into the right-field corner, slid into third just ahead of the relay and came up clenching his fists. Mike Macfarlane followed with an RBI single and Kurt Stillwell's double gave the Royals a 2-1 lead.

Sports Briefly

Staff members promoted

K-State football coach Bill Snyder has announced promotional changes within his staff. The changes go into effect immediately.

John Latina, an offensive line coach, has been assigned the additional duties of running game coordinator.

Del Miller, the team's offensive coordinator and quarterbacks/ receivers coach for the last two seasons, now assumes the additional title of assistant head coach. Nick Quartaro, the tight ends coach and special teams coordinator, moves from assistant to associate head coach.

K-State begins its spring drills April 13. The drills will culminate May 4, with the annual spring game at 1:10 p.m. in KSU Stadium.

Lacrosse team takes 3rd

The K-State lacrosse team finished third in the University of Missouri Tournament.

In its first game of the tournament, K-State lost to Northern Illinois 11-2. In the second, K-State defeated Kansas City, 9-8, in the third sudden death overtime. And in the consolation game, K-State defeated the home team, Missouri, in double overtime 7-6.

With the two wins in the tournament, K-State evened its record to 3-3. The team travels to Omaha, Neb., for a game against Creighton Saturday.

It's finally baseball season. I didn't think it would ever get here.

For some of us - and you know who you are - the time between mid-October and the first week of April is like living life in a black hole.

Ah, but when we see that first box score and the pictures — whether they be in print or the small screen, it doesn't matter - of players making catches, hits or throws, it's like a refreshed feeling has overcome our souls.

Now as some of you know, I am a baseball-mad fool who just can't get enough of this summer game. I try to make the summer days last long into the fall. Say mid-December or so. But if you can't get out and toss the ole' horsehide around in freezing temperatures, then the next best thing might be a book on which the topic is you guessed it - baseball.

One of the better ones that I have found is Roger Angell's The Summer Game. Angell has crafted a marvelous piece of literature with this work from the Penguin Publishing Group.

The book is about Angell's beginning of a love affair with baseball as young reporter for the New Yorker in the early 1960s. It spans his growing fancy with the national pastime through 10 years, 1962 to 1972.

In it, we see the growth of baseball from a predominately east coast sport to a nationwide sport.

Assistant happy at Carolina

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

When Dean Smith was so unexpectedly ousted from North Carolina's Final Four contest with Kansas, the ensuing uproar nearly over-shadowed KU's surprising championship berth.

Thrust into the national spotlight in the wake of Smith's ejection was a little-known assistant coach who tried desperately to rally his squad.

The Tar Heels were unable to battle back in the final moments, losing 79-73, but the action was only beginning to heat up.

While sports broadcasters vehemently debated Smith's removal, the North Carolina assistant, the referee responsible for the disqualification, the Tar Heel squad, and police security became involved in an altercation about which the facts remain hazy For one evening, the unfortunate event forced into prominence the assistant, Bill Guthridge, who for the past 24 years has preferred his anonymous role. Guthridge has, in fact, spent his career so obscured by the legends of Tar Heel basketball that Kansans were understandably surprised when the game's announcers stated that Guthridge was a graduate of K-State and played on the Wildcat squad that was ranked No. 1 in the country in North Carolina's top assistant and a member of the Tar Heel staff since 1967, Guthridge has somehow avoided the attention other Smith aids have garnered.

While the Parsons native left his home state to find a supporting role in North Carolina, notable Smith assistants Larry Brown, Eddie Fogler and Roy Williams all migrated west to find fame and fortune in Kansas.

But while Guthridge's name may not be heard during most TV broadcasts of a Tar Heel games, it certainly is met with respect in the circle of basketball's top minds. During the years, Guthridge has been offered head coaching positions from many prominent universities. But instead of choosing the route taken by several of Smith's other assistants. Guthridge stayed with the mentor to help guide the winningest college basketball team of the past decade.

"I feel we have the best program in the country. That's just proven by the guys who were assistants here," Guthridge said following the tournament. "I was in hopes of eventually getting to be a head coach about 12 or 13 years ago, but I guess I just decided that wasn't what I really wanted. I just realized I have the best job in college basketball, working with one of the greatest coaches in history.

Since he joined Smith in 1967, the Tar Heels have finished first in the ACC 14 times and have earned berths in the NCAA tournament following 20 of the 24 seasons. Guthridge said the people involved with the Tar Heels and his role in the program have done the most to keep him at North Carolina.

Winning has had a lot to do with it, and the chance to coach the best players in the country is a special privilege," Guthridge said. "My family likes it here, and we get players who are good students and good people year in and year out.' Guthridge played under Wildcat coach Tex Winter from 1958-1960 with such K-State legends as Bob Boozer and Don Matuszak. During Guthridge's playing days, the Wildcats' earned three consecutive conference championships.

Playing with such successful teams under Winter and his assistants Ernie Barrett and Howard Shannon helped prepare him for a career in coaching, Guthridge said. Upon graduating in 1960, Guthridge coached at Scott City High School for two seasons. He then returned to K-State from 1962-67 as a member of Winter's staff. Guthridge in that period, including a trip to the Final Four in 1964. 'We probably should have won it that year," Guthridge said. "We were ahead of UCLA by three with just a few minutes left, but they were able to come back on us, and that helped to begin the great dynasty at UCLA under John Wooden.' Guthridge said the memories from his time at K-State are some of his favorites and said he keeps in touch with the Wildcat program and several friends he made while in Larry Moeller, chief of staff at Lafene Health Center, said it's normal to have people come in every day with mono.

Moeller said that while mono can be transmitted through kissing, it can also be spread without close contact, like from germs picked up on a doorknob.

Ninety-five percent of mono cases among college students are caused by the Epstein-Barr Virus, reports the American College Health Association in its health information series pamphlets. The EBV is not very contagious, and it's possible to not contract the virus if your roommate is

"People are more susceptible when they are stressed out," said Reita Currie, health educator at Lafene. "If you're not eating properly or getting enough sleep, you are more likely to come down with mono or any other infection."

Currie also pointed out many people get mono but never know it, because their immune system stops the virus before it gets serious enough to

Bands striving to burn off fog left by classic rock

Wrathchild, Dinosaur Jr. show maturity in latest albums

ERIC MELIN

Collegian Reviewer

With the growing blind acceptance of popular culture, the area of new pop music is constantly expanding. Record companies are always searching for the next new band to make it big, despite attempts by analretentive radio programmers to retain the classics. Here's a capsule look at some new music by bands that hope to break through.

BLOC - "in the Free Zone" Together for about seven years and hailing from Los Angeles, BLOC has a sound similar to many different bands but hard to pin down. They sound a lot like Mary's Danish, but perhaps a more familiar comparison would be Living Colour meets ABBA. Sound strange? Well, it could be stranger.

Although the combination of funk and rock isn't exactly brand-new, BLOC avoids the craziness of contemporaries Fishbone and The Red Hot Chili Peppers with a tame female singer. Vocalist Camille Henry smooths out all the edges of guitarists Nels Cline and Nicholas Kirgo. Some of the best hooks come from the guitars, but they seem buried under a heavy production by Tony Unfortunately, most of the vocal melodies are very non-distinctive. A couple songs have catchy choruses, but choruses can't carry an entire song. The lyrics look like they are straight out of a self-help book or something. In "Take it Up," Henry sings, "Tryin' to get up/Tryin' to be brave/But all my friends/They look

Dinosaur Jr. - "Green Mind" The fourth album from hard rockers Dinosaur Jr. is more of a solo effort than anything else. After three independently distributed albums found an audience of guitar rock fans, the band had reportedly split due to internal strife. What actually happened is bassist Lou Barlow left the band, and they secured a major label deal.

Now on Warner Brothers, Dinosaur has come up with a thoroughly satisfying and original rock record. Guitarist/vocalist J. Mascis penned all 10 songs and played almost every instrument.

"Green Mind" is full of great rock songs and the trademark, Mascis earnumbing guitar solos, but it's also more diverse than any of the previous records.

To cap it all off, the lyrics have a wide appeal. Mascis' teen-age angst has been replaced by a fear of being a grown up and dealing with everyday situations. Right before "Blowing" meshes directly into "I Live For That Look," Mascis sings in his Neil Young-like whine, "Am I acting on something real/Or am I blowing it again?/I don't know a thing to say to you."

Wrathchild America - "3-D"

Speed metal has been on the rise commercially ever since bands like Metallica, Slayer and Megadeth hit the mainstream like a sledgehammer in 1986. Amid a flurry of accusations that the bands were Satan worshippers, the record companies scrambled to sign new speed metal bands before the trend subsided. Now only a handful who remain can still pull it off, while others seek to redefine the genre.

Wrathchild America's second effort, "3-D," tries to do both. The first crop of speed metal bands were able to hit the Top-40 album chart without any radio airplay, and Metallica even hit the Top 10. You're not likely to hear any of the eleven songs on this album on commercial radio, and that's just fine with the band. Rather than going for accessibility, Wrathchild America has decided to experiment.

The excellence Wrathchild America has in instrumental ability, however, cannot be reached vocally. Vocalist/bassist Brad Divens sounds strained and weak on several songs, and equally as many suffer from incredibly boring melodies. Lyrically, they are much more mature. In "Sur-rounded by Idiots," Divens cleverly relates some Bob Dylan lyrics to modern times with, "I go to jail if they find a seed, meanwhile the mayor runs free/Clowns to the left of me, jokers to the right/Here I am, surrounded by idiots.

'China Cry' explores Lamm's faith, trust

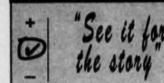

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reviewer

China Cry is the story of Nora Lamm's struggles against the injustice of revolutionary communist China. Her story is true and at the same time unrealistic. It is so incredible, it is hard to believe.

Briefly, Lamm's rich family is forced to leave their home and money when the Japanese invade China. They are subjected to further tortures and humiliation when Dr. Sung, Lamm's father, is forced to perform janitorial duties at the hospital where was practicing medicine.

Finally, Sung becomes a guinea pig for a new drug, which causes extensive bleeding, and he dies.

Reviewer says ...

During all of this, Lamm has graduated third in her class at the university, married a man from Hong Kong and given birth to both a son and a daughter.

She also has been tortured by the communists who force her to confess to being a Christian even though she doesn't consider herself one until, during cross-examination, she falls back on the faith she had as a child. Her parents sent her to parochial schools where she picked up her ideas of Christ. Ironically, this is the cause of the communists' suspicions and her salvation from them.

The climax of the film and the story happen next, when Lamm is put before the firing squad because of her confession of belief in Christ. She is given two minutes before she is shot, and she uses it to pray to the God she knew as a child, but has long since forgotten. Just as the guns are about to fire, a violent wind and bright light fills the courtyard and Lamm falls to the ground unharmed.

plained, but Lamm receives several knows if I will ever return," Lamm other such messages from God throughout her trials. Her faith in Christ grows with the help of underground Christians she meets because of their compassion for her. She is eventually delivered into the freedom of Hong Kong through equally mysterious means.

The story points out the cruel injustice of the communists and the power of the Christian faith and the Christian God.

Upon presenting Lamm her exit visa from China, the communist official who had subjected her to torture and humiliation told her he knew she was never coming back to China. "China is my home. Only God

He tells her to take her Christian God with her because what she leaves behind the communists will lock up.

"You would have to jail the wind," Lamm says.

Lamm's story clearly shows the power of the Spirit of God because of her trust and faith. Her story is foolishness to the wise, but to anyone with even a grain of faith it is an extraordinary show of the connection between God and humanity. We see this faith as the salvation for the poor, the mistreated, and above all, the

Every summer for the past 26 years, students from the Department of Modern Languages study in

In the past, students have studied in Monterrey and Mexico City, but they currently study at the University of Vera Cruz in Jalapa.

The program lasts for six weeks, during which time students take six hours of classes, said Margaret Beeson, associate professor in modern languages, who has directed the program since it began.

Courses include Spanish language, literature, Mexican history and archeology.

Jalapa has one of the world's best museums of archeology, she said, and one of the top symphonic orchestras in Latin America.

Because his intentions of staying at North Carolina are clear, Guthridge receives few coaching offers these days. Since Guthridge moved to North Carolina, the K-State position has changed hands four times without it being offered to him.

While he said he would have appreciated the offer, Guthridge said the timing was never right for him to return to his alma mater.

"I don't think my name probably ever really came up for the job," Guthridge said. "To eventually coach at K-State, that might have been my goal at one point, but when Tex retired, they were lucky enough to have Cotton Fitzsimmons on their staff to take his place. # Senate meeting ends in debate

Business Senator Tricia Thornton discusses financial matters related to a group requesting money during allocation debate at the Student Senate meeting in the K-State Union Big 8 Room Tuesday night.

Southwind request denied as group deemed political

ANDREW CAPPS

Collegian Reporter

Armed with a Webster's Dictionary, a student senator led debate against a funding allocation proposal for Southwind International.

Joni Franklin, Senate intern, warned Senate of the dangers of funding a political group during the second of three special allocations meetings Tuesday.

Franklin defined lobbying and said Southwind lobbied for issues in Topeka.

They actively influence political legislators through lobbying," she said. "In defining political, this organization is dealing with the affairs of the state. It is clear they are political.

Despite pleas from Paul Davidson, a Southwind spokesman, and some senators, Senate found the organization too political and rejected its requested $1,573.20 budget figure.

Southwind's request was reviewed by the Student Finance Committee, and the committee recommended Southwind receive no

"Based on the advice given to us by the student's attorney, we felt this organization was too political, and we cannot fund them," said Craig Uhrich, chairman of Senate Finance Committee.

Davidson said Southwind was a public-awareness group concerned with education and the environment.

"The United States dosen't recognize us as a political group, so I don't see how you could," Davidson asked.

The IRS tax code 501 C3 finds Southwind to be non-political. According to the finance committee, there is a difference between tax laws and constitutional laws.

"Just because the tax laws say it is not political, doesn't mean it is not political," Uhrich said.

Senate also heard budget proposals from the FONE Crisis Center, Multi-Cultural Student Council, Amateur Radio Club and the Student Governing Association.

Senate passed a $12,631.95 budget request from FONE Crisis Center and the Multi-Cultural Student Council's request of $323.70 with little debate.

The Amateur Radio Club received $627.37, which is $2,879.95 less than they requested. The club ■ See SENATE, Page 12

Attendance policies are enforced to ensure full participation on Student Senate.

According to the bylaws, a Senate intern or senator is allowed three unexcused absences, said Derek Nelson, sophomore in business and Senate operations chairman.

All interns and senators are placed on committees. Two misses are allowed before the person has an unexcused absence, Nelson said. The meetings usually take place once a week

Pete Marsh, Senate chairman and junior in hotel and restaurant management, said if two assigned office hours are missed, that also counts as an unexcused absence. In the case of three unexcused absences, the person may be asked to resign or can be impeached, Nelson

CHRISSY VENDEL Collegian Reporter

The bill proposing the K-State/ Kansas College of Technology merger was passed overwhelmingly, 37-1, from the Senate Tuesday.

Sue Peterson, assistant to President Jon Wefald, said after the bill was introduced and explained, there were no questions asked.

"I think everyone understood the situation," she said.

The bill will now go to the House Appropriations Committee for a tenative hearing Thursday, Peterson

K-State officials will give a presentation to the House committee similar the one they gave last weekend for the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

"Dr. (Stan) Koplik will tell how the merger got to the point of being recommended by the Kansas Board of Regents, and Dean (Don) Rathbone will explain what kind of programs will be on the Salina campus," she said.

Peterson said she feels K-State has a good start in the House.

'Representatives (Sheila) Hochhauser, from Manhattan, and (Larry) Turnquist, from Salina, are both on the Appropriations Committee and very supportive of the merger," she

Rep. George Teagarden, D-LaCygne, said he thinks it's a solid program and there is support in the

"I've not heard of anyone really opposed to it," he said. "Once the committee gets its questions answered, then we'll know the extent of the support."

Teagarden said concerns will be addressed through questions about increased efficiency and more effective education for students.

"If those are answered affirmatively, then it should be supported," he said.

MOE audit shows money well managed

JIM STRUBER

Consumer Reporter

The audit of the first two years of the Margin of Excellence program at K-State and Wichita State University shows no mismanagement.

The MOE audit was released Tuesday afternoon by the Legislative Post-Audit Committee, but the final approval of the audit will be delayed until the Kansas Board of Regent's staff provides some additional information to the committee.

Tom Rawson, vice-president for administration and finance, said he traveled to Topeka with Sue Peterson, assistant to the president, Tuesday morning to await the findings of the audit report. Representatives from Wichita State University were also present.

Rawson said the report was released at noon. The audit report had three recommendations, but no questions of K-State or Wichita State.

Rawson said, however, the committee still had questions to ask the regents' staff and that they must respond. The committee will delay approval of the report pending information from the regents' office. "The report had three recommendations, and none were addressed to K-State," Rawson said. "I think this demonstrates K-State was very responsible in the use of the margin money." Rep. Bill Roy Jr., D-Topeka and committee chairman, said the regents institutions after K-State and Wichita State were selected by random to be audited. The committee is waiting for the results of that audit.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said the audit proved to Wichita State are using the money appropriately.

Hochhauser said the audit should put to rest fears that the K-State administration was profitting unduly from the MOE.

"The audit clearly shows administrative unclassified salary increases were compatible with, or less than, faculty increases," she said.

The auditors did have some problems in determining whether K-State faculty salary increases came from MOE funding or were merit increases from the state's general fund, Hochhauser said.

"Our accounting procedures were found to be in satisfactory shape," Wefald said. "The staff that prepared the audit was extremely professional and competent.'

Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, said the audit report looks fine for K-State, but the money to fund the third year of the MOE will have to wait until next year.

Another of K-State's parking areas has been equipped with more mechanical money-making meters.

"The campus parking facilities operate on income from the meters, along with money from permits and misuse fees," said John Lambert, director of public safety at K-State.

The new meters are in the lot next to the new Dole Hall. "The building has just opened and we have installed about 20 meters," Lambert said.

The meters cost between $300 and $350 and pay for themselves in about one school year, Lambert said.

Lambert said the meters make campus parking easier for those who want short-term parking. "They work well where we have a lot of turn-over traffic, like the K-State Union," he said. The meters seem to be wellreceived by students and visitors alike. "They have met with a minimal amount of rejection; the biggest complaint seems to be the twohour time limit," said Lt. Robert Mellgren of the K-State Police.

Review criticized for ignoring underfunding of office

Significant changes are expected by the end of May in the office responsible for computing at the University.

A review of the Office of Computing and Telecommunications Activities by a council of top K-State officials is to begin April 16 and be finished by the end of the following month.

While University officials declined to state what changes they expect in CTA, their review was initiated by an outside consulting company's study, which may indicate the nature of the changes.

A Jan. 23 draft of the study by Technology Specialists Inc. said of CTA, "The current organization of campus computing staff and equipment reflect historical imperatives, many no longer operative.'

CTA Director Tom Gallagher said the criticism of CTA in the TSI report is accurate.

"The criticism is probably right in the sense of, I haven't shown as much leadership as I should. That's probably true," Gallagher said. "But, we did not have the money. And I never felt it was my problem to go and create the money.' He added that for 15 of the 20 years he has been director, he did not have the support from upper administration to do advance planning The TSI study also recommended the creation of a new Office of Information Technology to implement a strategy for meeting the needs of computer end-users on a campuswide basis.

As a step toward the implementation of that strategy, the study calls for a detailed assessment of the CTA staff and technology. Two administrators involved with computing policy at the University, both of whom spoke on condition of anonymity, believe this assessment will lead to the replacement of Gallagher as the person in charge of comput-

Woman fakes cancer for 2 years

NEW YORK (AP) - A woman jilted by her fiance sought sympathy by faking terminal breast cancer for two years. The woman shaved her head and dieted away 20 pounds or so, a psychiatrist said. She even fooled a cancer support group. She also feigned listlessness and loss of appetite, and built up a network of close friends among support-group members.

"She felt that the process of rebuilding a social life for herself was simply overwhelming. She needed a shortcut," said Dr. Marc Feldman.

The woman had what psychiatrists call a factitious disorder. In this condition, a person consciously fakes an illness for some psychological gain. A well-known variant is Munchausen syndrome, in which a person virtually makes a career of being a patient.

Nobody knows how common factitious disorder is, said Dr. David Folks, a professor in the department of psychiatry and behavioral neurobiology at the University of Alabama School of Medicine in Birmingham.

The woman, who by then was 35, began the charade while working as a corporate secretary. She told co-workers that the cancer had already spread and that her prognosis was grim. She modeled her symptoms on the genuine cancer of an acquaintance.

The charade was uncovered when a routine check of medical records showed that she had never seen the cancer specialist she claimed was treating her.

Mudslide traps man for an hour

SEATTLE (AP) - A mudslide on Saturday trapped a man up to his neck in mud and sand for an hour.

"I could only see out of one eye," said John Patha, of suburban Burien. "I thought I was gone, one day after my birthday."

Patha, a retired Boeing Co. executive who turned 60 on Friday, had been freeing some drainage pipes that are supposed to prevent landslides on the hill stretching down from his home along the shore of Puget Sound.

He turned to walk down the hill, he remembers, when he heard a cracking noise and saw some bushes move. He started running, but the slide caught him.

House approves SRS budget proposal

TOPEKA (AP) — The House passed on Tuesday a proposed budget for the state's welfare department, but an influential Republican senator promised to try to get representatives to back away from spending increases contained in it.

The bill, approved 68-55, would allow the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services to spend $425.4 million in state tax dollars during the budget year that begins July 1. When federal funds and money from other sources, such as fees, are included, the agency could spend about $1.03 billion.

The Senate already has passed the bill, but its version called for about $23.8 million less in total spending. Its members will have to consider numerous changes made by the House during a 51/2 hour floor debate Monday and by the House Appropriations Committee last week.

The Senate probably will not accept the House's changes, meaning a joint committee will be appointed to negotiate a compromise. Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said the House's proposal is too generous.

US Ecology may miss dump deadline

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) - An aide to Gov. Ben Nelson says US Ecology might miss a Jan. 1, 1993, deadline for opening a lowlevel radioactive waste repository in Nebraska.

Kate Allen, Nelson's low-level waste researcher, said the company could miss the federally mandated deadline by months while the state reviews the company's application to build and run the US Ecology Vice President Richard Paton said Tuesday that the delay wouldn't give the company enough time to build the repository on its 320-acre tract west of Butte in Boyd County.

Ray Peery, executive director of the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact Commission, said if the deadline isn't met, Nebraska could be fined and denied access to three existing low-level dumps.

At a Monday night meeting in Boyd County, Allen said the state Department of Environmental Control, which had planned to make a decision on the license application this fall, won't do so until the fall of 1992.

2 policemen shot while making arrest

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) - Two police officers that were shot when a man they were arresting grabbed one of their pistols and fired were recovering from gunshot wounds Tuesday.

Officer Pat Anderson, 22, was in serious but stable condition following surgery in Bethany Medical Center, police spokesman Don Ash said. The other officer, Randy Balliett, 24, was in fair condition in Bethany, he said.

A third man, believed to have shot the officers Monday night, was in serious condition in the University of Kansas Medical Center, also with a gunshot wound, Ash said.

Charges have not been determined but could include three counts of aggravated battery on law enforcement officers, Ash

The spokesman said the two police officers were called to a home just after 8:30 p.m. Monday to meet a woman who said she had been beaten at another address. She told them the man who beat her still would be there.

The officers drove to that address and found the woman's father holding a gun to the suspect's head.

"The officers informed the man (the father) that they had control of the situation and would take care of it," Ash said. The father turned over the suspect. While being handcuffed, the suspect grabbed a 9mm service pistol from one of the officers and

The officers were shot in the torso and radioed for help.

Autopsy reveals new evidence

LIBERAL (AP) - The slaying of a 49-year-old woman whose body was found in a bedroom of her home may have been personally motivated rather than a random crime, police said Tuesday. An autopsy on Judy Johnson likely will show she received several blows on the head with some kind of object, Police Chief Tom Hinsdale said. Burglary initially had been considered a possible motive but was no longer suspected, Hinsdale said.

"We're investigating some leads we've got, and there is a possi-ble suspect at this time," Hinsdale said. "If those leads prove out, then this would be a personally motivated crime." Johnson's body was discovered Monday morning by an adult daughter police believed to be the only other resident of the house, Hinsdale said. The daughter was not home when the killing occurred, he said.

SUZANNE BROWN Collegian Reporter

The sounds of Southern India filled the K-State Union Forum Hall Tuesday night, as three famous Indian musicians performed classical Carmatic music. The vocalist, violinist and mridangam player are among the best Carmatic musicians in India, said Mohankumar Puliyur, graduate student in anatomy and physiology, as he introduced the trio.

Puliyur is a cultural coordinator for the International Coordinating Council, which sponsored the concert along with the India Students Association. The Indian musicians will be touring the United States to perform the classic Carmatic music.

Audience members said they enjoyed the music and kept the beat or swayed in reflection of the vocalist.

"It was very fantastic - the drum player, especially," said Salil Jha, graduate student in chemistry. "He is very famous in his field. I like the drums because I am a drummer, so I appreciate what he is doing. I wish I could learn from him. I hope the India Students Association continues to invite groups like this.'

Many of the compositions had strong drum beats and the vocalist was articulate in his singing.

The three men were seated on an Indian rug, and the vocalist faced the audience. The violinist and mridangam player sat on both sides of him and faced each other. An Indian print hung as a backdrop for the group and a large brass candlestick held several glowing candles.

Each musician seemed to communicate through the music to the other musicians Computers

Included in the amendments are the reinstatement of the full enrollment adjustment, 16-percent student salary increases, 100-percent graduate fee waivers, .5-percent increase for shrinkage and a 4-percent hike for other operating expenses.

Teachers can learn lessons from pupils

s one member of a five-person community service team planning to work in Kansas City's Chelsea neighborhood this summer, I'm learning a lot about the inner-city. This learning is invaluable, and such an experience, that in some respects, I feel almost as if I'm growing up all over again.

The experience in Chelsea is offering me a look at an America I've never seen before. Chelsea is a racially mixed, low-income neighborhood that looks surprisingly like my own hometown. Frankly, I've been amazed at how similar in appearance Chelsea is to other places I've known. But my second visit to the neighborhood last weekend was, nevertheless, like nothing I've ever experienced before.

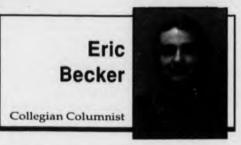

This summer's team in Chelsea will be following up on the work of a Kansas State Community Service Program team in the neighborhood last summer. Last summer's team provided a program of activities for neighborhood youth. This summer's team is striving to set up a similar program. Ultimately, it is hoped that the program, once established, will not require the presence of a summer team to maintain it. Instead, it will be maintained by area volunteers, adults and possibly some of the area youth as well.

Although there is an amount of preparation for the project that can take place on campus during the spring semester, the team's more meaningful education will begin once its members move into the neighborhood in June. A site visit to Chelsea April 6 can probably be counted as the beginning of the team's hands-on education.

On April 6, this summer's team met some of the youth it will be serving. It was a fascinating, wonderful experience, and one which put me in touch with issues I would probably never have considered in other circumstances. About 20 youths showed up that day at the "Chelsea House" (a neighborhood works center for the team's base of operations this summer). It was what the team members had hoped for: a group of youths whose own perspectives on the neighborhood could be drawn on to help determine helpful and enjoyable activities for a summer program.

This information was useful, but I think the team's more informal interactions with the youth were just as valuable. The youths who attended were roughly between the ages of three and fourteen. Because the range of this age group was so broad, different youths warranted different kinds of attention from the team members. Each youth's needs were valid and important. Each was a rewarding challenge for the members of the team.

Although the team hopes to work with, and make a difference for, as many youths as possible during the summer project, its members are aware of the importance and the power of one-on-one interactions. That day gave each of us a chance to begin to experience the special friendship a child can offer in this kind of individual interaction.

Even in the presence of the group, team members were able to give meaningful, personal attention to a few of the youths. I made what might have been several of these meaningful connections with a number of the youths that came to the Chelsea House April 6. But my interaction with one child, in particular, stands out in my head This child's name was Majestic. (That was his real name.) Majestic was a three-year-old boy with light, curly hair and big glasses. Majestic came to me while I sat with another team member among several youth on the sidewalk outside of the Chelsea House. He seemed to pick me out. He was a beautiful, energetic child. I've had little experience with working with young children. And whereas I hope that Majestic learned something from me, I feel confident I learned something from him.

What struck me about Majestic was his face. When I looked at his face, I could see he had a certain strength of character I have never had to have. Growing up in a small Kansas community, I have never known the experience of a childhood in the inner city. But in Majestic, I began to see it. Majestic had a certain capacity, a certain familiarity with the streets of the neighborhood, a certain instinct I'm sure he didn't see in himself. Growing up in the inner city, Majestic had more of a feeling for how to live and behave there than I did. It was something his circumstances demanded of him. It was something my circumstances had never before demanded of me.

Yet, I could see innocence in Majestic's face as well. And this, too, was lost on me. It's something we all start out with, but something we all inevitably lose in the process of growing up. I felt sorry, looking at Majestic, that he would someday lose that quality, that part of his beauty.

I want to make a difference. I want to learn about what I don't know and have never known. I hope to be of help to some of the youth of Kansas City's inner city. But I sense the youth of the Chelsea neighborhood will be as much a help to me in my exploration of that unfamiliar land as I can ever hope to be to fter the team had gathered some of the insights the youths could provide, it set out with the kids for a park in the neighborhood, planning to play kickball. But whereas the team members were along to "supervise" the activity, it was the youth who knew where the park was. The youth, therefore, led the way.

I think this is an excellent illustration of what it's all about. To teach, it is necessary to learn. And these roles of teacher and the taught are interchangable, applicable to all participants in a practical learning experience. Chelsea is bound to learn from the K-State students who will live there next summer, but who can doubt that the students will learn from Chelsea as well?

The election and Raborn's campaign proves a few points about the people of Manhattan and their feelings toward K-State students.

Some Manhattan citizens are close-minded when it comes to college students. And most of those are voters.

Raborn did have a couple more strikes against him. He didn't have the money to spend on advertising to get his name and face out to the masses. Instead, he went door-to-door talking to voters.

Raborn also got a late campaigning start, which couldn't have helped his cause.

The Manhattan voters need to become more open-minded to the college students and their causes.

Choice must remain

Editor,

After reading several letters on the subject of abortion, we've decided to add our two cents worth.

Though we have no numbers to back us up, what we do have is the fact that as citizens of this nation, we have certain rights and freedoms. One of those freedoms is that of choice. The choice of careers, where to live, etc. But if we take away a woman's choice of whether or not to continue a pregnancy, will it stop at that, or will all women's choices be taken away?

In a country where we are unable to house and support all of our citizens, it seems ludicrous to us to bring 4,000 new children a day to mothers who don't want them or can't support them.

Pregnancy is an awesome responsibility. Therefore, should we condemn women, whose birth control failed, to go through a pregnancy for which they are unready? It is an emotional experience for which many women are never ready.

Though we aren't saying that abortion is the only option, or the best option, it should at least continue to be a choice. And until scientists begin developing more effective means of birth control for women and men, abortion needs to be a choice. In closing, we realize that this could, and probably will, be taken as a sexist remark, but we will never be able to listen to men profess the immorality of abortion when they never have to worry about getting pregnant. Phronsie Stopple

Coverage skewed

I just wanted to take this chance to tell you how I enjoy reading the Collegian. How in the world did you guys know I didn't want to waste my time reading two boring articles about some debate team winning some national title, and some of their members sacrificing their chances of winning to help some seniors, when I could read a full-page feature on the Jalapeno Fest.

I was wondering what happened to all the beer this weekend in Manahattan, and now I know. Who cares about McCollum and Fillipi, when I can read about Unruh et al. consuming 60 beers in nine holes of golf. I really admire Unruh and Eicher, a couple of freshmen who are probably not even 21 years old, being able to drink so many beers at some golf course and then driving home. They really have something to put on their resume now. Not like most of the other golfers, who don't even remember driving home.

What was Wefald thinking when he was handing out championship shirts to some debate squad when he could have been crowning the king and queen of the Jalapeno Fest and presiding over the Beer Olympics? I bet after reading the Collegian, like myself, he knows what K-State is really proud of.

I just wanted to take a few minutes to say thank you to the United States' Armed Forces. More than once, I have heard people complain (myself included) about how high taxes are and how much money our government "wastes" on our national defense. But let me be the first to apologize for those harsh

Although I suffered no personal loss in the war, I offer my sympathy to those who did. But I have to admit, I feel the war was a rude awakening for many U.S. citizens. Many of us have never experienced a war in progress, and our imaginations fall short of the real thing. I feel the war was not only a victory over aggression, but it showed how well our money is being spent regarding our national defense.

The equipment used in the war was very impressive. Some of it was a little dated, but it got the job done. The equipment would not have worked so well without the direction of our highly intelligent and skilled Armed Forces' personnel. It takes money, a lot of money, to produce such a great defense. And it was money well spent. Thank you.

Time for compromise

The Brady Bill differs from the issuance of credit cards in at least one very important respect. With a credit card, you don't have to pply every time you want to buy something. But gun purchasers would have to be approved for each and every purchase. Since 85 percent of gun buyers already own at least one gun, this will create expensive and unnecessary paperwork.

When you use a credit card, the store runs an instant check on your credit. Given that this technology is already in place and available, there is no reason it cannot be used to screen gun purchases. In 1988, Congress directed the Department of Justice to develop and implement such a system. It would be more effective than the Brady Bill, which incidentally does not require any background check.

The crucial catch-22 in the Brady Bill is that the chief law enforcement officer must acknowledge the receipt of the applicationto-purchase before the purchase can proceed. The bill says, however, that he is not compelled to do so. So an anti-gun official has only to ignore the applications, and there's nothing you can do to obtain a gun. This is the situation already in New York and New

The National Rifle Association, long accused of being unwilling of compromise, has endorsed the instant check system. Now it's time for the Handgun Control and other Brady Bill sponsors to compromise.

Faculty Evaluation Synopsis accepted

DAN SCOTT Staff Reporter

The K-State Faculty Senate accepted the questions proposed in the Tenure and Faculty Evaluation Synopsis in its meeting Tuesday afternoon.

The synopsis, completed by the Kansas Board of Regents Academic Affairs Committee, raised three additional questions concerning tenure.

"It's as if this document is being written in stages," said Wayne Nafziger, president of Faculty Senate and professor of economics. "At the end of the report, they attached questions that could affect us."

The third question dealt with faculty members who receive tenure evaluations that rank them in the bottom quarter of the department for three consecutive years. The question asked what was being done to address the problem and what success such effort had.

Nafziger said the Faculty Senate presidents of the regents' schools did not want to address this question directly, because they believe departmental rankings should not be used as a means of finding problems.

"Just because a faculty member ranks in the bottom fourth for two or three years, it does not necessarily mean that person is doing an unsatisfactory job," Nafziger said.

For example, Nafziger said, a person in a four-person department with three other people who are extremely energetic, strong teachers and in their 30s could rank in the bottom quarter for several years.

The fourth person could be a productive faculty member, just not to the degree of the others, he said.

In other business, the Senate passed an amendment to the Course and Curriculum Approval, Routing and Notification Policy.

In the past, the policy has been unclear, Nafziger said.

"We've had courses appear in the class schedule that hadn't been approved by Faculty Senate," he said. "This formalizes the idea."

Besides requiring the Senate's approval of courses, the amendment establishes a suggested procedure for delegating the responsibility of putting the courses in the class schedule.

Animal rightists promote meatless diet

New Cornell research creates controversy

SHANNAN SEELY Agriculture Reporter

Actions of animal rights groups often affect people in animal agriculture directly.

In a telephone interview, Hershaft said the goal of the Farm Animal Reform Movement is to moderate destructive impacts of animal agriculture, human health and animal welfare. Members believe farm animals should have rights like companion animals.

FARM promotes an annual meatless day of dieting, called the Great American Meatout, to alert American consumers about the harms of animal agriculture for consumer health, food resources, environmental quality and animal welfare.

Animal science professors said they hope consumers question animal activists' objectives.

"Part of many of these claims about the harm of meat as a product are not backed up with scientific data," said Miles McKee, professor of animal sciences and industry. A ruminant animal's digestive tract is the best way to use roughages inedible by humans.

"The grass on these Flint Hills is turned into pounds of beef and mutton," McKee said. "It's still a good way to get high-quality protein but most people don't understand it. Quite often, it falls on deaf ears.'

Ranchers do not cause erosion of the land if it's properly managed. Buffalo and antelope grazing may have caused more erosion, he said.

According to Calvin Drake, K-State Livestock Judging Team coach, animal welfarists and activists make broad statements without referring to specific journals or research data. He said sometimes, their claims cannot be confirmed by substantial scientific evidence.

In many cases, the controversy begins when someone makes a statement not cited in scientific evidence.

In a telephone interview, Hershaft said the study about meat's harm can be obtained through Cornell University.

In the case of human health, 1.5 million Americans are crippled with heart diseases and strokes due to the consumption of animal fats.

'Thousands of different studies during the past years have been performed and a dozen expert panels were appointed and reviewed the studies," he said.

The researchers concluded American consumers should decrease animal fat and meat in their diets and increase whole grain, vegetables and fruit intake.

The panel was appointed by the National Research Council, Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Meats, the National Cancer Institute and the Surgeon General Institute.

The Great American Meatout campaign was started in 1985 with 20 events. This year, the events have totaled 1,200 in 50 states and several Canadian provinces.

"We have a long-term goal to end the exploitation of animals for food," he said. "The way we do this is by alerting of some of the hazards associated by today's animal agriculture."

Hershaft said he has not been in contact with most animal agriculture groups.

"They kind of keep to themselves," he said.

The National Cattlemen's Association has developed several programs to educate influencers and consumers about the benefits of beef production.

Wildcat backstop enjoying success

Hitting streak highlight for Ryan

BILL LANG Sports Reporter

To say he's tough just might be an understatement.

Both Jeff Ryan and Bo Jackson have one thing in common. They both know pain.

Teammate Blair Hanneman told of the time when Ryan played a game when he probably shouldn't have.

"We we're playing some foot-ball," Hanneman said. "He took a shot and somehow hurt his arm. He was afraid to tell (K-State) coach (Mike Clark) about it. He was afraid he might not get to play."

Ryan, after admitting to his shoulder injury, said he didn't work on rehabilitating it.

"Well, I took some medication for it and that was about it, really," Ryan said.

He's played through it, though. This season Ryan fashioned an 18-game hitting streak in which he played with a partially separated shoulder. That didn't seem to slow him down, as he batted .431 (28 for 65), with 13 RBI, four doubles and two home runs.

Clark was almost at a loss for words when it came to describing the starting backstop of the 'Cats.

"When we got him here, he had some things he needed to work on," he said. "His swing was bad. But since he's been hitting the ball at about a .350-clip, we're not going to touch it.

The other was his throwing motion to catch base stealers, Clark added. "But since then, he's improved dramatically in that area, because he's gotten a lot stronger in the two years since he's been here.'

Ryan credits most of his success to a former 'Cat receiver, Dan Skala.

"Basically everything I know about catching I learned from Dan Skala," Ryan said. "When I got here, I didn't know much about the mental side of the catching job. He taught me a lot in my first two years.

"He also taught me a more compact throw when picking off base runners," he added. "I learned a lot sitting behind him."

That improvement in his role behind the plate has seen him grow as a risk for would-be base stealers. Currently he is gunning down 51 percent of the base runners.

One would think if Ryan had a partially separated shoulder it would hurt tremendously to throw the ball to second on a play.

"It hurts a little bit, but I just play through it," Ryan said. "I try to concentrate on what I have to Ryan calls his hitting streak part concentration and part luck. "I went up there with a little more patience and got the pitch that I was looking for," Ryan said.

Although the hitting streak is over now, it was something Ryan had hoped would end sooner.

"I can't say too much about my hitting and the hitting streak. I am glad the streak is over," he said. It was nice when it was around nine or 10 games. It was something to talk about. But when it started to get up there into the 13and 14-range, it started getting into my mind."

During the season, Ryan has improved. This year, he's hitting .357 compared to a .221 career average coming into this season. He's also added five homers on the season.

Ryan has played more games this year, 38, than he played in his first two years combined.

Christensen leads sweep of SMSU by baseball team

Sports Reporter

A familiar face and new face made their names known — again and for the first time — Tuesday.

K-State swept a doubleheader from Southwest Missouri State, 9-8 and 6-1, with the help of senior pitcher Dave Christensen and seldom-used outfielder Jason Spalitto.

In the first game, Spalitto was 1-for-4 with a double and a run scored. It was the double that might have brought Spalitto back from the land of the dead.

"Before I hit the double, I had no idea where the strike zone was. I didn't even really know what I was doing," Spalitto said. "After I hit the ball, it was like waking up and going through the normal routine.

"It felt really good to get back in the lineup tonight," he added. "It's been a while. It felt really good that I could play that well tonight."

In the second game, Christensen allowed one run on five hits and had four strikeouts.

K-State coach Mike Clark expressed the same pleasure in Spalitto's and Christensen's performances.

"Jason had a really good couple of games," Clark said. "We're going to have to continue to look at him. He provided a spark for us and we needed that as a team. Dave just did great too. He had his concentration and he had his knuckleball down. And when he has that pitch down, it's awfully tough to hit."

K-State in the first game spotted SMSU a 6-1 lead after 21/2 innings of

In the bottom of the third, the 'Cats added four runs and in the bottom of the fourth K-State added another four runs to take a 9-6 lead.

Jeff Stewart came on the fourth inning and basically shut the door on the Bears. Stewart went three-plus innings, allowing two runs on two hits, with two walks and a pair of strikeouts.

After SMSU scored another run in the top of the seventh, it had a chance to tie the game, when pinch-runner Ted Manvitz got caught in a rundown to end the game.

'That was close," Clark said. (Stewart) walked a couple of people and he almost paid the price for it, but we got a good defensive play to end the game.

In the second game, Spalitto led off the bottom of the fifth, with the 'Cats holding a 2-1 lead. Spalitto spanked a triple to the right-center field wall and came around to score on Van Torian's single.

"That triple really got me going," Spalitto said. "The double woke me up, but the triple gave me a lot of confidence.

"Whether I start this weekend or not I don't know yet," he added. "But I'm ready.

In that fifth inning, K-State posted a total of five runs en route to the win as Christensen got a ground out, fly ball and another fly ball to end the

"This game felt really good," Christensen said. "Those comments that coach made (about his performance prior to the game) fired me up a little and I was really focused tonight. "I wasn't concentrating on how to throw my pitch, and after the discussion (on the mound in the third inning) I just concentrated more," he added.

Clark also said the win for Christensen might help his confidence on down the road.

"I think the win tonight gave a lot of his confidence back to him. This is the way we thought he would pitch this year and I hope he continues it," he said.

Clark also said the wins definitely were a boost to the team attitude.

Golfers 5th at Wichita

ERIC BROWN

Sports Reporter There used to be a Wichita-based hockey team known as the "Wichita Wind." This morning, as K-State's men's golf team returns to campus, the reason for the title will no longer be unknown to them.

The Wildcat golfers experienced a restricting wind Tuesday in the final round of the Diet Pepsi-Shocker Classic tournament and survived to overtake two more squads.

K-State posted a 307-third round, third-lowest team score for the day, to vault into the fifth-place position with a stroke total of 908, two strokes in front of Iowa State, which tripped from second back to sixth.

Baylor captured the team title in the 15-team meet with a third-round score of 313 to finish the tourney with a four stroke lead at 894. Host Wichita State finished even with Ne-

The Shockers, however, were awarded the runner-up trophy due to a tie-breaking rule that saw Wichita State have a lower fifth-man score. North Texas followed in fourth place with a score of 310.

K-State coach Russ Bunker was pleased with the final day efforts of his team.

"I think we finished the tournament well considering the strong wind, and the layout of the course caused a tough day," Bunker said.

K-State was paced by sophomore Jim Brenneman who shot a 227, but fell from fourth to 15th on the final day with a third-round score of 82. Bunker said he was disappointed for Brenneman because Brenneman had been in a position to win the meet heading into Tuesday's round of 18

Bunker was also encouraged by braska with identical scores of 306 the play of sophomore Richard Laing Vuillemin, who posted third-round scores of 75, 74 and 76 to give them totals of 228 (good for 18th), 229 and 232, respectfully.

"I was pleased with the way those three players performed in those conditions," Bunker said. "We were too far behind heading into the final 18 to make a serious run for the title."

Joining Brenneman with a poor day was freshman Will Seibert, who took 86 strokes Tuesday to give him a total of 236 for the tourney.

Bunker was optimistic about his team at this point in the season.

"I'm happy with the team, and now we can totally focus on the Big Eight Tournament at the end of the month," Bunker said.

Tribe's Candiotti baffles KC in 2-1 dual with newest Royal

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - April has always been one of Tom Candiotti's best months and Kansas City one of his favorite teams to pitch against.

So it came as no great shock when Cleveland's knuckleball specialist beat the Royals and Mike Boddicker, 2-1, Tuesday night in a swiftly paced pitcher's duel. But the month and the team hardly matter when the knuckler is working this well, he said.

"The knuckleball is one of those pitches that's extremely hard to hit when it's moving a lot and you're keeping it in the strike zone," said Candiotti, 10-3 against Kansas City and 12-7 lifetime in April.

"And that was the key for me. I was keeping it in the strike zone all night. I was real zoned in and the ball was moving in the strike zone real well. They couldn't take it all the time because I was throwing it Boddicker, who came over from the Boston Red Sox as a free agent, gave up only five hits in nine innings while striking out three and walking none.

"It seems like every time I pitch against Cleveland, Candy's pitching," said Boddicker, who signed a three-year deal for $9.25 million. "He outpitched me tonight. He did a great job. You've got to give credit where credit's due."

Kansas City ruined Candiotti's shutout bid in the eighth when Brian McRae's groundout to first scored pinch-runner Bill Pecota from third.

Hipp named top pitcher

K-State pitcher Kent Hipp was named the Big Eight's pitcher of the week after his 4-2 victory over No. 25 Missouri Friday. In the nine innings against the Tigers, Hipp allowed four hits, two earned runs, walked three and struck out eight. The win against the Tigers marked the third victory for the Great Bend senior against a ranked team. The others were a 6-0 shutout of No. 7 Arkansas and a 3-2 win over No. 4 and previously unbeaten Wichita State.

K-State coach Mike Clark said Hipp was very deserving of the award.

"He's been a big pitcher for us this year," Clark said. "With everything thing else that's been going on with our pitching staff, he's been the one constant stabilizer.

"Whenever he's pitching, we know we'll be in the ball game until the end, and that's a pleasure.' On the season, Hipp is 5-2 with a 2.65 ERA. He has four complete games, 50 strikeouts in 571/3 innings.

Cards down Cubs in opener

CHICAGO (AP) - The St. Louis Cardinals spoiled Danny Jackson's Cubs debut with three runs in the eighth inning, and beat Chicago 4-1 Tuesday in the season opener for both teams. Jackson, one of the heroes for Cincinnati in the World Series sweep, signed a four-year deal for $10.5 million after the season. With the score tied 1-1, Felix Jose doubled with one out in the eighth off Jackson. Todd Zeile walked and Tom Pagnozzi singled to left to fill the bases and Paul Assenmacher replaced Jackson.

Jose Oquendo hit a roller to shortstop, but Shawon Dunston's throw to second was late as Jose scored the tie-breaking run on the fielder's choice. Pinch-hitter Craig Wilson singled off Assenmacher's glove as Zeile scored and Rex Hudler's force-play grounder scored Pagnozzi.

By the Associated Press

SANFORD, Fla. - Fantasy collided with reality as high-school maintenance man Randy Harvey bellowed "Saaaafe" in his first call as a major league umpire on opening day at Detroit's Tiger Stadium.

Harvey normally is mowing a baseball field on a weekday afternoon, not making major-league calls on one. Harvey, 30, is a groundskeeper at Lake Mary High School when not calling high-school and college baseball games.

But Monday, he got the thrill of a lifetime as the second base umpire for the Tigers-New York Yankees game, won by Detroit 6-4.

Baseball had to turn to old-timers and college umpires as substitutes for the striking umps. An agreement was reached early Monday, but it was too late to prevent substitutes from working most opening day games. 'It's a day I'll never forget," said came sliding into second base on a steal attempt in the first inning and Harvey unhesitatingly called him safe. Tiger shortstop Alan Trammell, taking the throw, jumped up, stared at the ump and said, "Great call."

"It felt good on that first play with Trammell saying 'Great call,'" Harvey said. "Hey, he was letting me know I was doing my job.

'We hustled out there. Nobody could tell we weren't regular umps. I really didn't have the butterflies even though there were 47,000 people watching to see if we'd blow one.

"Not only was I the only replacement guy who never went to ump school, I'm the only black," Harvey

He cited his experience in the defunct Senior Professional Baseball League for providing him an opportunity to work in the majors.

"A couple of general managers wrote and praised my work," he said. "He was about as excited as a boy can get when they told him he was going," said Oscar Merthie, 69,

INGLEWOOD, Calif. - Bill Shoemaker, racing's winningest jockey, was in serious condition with 'paralysis of his extremities" Tuesday following a car accident in which authorities said he was under the influence of alcohol Shoemaker "suffered severe injuries, the most critical of which is paralysis of his extremities associated with a fracture and dislocation of his neck" in the crash Monday evening, Inter-Community Medical Center spokesman Dennis Richards said Tuesday, reading from a statement by Shoemaker's wife, Cindy.

The extent of the paralysis was not immediately known since hospital officials said the family wanted no further information released.

Shoemaker, who earlier was listed in critical condition, was transferred Tuesday afternoon to Centinela Hospital Medical Center, a facility known for its expertise in sports medicine and orthorpedic surgery. Richards said Shoemaker's family and personal physician requested the transfer, but refused to release any further information about his injuries.

The 59-year-old Shoemaker, now a trainer at Santa Anita, underwent surgery at Glendora Community Hospital shortly after the crash and was transferred about 5:45 a.m. PDT to Inter-Community.

He was alone in his 1990 Ford Bronco II when the vehicle suddenly veered to the right, careened over the side of State Route 30 and tumbled down a 50-foot embankment, said California Highway Patrol officer Joe Flores. Witnesses said the vehicle appeared to be traveling at about 55 mph.

"It rolled over several times and landed on its wheels," Flores said. "It appears to have rolled over at least two times.

May 4 and 5, the Union Program Council Outdoor Recreation Committee will be the host of four mini-rappelling sessions. There will be a session from 1 to 3 p.m. and from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. each day.

Rappellers put on a seat harness, gloves and a helmet. They then lower themselves down the cement dam while those at the top hold onto the safety rope attached to the rappeller's seat harness.

The entire process takes 5 to minutes, said Doug Schwenk, freshman in architecture and design and cocoordinator of the event.

Five minutes is a conservative estimate, Schwenk said. The longest part is the time it takes for people to psyche themselves up to take that first jump over the edge.

"Putting trust in the rope and the struggle to overcome fear is the hardest part," he said. "It's fun to run down the rope as fast as you can and bounce around.

"People are attracted to danger, and rappelling does give that rush of adrenaline," Schwenk said. "It's only a perceived danger. The way we have it set up, it's completely safe. That's why the organizers are there - to make it safe."

Schwenk and Kevin Boehringer, sophomore in architectural engineering, who also coordinated the event, will give a demonstration on the proper technique to use.

Another incident that happens very often, Sier said, is false alarms at the gate.

"Some students, who study in room 315, put a library book in another student's backpack so when he leaves, the alarm at the gate goes "Once I was checking the study off and it seems like he wanted to steal the book," he said.

But, Sier said most of the serious incidents are a thing of the past. "The library is now the safest place on campus," Sier said. "I've been told that there are some places in the library at Nebraska where women won't go." Sier has been working in the li-

"The reason we put security in was because we expanded the number of hours the library was open," said Jean McDonald, Farrell Library administrative officer. "But, due to budgetary restrictions, we were not able to provide all of the services, from 7:30 a.m. to midnight.

"So, we opted to close down the services and regular staff members leave at 10 at night, and then security staff is responsible from then on,' McDonald said.

succeed in getting agreement of the other parties," Foreign Minis-ter David Levy said, underscoring that Israel's aim was to have direct negotiations with its neighbors on their 43-year conflict.

Secretary of State James Baker welcomed the Israeli move, which came at the start of four days of talks with Mideast leaders, as very constructive.

SCHOOL'S OUT CREDIT'S IN

Now that you're out of college, get some real credit: the Ford/Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program. Dick Edwards can arrange special financing through Ford Credit and $500 cash back from Ford Motor Company.

To qualify you must: graduate with a Bachelor's or advanced degree between October 1, 1989 and December 31, 1991; have a verifiable employment beginning within 120 days of vehicle purchase; have a salary sufficient to cover living expenses as well as a car payment. Although a prior credit history is not necessary, if you have one, it must be satisfactory to Ford Credit.

So take advantage of the Ford/Mercury College Graduate Purchase Program. Now that school's out, you'll find Dick Edward's is the place to be.

Home video business sees slump

Rental industry drops 28 percent since 1st Infantry Division's deployment

MELANIE SCHOENBECK Collegian Reporter

As the novelty of home videos wears off, video stores are being forced to become more business oriented.

Linda Ferguson, owner of Home Cinema, said owners of video stores are seeing changing attitudes in the movie rental business since the video cassette recorder became a common household fixture in the

The first six years of the video business showed tremendous growth because it was something new, she said. People did not have to possess a lot of marketing and business sense to open a video store and instantly make money.

"In the last four years, you have to treat it like a business and think about your marketing," she said. "It is not an easy business anymore. You have to work hard at it."

The video industry is very susceptible to the economic climate of the community, such as the recent deployment of the 1st Infantry Division, Ferguson said.

"If you take 12,000 people out of a community, not only are the big items like cars and furniture affected, I can guarantee that videos are not being rented," she said.

"I have seen about a 28 percent drop in business since the deployment. I contribute a substantial amount of that to the deployment and then compound it with the recession the whole United States is Normally, rentals form yearly patterns. Consistently, April and September are the two worst months of the year. April's lows can be contributed to the nice weather, and September's slow rentals are related to school routines, Ferguson said.

Each month after September, the business gets a little better," she said. "Then there is October, November, December and January and then I will peak out."

Sharon Johns, owner of Johns Ice Cream and Video, said more people rent movies in the winter because there are not as many distractions and activities away from the home.

Ferguson said she can tell when there is an evening of good television. She does not rent out as many movies on those nights. In the past few years, she said those evenings are becoming rare. She said people may not be as happy with what is shown on television.

"The market is definitely much more new-release driven. When the stores began to open, people would come and take anything you had on the shelf simply to take a movie home to watch," she said.

As a result, Ferguson said she is getting movies quicker. It used to be a year from the time the movie left the theater until her store received it. Now it is closer to six months.

'People are thinking more about what they are renting. They are not willing to take just anything. As a purchaser, I have to be aware and recognize that," Ferguson said.

Video cassette renters want the new releases and the big titles, Johns said, and they want good quality movies.

Not many people are renting the actual VCR with the movies, anymore, Ferguson said.

About 72 percent of all households have at least one VCR. In the near future, about 40 percent of all households will have two VCRs, Ferguson said.

"Where else can you see a new movie release for three bucks and have as many people in the room watching it as you want?" Ferguson

Federal documents unit often get little use from K-State students

KIMIS TIMOTHEADIS Contributing Writer

The Government Documents Units, located on the third floor of Farrell Library, is a largely untapped resource for students.

"I tell students to get an idea of the kind of information we have. They should think of the structure of the government and the responsibilities of the departments and agencies within the government," said Doug Bates, KSU Libraries assistant professor and head of the unit.

"The government documents are primarily the product of the departments and agencies doing what they are supposed to do," he said.

Data contained in the unit includes marketing, commerce, the defense department and others.

"For example, we have documents from the Department of Agriculture on agriculural trade, soil surveys, forestry research and more," Bates

"They also ask about the laws, environmental policies, historical information," he said.

All the information comes from the government and remains property of the government.

"We are here to take care of the documents and help the public," Bates said. "The library does not pay for the he found was helpful.

documents; it only pays for salaries, space and equipment.'

Government documents are found by using the indexes in the unit's room and IMPACT, which is a computerized system that includes government publications sent to the library since 1976.

Professors and staff use the unit mostly, but it is open to the public. "We are under the guidelines of the depository library system. We are here to serve the entire public," he said. "I personally believe more people can use it than do use it."

The depository library system was established in 1857 by a resolution that said printed documents could be circulated to the public through official sources.

Bates said according to 1981 sta-tistics, there are about 1,400 depository libraries in the United States.

"But only 14 percent of those select as much as we do - that is, 73.2 percent of available documents. Farrell Library and the University of Kansas Libraries have the largest collections in the state," he said.

Chris Schuele, junior in marketing and resource management, said he does not use the unit very often, but whenever he used it in the past for class assignments, the information

City tax to help K-State

Plan could generate $1.5 million yearly

SCOTT FOWLER

Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan City Commission approved, in a special session, a proposed resolution for a half-cent sales tax increase to benefit K-State.

Mayor Richard Hayter said the commission's vote only represented the first step of four needed to approve the tax.

Because Manhattan is at its maximum sales tax levee, the city must ask the Kansas Legislature for permission to raise sales taxes. If the increase is granted, the commission then would have to vote to put the measure before the people of Manhattan in a referendum.

The increase would raise an estimated $1.5 million a year if ultimately approved.

The commissioners discussed the need of a strong population of students and faculty in the community and agreed K-State's stability and growth was vital.

The commissioners agreed the sales tax increase would have a direct benefit back to the city through sales taxes on purchases by students and

Commissioner Rich Seidler said he was in favor of the resolution, but questioned whether Manhattan residents should provide financial assistance to K-State rather than the state.

Hayter said he hopes to hear how the people of Manhattan feel about the proposal.

"If the Legislature approves this, the commission will have to decide if we really want it," he said. "I anticipate we will start getting feedback immediately. We want to find out what people think they get back, personally, from their investment of sales taxes."

Hayter said the commission envisions the appointment of a board of trustees to oversee the investment of the money. The K-State administration would come to the board with proposed projects, and the board would select those with the best spin off for the city.

He said examples of proposals that might be approved are scholarships, housing and some research programs, if the city's funds would draw matching research grants.

"The bottom line is that we keep growing or steady enrollment at K-

'Last Picture' captures innocent, rowdy spirit

Movie gives timeless tale of growing up

Collegian Reviewer

Peter Bogdanovich captured the innocent yet rowdy spirit of life of an early 1950s small town magnificently in "The Last Picture Show." Released theatrically in 1971, this timeless tale of growing up will be shown this week in the K-State Loved by audiences and critics alike, "The Last Picture Show" is set in Anarene, Texas, population 1,131. Based on the novel by Larry McMurty, director Bogdanovich chose to film the picture entirely in black and white.

The only thing to do in Anarene is to visit the diner, the pool hall or the Royal Theater. All three are owned by Sam the Lion (Ben Johnson), a kind of father figure to Sonny (Timothy Bottoms), the main character.

Sonny's best friend Duane (Jeff Bridges) is going out with Jacy Farrow (Cybil Shepherd), the only good-looking girl in school. To curb their boredom, most residents. of Anarene get involved in sexual

Basically, "The Last Picture Show" is a slice-of-life movie. As the year goes by, we see the development of close to 20 characters in this dead-end town. It's extremely entertaining, and never once does the screenplay border on soap

Since all the characters and performances are first-rate believable, it's easy to get drawn in by the goings-on in their supposedly simple lifestyles. The women never seem to marry the men they love, and never divorce because that's not the way they were brought up.

Jacy seems satisfied only when she's being talked about. She's convinced being a virgin is a bad thing, and she wants to be the first to lose her virginity because it will make her rise up above the rest of the girls in town.

Her innocent, yet determined, naivety is endlessly amusing. Unlike most movies, the humor in "The Last Picture Show," derives from the characters and the attitudes that were so common for that

The conclusion of "The Last Picture Show" shows the end of two eras. As the lives of Anarene's high-school seniors drift apart, the audiences quit going to the Royal to see feature films. With the advent of television and a more promising football season starting, the residents just have better things to

Stress, fitness relationship study wins national award

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter Karla Kubitz, assistant professor of physical education and leisure studies, received a national award for her dissertation.

This award is given every year by the Sports Psychology Academy, which is a part of the American Alliance for Health, Physical Education, Recreation and Dance, Kubitz

Her dissertation, completed at Arizona State University, was a study of two things, she said.

One part was addressing how fitness helps people handle psychological stress. The other was a question of what fitness does to the nervous system to help it respond, or recover, from stress.

To conduct her studies, Kubitz said she monitored 28 people - half in one semester, half in another. Each subject came in three times a week

A group of the volunteers, she said, was a control group and had to do nothing. The others exercised on stationary bicycles at a level according to their own personal fitness.

Many of the people, she said, volunteered because they knew they would get in shape. Others did it for extra credit in classes.

Kubitz said she measured each person's brainwave activity with a physiograph and also measured their fitness level.

Both groups were given stress tests, which are designed to put them under pressure for quick answers,

The results, Kubitz said, were that people in exercise programs recover faster from psychological stress, have lower resting levels and are more efficient in responding to

To enter the competition for this award, Kubitz said, she submitted a three-page abstract to the Sports Psychology Academy summarizing and explaining her 80-page dissertation.

On March 22, Kubitz received an official letter from the Academy saying she had won the competition. She said she recently received a plaque for her accomplishment.

"I was pleased, but not surprised," she said. "I thought I had a good chance to win." The program at Arizona has a reputation for winning this award, Kubitz received her doctorate in exercise science with a concentration in sports psychology from Arizona State, her master's in human development from the University of Texas in Dallas and her bachelor's in education from the University of West Florida.

At K-State, she said, she teaches The Sporting Mind, Measurement and Evaluation in Exercise Science, and Social and Psychological Dimensions of Physical Activity.

Nancy Bouchier, assistant professor in physical education and leisure studies, works with Kubitz.

"She has a strong academic background and is in a fascinating line of research," Bouchier said.

Lobbyists oppose bill to increase state income tax by $120 million

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - Bankers and businessmen Tuesday opposed a bill to raise state income tax to give more money to school districts, warning lawmakers to be wary of tax increases in the guise of property tax

"The money would not reduce property taxes, but simply keep 1991 property taxes at their 1990 level," said Bob Corkins, lobbyist for the Kansas Chamber of Commerce and

Corkins was one of several people who testified before the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee on the bill that would increase individual and corporate income taxes and privilege taxes paid by financial

The almost $120 million raised by the tax increase would be distributed to school districts. The money would be spent to prevent increases in their property tax mill levies.

"For many years, Kansas has had the highest rate on corporate income in our five-state region," Corkins said. "Our current base tax rate and surtax (for higher incomes) have been in effect since 1970.'

Bernie Koch, lobbyist for the Wichita Area Chamber of Commerce, told the committee that many companies sought property tax relief last

"I don't think they will be thanking you for this solution," he said.

Education lobbyists warned that without the income tax increase, school districts will have to increase property taxes or lay off teachers, putting an end to whatever reform measures the Legislature has taken in recent years.

Varney's adds on warehouse space

Wednesday, April 10, 1991

Collegian Reporter

The new structure being built around Varney's may cause a few people to lose a parking space or two, but warehouse space for books will take the gain.

Varney's is once again expanding - with a warehouse facility to the west of the existing building that is now under construction.

The warehouse will have a receiving area to unpack merchandise, check it in and price it, said Dan Walter, textbook manager.

Walter said the space is needed. He also said he remembers when shipments came in when he first started working at Varney's in

"We filled up all the aisles upstairs where all the customers should be," he said. "There was just basically no area to unpack things." For the last five years, Varney's has rented out storage space to receive merchandise, Walter said.

"It is a better financial investment to build a better space than to continue paying rent," he said.

Rich Penner, assistant text book manager, said a centralized storage space helps for better control of inventory, which should help employees know what is available for Penner said at Varney's there is a lot to do before fall and after Christmas - these are the times when space is most needed. The store rented out a trailer last December for additional storage.

The board of directors has been discussing the expansion for the last two years, Walter said.

Varney's first wanted to expand westward in 1963. At the time, a sandwich shop blocked expansion to the west, so the option was either to expand upstairs or underground.

After asking around, Varney's found students complained about walking upstairs for books, but not downstairs. The store decided to build what is now the textbook area underground, Walter said.

The expansion upstairs will be exactly on top of the underground textbook area, since the dimensions are basically the same, he said.

Construction started March 11 and is expected to be finished before

Bill Schardein, R.M. Baril General Contractor Inc., prepares to nail a support brace on the new warehouse space being constructed behind Varney's Book Store Tuesday afternoon. Construction started March 11 and is expected to be finished before summer school.

K-State learns Disney's methods Senate

Housing to use employee, customer public service principles Disney is convenience.

LAURA BIRRELL

Collegian Reporter

K-State departments learned about the magic of Disney corporations customer services in a presentation by Chuck Werring, director of housing, Tuesday. Werring said the program he attended was four days long and the quality of Disney was studied by the participants. He said he thought some of the principles that Disney uses with its customers and employees can be adapted to K-State. K-State, he said, needs to think what can be done in areas of public service. "To apply Disney's methods," Werring said, "we need to think about two things: We're not a bottomless pit of money, Disney corporaAnd, we need to measure higher education versus an entrepreneur and entertainment environment. Disney approaches operation differently.

"Facts are negotiable, perceptions are not. We can negotiate facts, but not perceptions.'

Perception is very important when K-State is recruiting new students, Werring said. Perception is also important when the University is the host of the open house. One thing Disney does that Wer-ring suggested for K-State to do is to segment customers - students, faculty and parents. "If we have something for everybody they are more apt to be pleased with K-State and want to come back," he said.

Werring also spoke about Dis- that can be related to K-State from

"I found out later that Disney doesn't consider any customer a difficult person," Werring said. "The people at Disney are there to please the customer."

He said Disney administration will not tolerate any lack of courtesy on the part of their employees. Their policy is to always be smiling and Safety and security are also very important to Disney and likewise, important to K-State, Werring said. K-State needs to emphasize to students and parents how safe the University's campus is.

Another program, Werring said,

He said K-State needs to make sure the message it portrays is one that will bring people back.

"An amazing thing about Disney is that before you get on the first ride you come in contact with 10 people," Werring said. "When people come to K-State they come into contact with a lot of people, we need to make these connections count."

As an institution, said Pat Bosco, vice president for institutional advancement, K-State is very student

"We lean toward the student and there might be some things we can do in these areas to improve," Bosco said. "As an institution the market is tough and we have to position ourselves well to survive. We are having tough times now because we have more students, but not more

Most of the debate was concerning the Associated Students of Kansas. ASK is a student lobbying organiza-

The amendment was rejected. Among the eight other amendments, Senate will consider an increase in the salaries of the ASK director and

Only three of those amendments were voted on Tuesday before Senate recessed until Thursday.

Before the recess, Senate rejected a request for funding to buy subscriptions to the Topeka Capital-Journal and student newspapers from other regents schools and a proposal to pay for lodging for ASK policy meeting.

Officials have termed a fire that gutted a bike shop in Aggieville early Wednesday morning

The Riley County Police Department and the Manhattan Fire Department received calls shortly before 5 a.m. of a fire, which was originally believed to be near a trash dumpster in the alley between Aggie Bike Station and Hardees on north Manhattan Avenue.

"I was taking some trash out and noticed a bunch of boxes next to the dumpster were on fire," said Steve Anderson, assistant manager of the Hardees. "I came back in and immediately called 911."

Moments later, it was evident the fire had spread to the bike shop, he said. Smoke spilled out the edges of the shop's roof and through the front window - flames could be seen raging out of control.

Several homes, which were initially in danger, were evacuated, but the residents were later allowed

Most of the fire on the ground level was under control within the hour, but firefighters discovered the entire roof was still ablaze. They used a chainsaw and ax to open up the front portion of the roof, and the the rest of the fire was controlled by

"All we can say is that it is obviously being considered suspicious and is under investigation," said Battalion Fire Chief Jack Roets.

An official report has not yet been completed, so additional information about the cause or details of the fire is unavailable. Roets said he expected a complete report to be available by Thursday morning.

Damage estimates have not yet been released, but the shop's owners, Lu and Ray Willingham, said the inventory alone was valued at about $200,000. Most of the inventory appeared to be lost, and the building suffered severe damage.

The Willinghams said the structure and inventory were insured for about $110,000.

Secretary of Defense Dick Cheney will propose closing between two and three dozen military bases across the United States at a press conference about noon

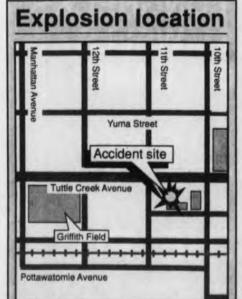

Cheney is also expected to propose the closing of more foreign bases used by U.S. forces. The proposed closings have

An attempt to recycle Army scrap metal sent a Manhattan man to the hospital with shrapnel and burn injuries Wednesday.

Officer Gary Hannes, of the Riley County Police Department Bomb Unit, said employees at Howie's Recycling at 626 S. 10th St. were smelting down scrap military ordnance when the explosion occurred just before 4 p.m. Wednesday.

A 22-year-old employee at Howie's, Derek McMullen, 1106 Ratone, suffered burns and shrapnel wounds and is hospitalized at The Saint Mary Hospital in serious condition.

At the scene, Capt. Nick Edvy, RCPD, said apparently an explosive charge remained in the scrap material.

The RCPD and Fort Riley investigators want to know how and from whom the material was obtained, he said.

After the explosion, traffic on Fort Riley Boulevard, a half block north of Howie's, was rerouted and a four-block area was evacuated out of fear additional shells might explode, Edvy said.

"There was the potential for damage, with propane the danger was quite real," he said. The explosion threw shapnel around the neighborhood, Edvy said.

The RCPD and Fort Riley investigators want to know how and from whom the material was obtained, he said.

After the explosion, traffic on Fort Riley Boulevard, a half block north of Howie's, was rerouted and a four-block area was evacuated out of fear additional shells might explode, Edvy said.

"There was the potential for damage, with propane the danger was quite real," he said. The explosion threw shapnel around the neighborhood, Edvy said.

Oueen Elizabeth to watch Orioles

Thursday, April 11, 1991

BALTIMORE (AP) - Queen Elizabeth II and Prince Philip will watch the Orioles play ball May 15, and it may be a first, said a royal spokesman.

They will be guests of Orioles owner Eli Jacobs and will watch the baseball game from his box, team spokesman Rick Vaughn said Tuesday. President Bush may accompany the royal couple to the game, he said.

"I don't think they've ever been to a baseball game before," said Michael Price, spokesman for the British Embassy in Washington.

Department cracks down on criminals

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - U.S. Attorneys from Kansas and the Western District of Missouri today announced a Justice Department crackdown aimed at the most dangerous criminals who

The program, dubbed "project trigger-lock," seeks to better coordinate efforts between federal and local law enforcement agencies to imprison drug traffickers, gang members and what they called habitual criminals who use firearms to commit crimes.

Jean Paul Bradshaw II, U.S. Attorney for the Western District of Missouri, and Lee Thompson, U.S. Attorney for Kansas, coordinated their announcement in Kansas City with more than 90 of their counterparts across the country.

"This initiative is to get the most dangerous armed offenders off the street and into prison," Bradshaw said.

The program does not involve enactment of any new laws, the officials said.

Gay rights advocates protest rules

LAWRENCE (AP) — About 40 gay rights advocates demonstrated Wednesday at the University of Kansas campus to protest a Department of Defense policy toward homosexuals.

Members and supporters of the Gay and Lesbian Services of Kansas and campus organizations criticized the federal agency's policy of prohibiting homosexuals from being commissioned, particularly in officer training programs.

Del Shankel, executive vice chancellor, said the administration supported the protestors.

The demonstration in Lawrence was coordinated with other protests held nationwide Wednesday. The half-hour protest took place in front of the university administration building. Advocates carried placards and chanted slogans, including,

"We're here, we're there, we're everywhere. And we're not going

Greg Hughes, a spokesman for the student Senate executive committee, said the campus legislative body favored an end to discrimination against homosexuals.

Finney to play harp on TV show

TOPEKA (AP) - Gov. Joan Finney is expected to have a national TV audience Friday - for her music.

A 45-second tape of Finney playing her harp is scheduled to be broadcast on "CBS This Morning" at 8:30 a.m. CST. The gover-nor will be performing the show's theme, "Oh What a Beautiful Morning" from the musical, "Oklahoma."

The network asks its local affiliates to provide tape of celebrities performing the show's theme song. In this case, WIBW-TV in Topeka filmed Finney last week at Cedar Crest, the governor's residence.

Jill Bernstein, a network spokeswoman, said she thinks it is the first time a governor has played a harp - or any instrument for that matter — on the morning show.

"Why should Spencer have the corner on waking up to the governor?" said Martha Walker, Finney's press secretary, referring to the governor's husband.

Manhattan man dies from gunshot

MANHATTAN - A 64-year-old man was discovered dead in his home at about 9:40 a.m. Wednesday. A news release from the Riley County Police Department said he had apparently committed suicide.

The RCPD information said Thomas J. Abbott died of a selfinflicted gunshot wound.

Abbott's wife, Shirley, summoned police to the residence. RCPD Lt. Scott Campbell said an autopsy was performed Wednesday afternoon and final results of autopsy tests were pending.

Texas man held on $500,000 bail

WICHITA (AP) - A Texas man was being held in lieu of $500,000 bail Wednesday in the wounding of a state trooper and the abduction of a suburban Wichita woman.

Maurice Kimsey, 48, already faces concurrent life sentences in Texas. He made his initial appearance on the Kansas charges Wednesday in Sedgwick County District Court.

Kimsey pleaded guilty in Texas to two counts of aggravated robbery for holdups of a grocery store and a Wal-Mart in Waco.

A Texas prosecutor said Kimsey is a worse criminal than anyone he has sent to death row.

Emporia man charged in murder

EMPORIA (AP) - An Emporia man has been charged with first-degree murder in the shooting death last week of a woman. Bobby Young, 48, was charged Tuesday in Lyon County District Court with first-degree murder in the shooting death of Carol J. Dorsey, 53, whom police described as his common-law wife.

Magistrate Judge Francis Towle set bond at $100,000. Young is accused of shooting Dorsey once in the head April 4 at their home in Emporia. A police affidavit said Young called the emergency number after the shooting and "stated that he had just shot his wife Investigators said he later denied the shooting.

Engineers' club requests $1,655 for new budget

Senate to consider group's bill

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

The Illumination Engineering Society will go before Student Senate tonight for the first reading of a bill that will add $1,655 to its budget if passed.

IES is comprised of 47 members who have common interests in lighting and illumination.

Clarence Waters, IES adviser, said the money will be used to fund technical sessions, guest speakers, to conduct IES business and to fund a trip for three members to a conference in Montreal, Canada.

John Lewis-Smith, senior in architectural engineering and IES president, said the conference, which will take the most money, will be worthwhile because IES can make contacts from which they can receive

The K-State IES chapter is the largest in the nation.

Last fall, in conjunction with the Campus Safety Task Force, IES spent more than 170 man-hours taking light meter readings along all the pedestrian walkways on campus.

Lewis-Smith said the project helped the K-State Facilities Division with its work and helped the IES members with their lighting and electrical classes.

'IES gave Facilities enough information on lighting to last at least three years," he said.

Waters said the group is asking for money because it spent so much time working on the light readings, did not have much time to raise money on its own, and because it has saved K-State a lot of time and money.

IES has talked with Facilities about starting a program in which a group would go out on a monthly basis and check campus lighting, he said. IES would then notify Facilities about burned out lights and overgrown shrubbery blocking the

"If facilities would have hired a firm to take the light readings, it would have been extremely expensive," Dieringer said.

Dieringer said he hopes senators are responsive to the bill and get a grasp of the IES program and its volunteer effort.

"With the help of IES, we have gained new ground in communication links between students and Facilities," he said.

Revision to increase salaries

CHRISSY VENDEL

Staff Reporter

House action is scheduled to take place today on a bill amended to include salary increases for K-State employees.

The revised bill would appropriate money for classified employee longevity bonuses and increased salaries for both classified and unclassified employees. Classified jobs include civil service positions, and unclassified employees consist mainly of faculty.

Mary Sutton, a K-State Controller's Office accountant, said the longevity bonuses would be awarded to classified employees who have been employed at the University for at least 10 years and is a direct attempt to retain experienced employees.

"If we lose a well-experienced employee, it could take two people to fill the position," she said. "They need an incentive to stay at the University.'

Wayne Nafzinger, professor of economics and president of the Faculty Senate, said the amendments are needed to keep K-State from losing competitiveness.

"If we get a zero percent increase, we'll find a number of faculty, disproportionately nationally reputed ones, leaving K-State for other options," he said. ..

Nafzinger said faculty members understand state budget limitations and would rather see increased taxes to fund higher education.

"Not getting the increase would have an adverse impact on morale and retention," he said.

Sue Peterson, assistant to President Wefald, said students and faculty alike need to let their representatives know that they support the amendments.

Erosion of rights began in Reagan years

he recent gulf war and the Bush ad-ministration's superb example of how to control the flow of information in times of crisis is the culmination of the tireless efforts of Bush's old boss, Ronald Reagan, to erode First Amendment rights. Jamie Kalven, editor of "A Worthy Tradition: Freedom of Speech in America" by Harry Kalven Jr., cites a number of compelling examples to support such an

■ In 1982, President Reagan signed an executive order that substantially enlarged the power of government officials to withhold information from the public on national security grounds. In effect, the Reagan order directed officials to err in the direction of secrecy. It deleted the requirement that officials balance the need for secrecy against the public's right to know; the requirement that material only be classified if its disclosure could reasonably be expected to cause "identifiable damage" to the national security; and the requirement that the status of classified material be reviewed after six years. Instead, it required officials to classify material as secret, if they have "reasonable doubt" as to whether it should be kept secret. And, it permitted the reclassification of material that had been previously released.

■ A major target of the Reagan administration was the Freedom of Information Act, the primary vehicle for enforcing public access to government documents. By relaxing the standards governing classification, as described above, the administration effectively limited the reach of the act.

■ The prosecution of Samuel Morison, vigorously pursued by the Reagan administration, created the basis for a de facto official secrets act. Morison, a civilian intelligence analyst employed by the U.S. Navy, was convicted under the Espionage Act of 1917 for giving classified material, which had been previously published in "Jane's Fighting Ships," a British publication. In the past, the espionage statutes had been understood to apply solely to those who passed government secrets to a foreign enemy. After the Morison decision, the definition of espionage could potentially be extended to the authorized release to the press - and the public - of any information alleged by the government to be sensitive. In October, 1988, the Supreme Court declined to set aside the Morison conviction.

■ In the mid-1970s, efforts were made by the Ford and Carter administrations to place legal restrictions on the activities of the CIA and FBI. Upon assuming office, the Reagan administration moved sharply in the opposite direction. It expanded the domestic role of the CIA, and it lifted the restraints that had been placed on the FBI. One example is the three-year investigation by the FBI of the Committee in Solidarity with the People of El policy in Central America. ■ The Reagan administration repeatedly barred foreign critics from entering the United States to address and interact with American audiences. It did so under the authority of the McCarran-Walter Act, enacted in the darkest hours of the McCarthy era, which includes provisions that empower the government to deny admission to foreigners because of their political beliefs. The administration also employed economic embargo authority to restrict the travel of U.S. citizens to "unfriendly" countries, such as Cuba, Libya, and Iran.

The Reagan administration pressed the scientific community to adopt restrictions on the communication — via publication and collegial exchange — of unclassified technical and scientific data deemed of potential military or industrial value to the Soviet Union and other nations. These efforts were premised on the so-called mosaic theory of information, according to which bits of information that are harmless in isolation may be pieced together in such a way that their disclosure would be harmful. This orientation yields a security logic of potentially boundless reach.

■ The Reagan administration took a variety of actions that reduced the information function of government. It cut back sharply on government publications. It cut the budgets of institutions charged with husbandry of information. And the Office of Management and Budget initiated a policy of using the private sector to disseminate government information — often at greatly increased cost to consumers of that information.

■ The most enduring legacy of the Reagan administration may prove to be President Reagan's appointments to the Supreme Court and the federal judiciary at large. He appointed more than half of the federal judges currently on the bench. And those judges were chosen by a selection process of unprecendented clarity of purpose, which was to bring about an enhanced conservative bias to our judicial system.

In an unprecedented departure from the traditions of a free press, the Reagan administration barred the press from reporting the 1983 invasion of Grenada. For the first several days, the only source of information about the course of the invasion was the admi-

Finally, through years of careful planning, the pay-off in information control was the recent Persian Gulf War, in which the American public and press were fed news of the war under a stringent system of censorship in which print and television combat coverage was carried out exclusively through groups of reporters assembled and escorted by a special military newsmedia officer.

The effort to control information on this scale represents something more than the pursuit of legitimate security. It is a form of governance directed not at hostile foreign powers but at U.S. citizens. The objective is not to stop the practice of leaking, but to exercise control over it. It is not to stop the flow of information, but to direct that flow in such a way that the administration's policies are advanced without the full knowledge or consent of the American people.

ast month, a federal judge refused to order the military to allow public and press access to the arrival of coffins of the dead from the Persian Gulf War citing, "There are reasons to exclude the public from the area."

At last, we have arrived at the point where even the dead are of vital concern to national

K-State needs open records

Equal justice has made its way onto college campuses.

In what may be a precedentsetting decision, a federal judge ruled last month that it was unconstitutional for a college to withhold campus crime reports from the public.

The decision was reached after the editor of the student newspaper at Southwest Missouri State University sued the college for blocking access to campus police reports.

In court, school officials argued it would be an invasion of students' privacy and might keep victims from reporting crimes if they released those reports. The university also said it risked losing federal money if it leaked reports.

Ah, that's what it's about. Money, and losing it.

Because making campus crime reports public, like offcampus crime reports are, would mean admitting that crimes do in fact occur on college campuses.

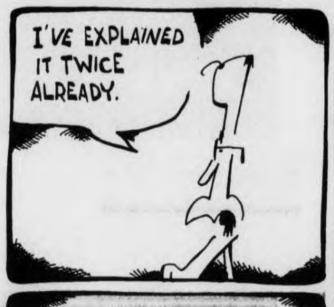

And that would damage the package sold to parents and prospective students - a package of an education, campus housing, and social and job opportunities all wrapped up with campus security.

If the public had access to police reports, it would actually be able to compare the safety of various colleges before sending a student to one. Colleges nationwide would have to be responsible to the public it is supposed to serve - the students.

Campus police would have to provide crime reports on past crimes and statistics to show just how safe a campus is, whereas right now, we are just told it is safe. Isn't it about time we were shown?

The U.S. Department of Education is trying to have the decision overturned, and a ruling on the department's request is pending. But the U.S. District Court has already made it clear that equal justice and equal access should apply even to students - because we're the ones who buy the package the University sells.

Brady bill wouldn't stop them

he headline of the Handgun Control, Inc. advertisement reads, "A $29 handgun shattered my family's life." The quote is from Sarah Brady, the wife of James Brady, who was shot during the assassination attempt on President Reagan in 1981. She later states, "Given time, the police could have caught the lie, and put him (John Hinkley) in jail."

The truth is, gun-control laws are a proven failure in reducing violent crime in the United States. Waiting periods and background checks would not have stopped Hinkley or numerous other criminals who have become famous for violent acts against the innocent.

Cities with strict gun-control laws have a higher crime rate than cities with weak ones. In fact, there is often an increase in violent crime after the enactment of stricter guncontrol laws. Compare the results of those areas where crime was countered by aggresive self-defense training with the places that enacted firearms restrictions. The Brady bill currently before Congress would not have prevented the tragic shooting of Brady and Reagan. Hinkley was arrested in 1980 in Nashville for attempting to pass through airport security with handguns in his baggage. He was charged with and convicted for a misdemeanor only. The handguns were confiscated, and he paid a small fine. Law enforcement officials checked Hinkley's background through the National Crime Information Center and found no criminal history. His arrest and conviction of 1980 was a misdemeanor, not a felony, thus he was still eligible to legally purchase firearms. In October 1980, Hinkley bought two .22 caliber revolvers in Dallas. Five months later, one of these revolvers was used in the attack on Reagan. Hinkley used a valid Texas driver's license and was listed in a Lubbock, Texas, telephone directory. Hinkley was not charged with any violations of state or federal laws regarding the purchase of the handgun used in Other examples of the failure of waiting periods and background checks can be found in other highly publicized shootings.

Laurie Dann, who attacked school children in Illinois, was issued a permit of purchase after a waiting period and background check. Patrick Purdy purchased handguns lawfully in California under a 15-day waiting period and background check. Joseph Wesbecker purchased firearms months before his attack at Standard Gravure Corp. in Louisville, Ky. James Pough, who killed nine people in Jacksonville, Fla., could legally pass any background check for the purchase of firearms. A judge ordered Pough's long criminal record wiped clean after Pough served five years of probation. (Pough had been charged with manslaughter).

None of these criminals would have been prevented from carrying out their tragic acts by the Brady bill. All of them purchased their firearms well in advance of their crimes. None had existing criminal records to disqualify them from firearms purchases.

In areas with strict gun-control laws, the crime rate is almost invariably higher. Why? Perhaps criminals know their victims are less likely to have the means to defend themselves. New York City, Washington, D.C., and Chicago are cities with tough gun-control laws that prove this point.

New York City, with 3 percent of the U.S. opulation, accounts for 15 percent of the nation's gun-related robberies and more homicides than the total of 24 other states homicides. Washington boasts a virtual handgun ban, yet between 1976-82 violent crimes rose 48 percent, while the national increase averaged 22 percent. Chicago's violent crime rate rose 160 percent between 1982-88, while the national rate rose only 15 percent during this period. If gun-control laws are effective in reducing crime, why didn't they work in these cities? The fact is, gun-control laws make life safer for the criminal, not for the law-abiding

In theory, the enactment of gun-control laws should have an immediate and lasting effect on crime. However, crimes seem to flourish after restrictions are placed on the private ownership of firearms. Violent crime in California has increased by 225 percent since its first waiting period of two days began in 1965. California has since increased the waiting period/background time to 15 days with no apparent effect on crime rates. Similar statistics can be shown in relation to laws enacted in Connecticut, Washington, Wisconsin, Rhode Island and New York.

Compare the results gained when private citizens are trained in the use of firearms and encouraged to act in their own defense. In Orlando, Fla., rape increased from 12.8 per 100,000 citizens in 1965 to 35.9 per 100,000 in 1966. The police organized a highly publicized handgun training program for women, running from October 1966 through April 1967. One year later, the rape rate had dropped to 4.1 per 100,000 citizens. Rape rates increased elsewhere in the state.

Similar programs for merchants or women in Detroit and Highland Park, Mich., and Montgomery, Ala., also obtained similar drops in crime. If you are a rapist or a robber, where would you feel safest? In a city where potential victims were armed and well trained or where citizens had no means to defend themselves?

aiting periods and background checks have no real effect on crime. Criminals are not impressed by gun-control laws. They routinely ignore them, as they do other laws. The evidence should be clear to everyone that gun-control laws do not reduce violent crime. In fact, it could be argued that they contribute to the criminal's welfare. If you were a criminal looking for an easy victim, where would you go?

Another perspective

Many high-school graduates and their parents envision college campuses as serene dreamlands of academic stimulation and platonic delight.

At least, that's what the brochures promise. Then some students find out that the real world beyond the brick and ivy occasionally creeps onto campus.

Students, like real people, can become victims of crime, including rape. Other students, like real people, commit crimes — including date rape - against their peers.

A bill in Congress would eliminate some of the myth's legal footing by forcing colleges to make regular reports of crime statistics.

But the other side of accountability is day-to-day crime reporting by police and college newspapers. Some university papers are having trouble getting such information. As a result, a mistaken perception often exists.

Traci Bauer, editor of the Southwest Missouri State University paper, was forced to sue the university for information on a basketball player involved in an alleged rape. Bauer won her case last week.

But newspaper editors should not have to go to court. The crime information they seek is a public record. It should be up to the ethical discretion of editors, not the prior restraint of police chiefs, to decide what appears in print.

Pizza company president speaks about franchising, management

SUZANNE BROWN Collegian Reporter

Gene Bicknell, president and CEO of National Pizza Co., based in Pittsburg, is visiting K-State as a guest of the College of Human Ecology, but he has spoken not only to human ecology classes, but also to students in the College of Business. Wednesday morning, Bicknell spoke with the Small Business Organizations class about franchising, and in the afternoon, Bicknell spoke with students in a hotel restaurant management course.

Barbara Stowe, dean of the College of Human Ecology, organized Bicknell's visit.

"He had visited several years ago and really enjoyed it," Stowe said.

"He volunteered to come back and present lectures on franchising. Bicknell is particularly interested in some of the research that is developing on solid waste management because that is a very serious problem in the hospitality industry.'

Due to the extreme growth in franchise businesses, Bicknell said, it has become more of a household word. He told students he hoped the information conveyed through his lecture would help them make a decision as to whether they may want to own a franchise someday.

"A franchise offers those who like business to take that opportunity and be successful at it, because it is a tried and true process," Bicknell said.

"A franchise can be found in almost any good and service. At the present time, franchises control 34 percent of retail sales, which is $550 billion, that's a 58 percent increase in the last 10 years. By the year 2000, it is predicted that 50 percent of retail sales will be from franchises."

Bicknell said a franchise gives the owner the exclusive right to license and distribute goods or services in specific geographic areas.

Brand-name appeal is one of the biggest benefits of the franchise, he said. An established product and brandname are being sold, so a business can get off to a quick start.

Other benefits of owning a franchise, Bicknell said, included the national advertising available for the business, and the financial assistance and the experience gained from working in the franchise business.

But, there are disadvantages, Bicknell said, that go along with being in the franchise business. The fact that profits are shared, strict regulations sometimes placed on the franchise and equity and capital must be generated, are a few of these.

"You're going to make mistakes in business, it's a natural way in performing our lives," Bicknell said. "I have spent a lot of money on businesses that haven't always been successful, but, that's part of being an entrepreneur."

Evan Kenney, junior in business, said, "It was a very interesting lecture. His (Bicknell's) information on franchising gave me a better idea of what it's all about."

Bicknell's concluding lecture will be at 8:30 Friday a.m. in Throckmor-

Helping people become more aware of the handicapped is what the Ability Games are all about.

"The games give individuals who participate an opportunity to experience those barriers of the handicapped and helps them become more conscious of the needs of another facet of the population," said Tom Leikam, senior in journalism and mass communications.

"A lot of people think of different races or cultures when they think of multicultural, but the handicapped are also part of this cultural diversity," said Lynnette Matthews, graduate in college student personnel services and program coordinator of services for students with physical limitations.

Matthews said the games are a good way to strive for diversity on

Last year, five teams with 10 members each came to experience the obstacles handicapped people face daily, and so far, five teams have registered this year.

Matthews said participants in the wheelchair race must stay between the lines and take their chair forward, backward in a T shape and over a small board. She said the board represents a crack in the sidewalk.

"It's not as easy as some might think," she said.

The word scramble game is an event to acquaint team members with how someone with dyslexia may read. Team members must unscramble a few paragraphs in which the words are jumbled. Matthews said timed. The fastest time wins," said dyslexics may read B's when they

"A handicap can be anything, as small as a slur, that distinguishes you from society," he said. "Now I know what kids who have disabilities go through and how they feel when others make fun of them. The Ability

Games help others become aware of this, too.'

Leikam, president of Students For Handicapped Concerns, one of the games' sponsors, said he hopes the games help the non-handicapped become more aware of the obstacles a handicapped individual has to go through in everyday life.

"It's remarkable how different it is for someone in a wheelchair," Jones said. "Accessibility to bathrooms and drinking fountains is like a reallife obstacle course."

The Ability Games will be from 1 to 3 p.m. Saturday in Ahearn.

Dotted lines still blank for 'Cats

From Staff and Wire Reports

Day one of the national signing period for high school and junior college basketball players passed with-out any word from K-State coach Dana Altman on additions to the Wildcats' roster.

Altman was reportedly on the road throughout the day Wednesday paying final visits to recruits, but Kenny Mossman, sports information director, said no signings had been confirmed.

The 'Cats have at least four scholarships to give after landing McPherson High School guard Brian Henson and forward George Hill of Fair Hope, Ala., in the early signing

Among those K-State was believed to be in the hunt for were Trasel Rone, a 6-foot-6 swingman from Allen County Community College and Vincent Jackson, a 6-foot-3 guard from Moberly (Mo.) Junior College.

Jackson, who was the Greyhounds' most valuable player on an 18-14 team, averaged 21 points and Pauley averaged 21.3 points, 9.3 shot 62 percent from the field. He led Lincoln High School in East St. Louis, Ill., to three state titles during his prep career.

Other schools reportedly recruiting Jackson are Florida State, Southwest Missouri State and SIU-Carbondale.

NCAA Turnament runner-up Kansas completed its recruiting class by signing Eric Pauley, a 6-10 forward and center from Cypress (Carebounds and 2.7 blocked shots per game at Cypress last season. Pauley, who shot 64 percent from the field, will be a junior at Kansas. Wichita State announced the signings of John Smith, South Carolina's Class 3A player of the year, and Dedric Craft, Smith's teammate at A.C. Flora High School in Columbia, S.C. The signings bring to five the number of players who have signed letters of intent to play for Wichita State.

Shortened spring concerns Snyder; Workouts reduced from 22 to 15

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

College football teams have a shorter period to answer questions they face this spring, and the dilemma even worries the Big Eight Conference coach of the year.

NCAA legislation that was intended to increase the emphasis on academics shortened the spring season from 35 days to 22 and the number of practice days from 22 days to

To adapt to the new schedule, which begins Saturday, K-State will add an extra day of practice each week and will reduce practice in pads to 10 days. Non-contact workouts will be reduced to five days.

The reduction of practice time will limit emphasis on repetition and will eliminate work on some things the squad deems crucial, said Coach Bill Snyder, who guided the team to a 5-6 mark last season, its best since 1982.

"This spring will be different in a couple of ways due to the reduction in our amount of practice time and the number of days we have to get it in," Snyder said. "That has a definite different, but it's important that our effect. There are some things that we will have to pass on until the fall, and other things will receive a lighter degree of repetition.'

Because of the history of the program and the unique obstacles it faces, losing time on the practice field may have a more negative effect on the progress of the K-State football team than it might have on others, Snyder

"At K-State, we need to do more than what other people do. Our program is special, and we need to treat it that way," Snyder said.

"That extra time we can spend making ourselves better is crucial to us. Losing it is a concern for me, and I'm not sure of just how it's going to work out.'

Because there is not the weekly challenge of an upcoming game, motivating the team is different, but no less important, Snyder said. He said competition for positions, however, and the prospect of further improvement as a team should serve as sufficient motivation.

"I think the spring is immensely players, as well as our coaches, honestly believe that we have to be competitive at this time of year.

"We have to be more highly motivated in the spring than virtually any other football team in the country, because we have more that we have to accomplish.

One of the main concerns for Snyder is the adjustments he has made in his staff since the past season. The loss of defensive coordinator Bob Cope and the adjustments that followed have caused concern for a K-State unit that held opponents to the fewest total yards since 1985.

Snyder said the spring is as important for the coaches moving into new positions as it is for the players, but said he feels comfortable with the changes made since last season.

The spring allows players to improve fundamentally and to grow more comfortable with the system, while the coaches get a better look at the skills of each individual, Snyder said. The staff's aim is to develop quality and depth at every position and a basic feel for the lineup for next season, he said.

Such an atmosphere will give players who have not seen a great deal of action an opportunity to prove themselves under the close scrutiny of the staff, Snyder said. For last season's recruiting class, many of whom were redshirted in the fall, the spring presents the first opportunity compete for playing time.

"I assure you that our young players will compete very strongly this spring and there's many of them that have a real chance to have the kind of success that they want to have," Snyder said.

"Probably the strongest thing about that recruiting class is that they're a very competitive group of young guys. I expect that group will have a big impact in the coming season.

'Sometimes it's in the spring that guys are just starting to get their feet under them and realize they can compete on this level," Snyder said. "Our spring is so short that just when they get going, it's over. But it gets them ready to give a great effort over the summer and be ready to step forward in the fall,"

He has experienced athletics on almost every level in addition to participating in most sports available to

"I've had a chance to do a lot of different things," Elliott said. "I played professional baseball, I've coached football at Washburn for a couple of years, and I've been the golf pro at Ottawa, Lawrence, and at very nice course in Greensboro,

The coaching addition has aided in the recent emergence of the team, a fact that surprised Elliott.

When I came in, Coach Bunker told me that there was a lot of potential, but the team had never finished out of the Big Eight cellar, so I wasn't expecting much," Elliott said. "But the girls have played well and finished toward the front of all their meets and they are surprising a lot of people."

Coaching women has proven to be an interesting challenge to Elliott. "Coaching girls is different from coaching boys because unlike boys, girls are more concerned with how they feel about the way they play instead of how well they score," Elliott

AUGUSTA, Ga. - Nick Faldo, the tall Englishman with the elegant swing, will be seeking an unprecedented third consecutive Masters title, and the famed green jacket that goes to the winner of the first of the year's four major golf championships.

"I'm not thinking of defending, or repeating," he said. "I'm just thinking of playing 72 holes of good golf.

"Of course I want to win. That's what I'll be trying to do. But to do that, I have to play good golf. That's what I was trying to do last year. My approach this year is the same."

Faldo, now recognized as the most outstanding player in the world, pointed to five men as the major stumbling blocks in his quest for a replacement.

"Woosie," he said. That's Ian Woosnam, the 5-foot, 41/4 -inch fireplug of a Welshman who scored a recent victory in New Orleans.

"Jose Maria Olazabal," Faldo continued, naming the young Spaniard who put together a record-breaking scoring performance last fall in the World Series of Golf.

"Curtis and Watson have been playing better lately," he said. "And (Steve) Elkington. He played awfully well in the Players Championship.

Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex may have some new looks and faces for the fall semester because of a $2 fee increase that will be implemented this fall.

Lone Runner

The increase, which was approved by Student Senate two weeks ago and will be paid by full-time students, was $1 less than the amount the Rec Complex staff was seeking.

"We were disappointed we didn't get our $3," said Raydon Robel, director of recreational services. "We are a growing program and people are demanding. Two dollars backs us off a bit, but we will continue to do our best for the students with the money we got."

The allocation of the fee increase will be divided among three major areas, Robel said.

Phase one is for new equipment. The recreation complex has been in operation for 11 years, and some of the equipment has been used the same length of time.

"When you get down to the amount of use these machines have seen, it is the simple fact that you can only repair it so many times," Robel said, "The space is limited, so we can't start adding equipment. We will replace old equipment."

The remainder of the funds will be used for the addition of a full-time secretary, and to cover the cost of the increase in the minimum wage, which will increase to $4.25 per

MIKE WELCHHANS/Staff

"We are wanting to add a full-time secretarial position," said Steve Martini, director of intramurals. "Currently, we have two full-time secretaries and four or five student part-time secretaries. It would help add more continuity to the program so we wouldn't always have a changing staff that needed to be trained."

Recreational Services directors are also hoping to add another professional assistant to the staff which consists of Robel, Martini and Joyce Halverson. The Rec Complex has the smallest professional staff among any of the Big Eight schools. Colorado employs 12 full-time professionals.

"We are finding it necessary for us to add a third full-time assistant director for somewhat obvious reasons. We are a busy program and we are growing." Martini said. "It would help the program and students to add a little bit more professional approach with this position."

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Some players think spring training lasts too long. Kevin Appier isn't one of them. Appier, who started intensive workouts two weeks before spring training, pitched eight shutout innings and Danny Tartabull drove in the only run Wednesday as Kansas City beat Cleveland 1-0. Appier, whose 2.76 ERA last year was fourth-best in the American League, gave up seven hits, struck out four and walked one. Jeff Montgomery pitched a hitless ninth for the

"All that hard work I did in spring training paid off, I think," Appier said. "I know it paid off."

Appier leads Royals past Indians Kansas City held Cleveland to two earned runs while winning two of three in the season-opening series.

"You get pitching like this, you think it's a shame you didn't win all three games," said Royals manager John Wathan. "But that's the game of baseball. I'm not going to complain about anything right now."

Cleveland rookie Charles Nagy allowed seven hits, struck out six and walked one in eight innings.

"I was getting my slider over for strikes," said Nagy, who had a 0.56 ERA in 16 spring innings. "As the game progressed, I was able to spot my fastball a lot better, to lefties and to righties. They hadn't ever seen me before so they didn't know what I was going to throw at them."

The Royals scored in the third when Kevin Seitzer walked with one out, took second on George Brett's single and scored on Tartabull's single.

Both pitchers got off to shaky starts in the first inning but managed to escape with no damage. Alex Cole opened the game with a double, was sacrificed to third and Carlos Baerga walked. Albert Belle then struck out and Sandy Alomar bounced into an inning-ending forceout.

Kansas City escaped a basesloaded jam in the seventh. Singles by Alomar and Chris James and an infield single by Turner Ward loaded the bases with two outs. But Appier got Cole to hit a high bouncer.

Sanderson flirts with no-hitter

DETROIT (AP) - Scott Sanderson's no-hit bid was broken by Tony Phillips' leadoff double in the ninth inning Wednesday, as the New York Yankees beat the Detroit Tigers 4-0.

Phillips hit Sanderson's pitch off the screen in right field, just out of the reach of Jesse Barfield. Sanderson was then lifted for Greg Cadaret, who retired the side in order. Sanderson, pitching his first game for the Yankees, was trying to throw the first Tiger Stadium no-hitter in 18 years. He also was bidding for the Yankees' first winning no-hitter since Dave Righetti's against Boston in 1983.

Sanderson struck out four and walked two. Barfield's two-run double off Walt Terrell gave the Yankees the lead in the sixth inning. New York added two runs in the ninth on Hensley Meulen's triple off John Cerutti.

It was the 50th one-hitter in Yankee history. The last was June 4, 1986, when Joe Niekro and Al Holland combined for one against the California Angels.

Shocks' Jones covers the field

WICHITA (AP) - Mike Jones did more than march around the bases when his Wichita State team defeated Baker. He played all nine positions on the team.

He and head coach Gene Stephenson were a bit wary about the ninth-inning pitching stint part of his rotation Tuesday night. But Jones showed an 88 mph fastball and respectable control as he retired the side.

His first warm-up pitch was about 10-feet wide of home plate. "That was just to remind them that I don't pitch very often," Jones said. "I didn't want them digging in too deep."

Jones walked the first batter on a 3-2 pitch he and catcher Spike Anderson were sure was a strike. But Jones was back in good shape when first baseman Jose Ramos fielded the next batter's grounder and started a double play that went to second and then back to Ramos. Baker right fielder Mark Cisneros then singled to right before Jones got a ground out to end the inning.

The K-State B'nai B'rith Hillel and Manhattan Jewish congregation sponsored the Holocaust Remembrance ceremony

Wednesday evening.

More than 30 K-State students, faculty and Manhattan residents attended the ceremony in the K-State Union Room 213.

Phil Anderson, instructor in speech, started the ceremony by reciting the short essay "Darkness," written by William Heyen.

Seven members of Hillel read essays and lit candles on a seven-stick candelabra in remembrance of the six million Jewish people killed in concentration camps operated by Nazi Germany before and during World War II.

Jerome Seidner, senior in secondary education, lit the seventh and final candle and read a passage from an essay.

"May the light of this candle be a symbol of our common humanity, our appearance under God and our hope for justice, love and peace - our commitment to solidarity with the oppressed and our resolve," Seidner said. "Never Again!"

Yael Carmi, graduate in theater and Hillel coordinator, sang the song "ELI, Halicha Le' Keisaria," by Hana Senesh. Guitarist Noam Ashbell, freshman in computer engineering, provided the accompaniment. After Carmi sang the first verse, members of the audience started to sing.

Lillian Kremer, professor of English, read selected excerpts from her book, "Witness Through the Imagination."

"Six million Jewish victims must not be consigned to oblivion; the murdered must be remembered," Kremer said.

Kremer concluded by reciting a handwritten remark from her book. "Why remember? To crush current and

Sun protection necessary

Overexposure can be serious health hazard

SCOTT FOWLER

Collegian Reporter

Overexposure to the sun can be a serious health hazard, causing painful sunburn and serious long-term effects.

Reita Currie, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center, said people may risk painful sun damage because they are exposed to the sun's burning rays more than they realize.

People who work or play outdoors need to protect their skin year-round against the sun, even if they are not sunbathing. Many common outdoor surfaces including sand, road and water reflect and intensify the sun's rays, she said.

"A person not purposely bathing in the sun may be causing themself to burn through the reflection of the suns rays from the water," Currie said.

She said the sun is strongest between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., although burning can occur even in the early morning or late afternoon.

"Overcast days don't offer protection because ultraviolet rays can pass through clouds and even fog or haze," she said.

Currie said certain drugs, skin creams and perfumes can change the skin's reaction to sunlight. A physician or pharmacist may tell a person to take extra precautions or avoid exposure completely, she Currie said the sun protection factor on a sunscreen's label provides an indication of how long a person can stay in the sun after applying it and not become sunburned.

To calculate the burn time with sunscreen, multiply the minutes it takes to burn without sunscreen by the SPF of the sunscreen, she said.

If a person normally starts to burn after 10 minutes in the sun without protection, a sunscreen with an SPF of eight would allow the individual to stay in the sun for up to 80 minutes before getting the same amount of burn.

"The higher the SPF, the longer you can stay in the sun," she said.

Different people have different sun protection needs, according to their skin type and tanning history, Currie said

People who burn easily should use an SPF of 15 or higher, while others who burn minimally and tan well may use an SPF of as low as Currie said people should protect less obvious spots of the body, such as the lips and nose, with special sunscreens. She said putting sunscreen on once may not be enough, particularly if a person goes swimming or sweats profusely after the first application.

Currie said people who have just started to use a tanning booth should begin with short intervals, then build up exposure time.

People should not use a sun tanning booth if they sunburn easily and don't tan, she said.

"If you don't tan in the sun, you probably won't get a tan in a booth," she said.

"You never know how much ultraviolet rays you're getting from the sun," said Dan Skala, owner of Southern Sun. "It's unpredictable."

Skala said the sun emits three kind of ultraviolet rays, UV-A, UV-B and UV-C.

UV-C is the shortest, most harmful wavelength of ultraviolet rays but is virtually stopped by the Earth's ozone layer, Skala said.

He said UV-B is the medium wavelength and although overexposure can cause sunburn, a controlled amount is necessary to initiate tanning in the skin.

Skala said UV-A is the longest wavelength and is responsible for the completion of the tanning

Tanning is the body's defense mechanism to protect itself from the sun's rays. A substance called melanin is present in the skin and becomes activated when exposed to ultraviolet light, he said.

Ultraviolet B initiates the tanning process by stimulating the melanin, which is released into the surrounding cells. As these melanin granules migrate to the skin's surface, they are oxidized by UV-A rays, which cause them to turn brown, producing a tan, he said.

Students take first for hospital design

JEFF STURDY Collegian Reporter

Two K-State students won first place for the animal hospital design in the annual Hill's Pet Products Hospital Design Competition.

Chet Lockard, fifth-year architecture student, and Matt Garver, fourth-year veterinary medicine student, combined their knowledge and skills to produce the winning design.

For winning the national competition, Hill's Pet Products is granting each student a $1,000 scholarship and a paid trip to Toronto, Canada, to receive their awards.

They will be leaving Saturday to attend the American Animal Health Association meeting where they will receive their awards.

Garver provided knowledge of what needs to be included in a veterinary hospital, such as how big the operating room, animal holding pens and outdoor shelters for large animals should be.

Lockard took this information, manipulated it into architectural plans and made a model of the hospital with the completed plans.

The project was overseen by Wendy Omelas and Robert Condia, professors of architecture, and David Hodgson in the clinical science department of the College of Veterinary Medicine.

They were our advisers and critics," Lockard said.

Both students were appreciative of the help and support they received from the faculty during the contest.

Lockard and Garver did not know each other before the competition, but worked well together, Garver

"We started working on it in January," Garver said. "And there were a lot of late nights."

To reach the national competition in Topeka, Lockard and Garver competed against two other teams from K-State. They were then selected to represent K-State with their hospital

Garver said after the K-State competition they added more details and Lockard made a better model.

Lockard said the project is on display on the fourth floor of Durland Hall, in the Hill's Pet Products Conference Center.

K-Staters improve baseball bats

K-State has its own batman. Not the one you see in the movies, but one you might see in the classroom. Larry Noble, head of the physical education and leisure studies program, has two of his own patents on baseball bats. "I've had the patents for about a year and half to two years now," he

Noble has been working with Hugh Walker, professor of mechanical engineering, to improve the bat and the "sweet spot," where the batter hits the ball.

Easton Sports of Van Nuys, Calif., licensed his bats and represented

Noble has also conducted three experiments on the vibration of the bat and how to change it so that it doesn't hurt the batter's hands.

His discoveries aren't just used for bats; they can also be utilized for hammers, axes, tennis racquets and other equipment, he said.

Protective equipment and aluminum manufacturing are two other areas Noble is getting into with Easton Sports, he said. He is experimenting with shoulder pads at the present

"He knows how to make things safer, such as the shoulder pads," Walker said.

Noble said his major field of interest is biometrics. He said he is a role player for other faculty researchers.

He is also helping a graduate student do some research on the vibration, loading and center percussion of tennis racquets.

"Noble knows how to improve striking implements so that they can do their job better," Walker said.

"We teamed up together to contribute to one another what we know. He came to seek me out because of my background in vibrations and knew that we, as engineers, had the equipment to do the tests," he said.

Noble just accepted the position as head of the department for another five years, but he said after that he might like to get started on expandsor of industrial engineering, on re- ing some of his many projects.

Women writers south of the border are in danger of losing their lives, said Dr. Lucia Garavito.

Latin women writers are at risk for their lives by writing politically controversial books, plays and poetry," Garavito said.

Garavito spoke about "Women Writers in Latin American," at 4:30 p.m. in the K-State Union 207 Wednesday.

Her lecture focused on the political works of three female Latin American writers, Elena Poniatowska of Mexico, Griselda Gambaro of Argentina and Gioconda Belli of Nicaragua.

Garavito said the political situation in Latin America is such that almost every literary work is political.

"Latin Americans are more politically conscious, they are born into it," Garavito said.

"The violent events of the past three decades have brought literature and politics closer," Garavito

Garavito said women writers have become more popular as a result of their coverage of these Garavito said the male writers in Latin America are important writers and are threatened and killed for writing political works.

"Women give a new point of view, a different perspective on the personal treatment of families and children," Garavito said.

"Women deal with a lot of details in their work, they know more gossip in the community than a man would," Garavito said.

"Women seem more human, more subjective. Their literature is a good way to view things," said Ian Bautista, sophomore in politi-cal science and Spanish and president of the Hispanic American Leadership Organization.

Dickinson County declines offer to join Big Lakes waste compact

PAUL NOEL

Staff Reporter

JUNCTION CITY - Dickinson County has still not joined the Big Lakes Solid Waste Management Compact and isn't planning on it.

The Walker site in Dickinson County will most likely be the site for the landfill, whether or not Dickinson County chooses to be in the compact, said Richard Jepsen, Riley County commissioner and compact interim manager.

The compact, currently composed of Riley, Geary and Morris counties, met in the Geary County Courthouse Annex Wednesday night to formally ask Dickinson County for a response to the invitation to join the compact.

Wilber Beemer, president of the Dickinson County solid waste committee, said the committee was leery of joining the compact because it did not feel Dickinson County was being fairly represented, and it did not want the landfill to be publicly operated.

"As a county unit, we cannot do a good job at running a landfill," Beemer said. "Somebody who does it for a living can (do a good job), and that's one of the main reasons we didn't join the compact."

Elaine Hassler, Dickinson County commissioner, said Dickinson County would rather be a customer of the compact than a member.

John Sjo, Riley County commissioner, said the compact needed to settle its relationship with Dickinson County before any other plans could be made.

Dickinson County has slowed down the decision-making process by not becoming a member," he said. "Every time we meet, they put it off. I hate to see us get snagged on such a bright prospect."

If the landfill were to be at the Walker site, Dickinson County would control the zoning to the area and the landfill's customers. The zoning board would decide on who could receive permits to use the landfill, and waste from outside the state

Squad, Willie among elite Trite, fast music undermines

ALISA DIETZ

Collegian Reporter

The K-State cheerleading squad and Willie the Wildcat traveled to San Antonio, Texas, for national competition this past weekend.

The squad placed sixth and Willie placed second overall. The competi-tion was at Sea World, where there were 40 schools competing. K-State was classified in Division 1A, the largest division, which had 15 schools competing.

Scott Johnson, adviser and coach for the squad, said the judging is based on basic fundamentals, formations, difficulty, ability make the crowd to respond and the overall impression made on the audience. The routine has a time limit of 2 minutes, 20 seconds with a limit of 1:45 of music and 35 seconds for the cheer. "It was definitely our best showing in a long time," Johnson said.

The squad sent in a video of the routine to qualify for nationals, which was worth 20 percent of the final judging. Yell leader James McDiffett said the squad did a new routine it put together itself, a mix of four different songs and one cheer.

Tarra Carlgren, captain of the squad, said, "We put together a routine that was attainable; something we knew we could do.' John Bartel, who is Willie the Wildcat, was selected from 90 mascots to compete. He sent in a videotaped performance to qualify to compete with the final four mascots. The video counted 80 percent of his

At competition, Willie performed a skit that counted 20 percent, which was based on how well he carries out his character. He performed Willie Vanilli, the "go" signs and a stunt with a basketball on a rubberband.

"I was ranked third going into the competition and moved to second from my skit," Willie said.

"We had a really, really good time, the squad worked so hard," he said. "Overall, we worked so well together, we did what we knew we could and felt good about it. We did what we set out to do by redeeming ourselves from last year, and we get to be on TV," Carlgren said.

Brenda Paquette, squad member, said she attributed the squad's success to a positive attitude, and the squad sticking together like best

Both Willie and the squad received plaques as awards. The squad's performance will be shown in its entirety on ESPN in a few weeks. The squad would like to perform the routine locally sometime

singer's talents

REBECCA SACK

Collegian Reviewer

Lazet Michaels is a singer with an attitude. Her first album, "Too Strong," says it all in the title. Michaels' voice is a familiar backup for stars of more significance, but this time she sings her own songs her own way in the hopes that her spunk and brash conceit may bring her fame, for-tune and a household name in pop, R&B, funk and dance music.

"Too Strong" shows Michaels' prolific songwriting abilities with 13 originals. Slow songs are her forte. They offer a soothing, jazzy flavor and a rhythm which seems to be most appropriate for Michaels' voice.

The song "Give Me All The Love" has great potential as a pop hit. The bass line is strong and complex, off-set by a muted trumpet. Michaels' voice is heard in its glory as she floats up and down the scale with the ease and emotion of Al Jarreau.

"Summer in Paradise" is another of the slow songs in which Michaels' talent as a singer is better understood. The song is mellow and jazzy with a Latin influence. The simple lyrics make the music easy to listen to without turning it into something trite.

The faster songs cannot escape the triteness of their lyrics, since the music is very weak. Almost all of the faster songs seem to be either too slow or too fast. The lyrics don't fit into the tempo. The lines of "Midnight Magic" are especially out of place with the funky dance beat.

The song tells of the explosion of Flight #103 over Lockerbie, Scotland. The lyrics fall far short of doing justice to the incident or even accomplishing Michaels' wish for everyone to feel the peace she feels about her dead

Reviewer says ... "Too Strong"

One line actually reads, "My sister Diana didn't deserve Flight #103/ and this cruel, cruel world / among bodies that rained in Lockerbie." The song goes on trying to insert poetry by shaping the words into a column, but it never succeeds.

Songs like "Give-n-Take" and Blue Suede Shoes" may be the closest Michaels comes to pop hits. The ideas of these songs are simple and familiar, and there is no failed attempt at poetry. But whatever she writes, Michaels would still be better off singing other people's songs. Her ■ See MICHAELS, Page 14

Baker, Mubarak discuss possible peace proposals for Arab world

By the Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt - Secretary of State James Baker III took an Israeli peace proposal to the Arab world Wednesday, uncertain about the reception it would receive but eager to maintain momentum begun in Jerusalem.

Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak was ready to confront Baker with a five-point plan of his own calling for Israel to relinquish land in order to gain Arab acceptance of its existence.

Other provisions in Mubarak's plan included a halt to new Israeli housing construction on the West Bank and in Gaza and the establishment of a Palestinian state.

The Egyptian leader did not rule out the regional peace conference proposed by the Israeli government.

Israel's plan would have the conference held under U.S. auspices, preferably in Washington, with the Soviet Union a participant, Reporters traveling with Baker were told the Soviets would have to restore full diplomatic relations with Israel if they hoped to sponsor peace talks. Egypt's approach would involve other nations, many of which have opposed Israeli actions in U.N. votes.

Baker and his senior aides declined to hazard a guess how the Israeli plan would be received in his talks with Mubarak and with Prince Saud, the foreign minister of Saudi Arabia, in Cairo.

Egyptian Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid warned before Baker's arrival from Jerusalem that Israel could not have peace until it yielded what he called Arab land. Baker has called Israel's proposal constructive, and it gave his second signed to ensure a united Arab front. Mideast peace mission in less than a month a momentum U.S. diplomacy in the region had lacked.

Baker had a two-hour meeting with Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir before flying to Egypt. A senior U.S. official said the Israeli leader had given satisfactory replies to questions raised by Baker.

Baker waited until evening before meeting with Mubarak. This is the season of Ramadan, which imposes a daytime fast on Muslims.

Baker quickly got a strong impression of Mubarak's thinking through the pages of Al Ahram, a newspaper that generally reflects the thinking of the country's leader.

It rejected Israel's procedural suggestion that negotiations be held separately with each of the Arab governments. The objection was de-

And the newspaper said the elections Shamir had proposed on the West Bank and in Gaza should be held under U.N. auspices. The elected Palestinians would negotiate terms for limited self-rule with the Israeli government under Shamir's 1989 proposal.

Mubarak, whose country signed a peace treaty with Israel in 1979, consulted with Syrian and Lebanese leaders before his meeting with Gaker.

Tuesday, after Israeli Foreign Minister David Levy presented the Israeli plan to Baker, a senior U.S. official who insisted on anonymity said that, in principle at least, there is agreement between the United States and Israel.

Baker and Levy stressed there were many details to work out.

Fedder selected for tour

Professor to study European theater BETSY HIDALGO Collegian Reporter

The Association for Theater in Higher Education selected Norman "Doc" Fedder, professor of theater, to be one of the few to go to Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union to learn how actors in different countries are trained.

"I am active in the association; that is why I think I was invited," Fedder

The program was sponsored by the Citizen Ambassador Program through the organization of People to People. People to People brings together people of the same professions and interests in different parts of the world for them to learn new processes of teaching and learning. "It is an international exchange of ideas," he said.

This particular delegation was for two weeks and started in New York for an orientation about traveling in Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union. Everyone invited to go was an educator of theater either at the high school or college level.

Four days were spent in each of the three cities, and the format of each day was to tour the city's sites, go to dramas or ballets and visit their universities.

"The first play we saw was 'In Search of God,' a play by Woody Allen, but it was in Czechoslovakian," Fedder said. "I couldn't believe we were watching a Woody Allen film; it was great. We could understand it because of the body language that they used."

The schools are different because the school of theater is a separate college altogether. It is a four-year program, with the first part of the program teaching students about theater games. It is not until the fourth year that they actually get to perform in front of the public, he said.

"Acting is more of a profession over there," Fedder said. "Our actors are celebrities, they are professionals."

A famous Russian actor, Oleg Tabakov, operates a school of theater and calls his students his children. That does not happen in the United States, Fedder said.

The plays performed in these countries are either classics or American. They do not study to be playwrites because they equate them with God, he said.

The government will not accept new plays because the people are not allowed to have subversive opinions. It is against the government, Fedder said.

"I asked many of the performers that I spoke with who their favorite actor and actress was, and the majority of them told me Dustin Hoffman and Liza Minnelli," he said.

Fedder said seeing another cultures' plays reinforced how similar everyone all over the world is.

The main difference between the teaching process in the Soviet Union and in the United States, Fedder said, was that Russian students couldn't seem to function without their instructor constantly coaching them. Fedder said he prides himself in the way he stays in the background while making be leaders.

"I want to free people to be themselves," he said.

Fedder's classes continued during his absence. The students were still required to attend and were in charge of the day's activities.

"We missed him, but the class ran smoothly and almost everyone came, even though he wasn't there," Jennifer Lippoldt, senior in radio and television, said.

Funding scandal revealed during Senate

CHRISSY VENDEL

Staff Reporter

Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt said last year's Senate Finance Committee engaged in questionable activities when it hid available monies to deny funding to UFM.

At Thursday's Student Senate meeting, Heitschmidt said money that would have been available to be allocated to UFM was dispersed into Craig Uhrich, current finance chairman and engineering senator, said some organizations were allocated more than they requested. One example Uhrich said he remembered was an additional $900 allocated for lacrosse equipment than was requested.

Phil Anderson, faculty representive, said he was shocked by the

"This calls into the question the integrity of last year's group," he said. "I'm stunned. This strikes to the heart and soul of what the Student Senate

Anderson said he was disappointed and surprised with the lethargic attitude of this year's Senate regarding Heitschmidt's statement. The results of last year's allocations were skewed, Anderson said, because the finance committee did not give the full Senate a chance to look at accurate figures. Heitschmidt said he wanted to speak on the issue before it was brought to the attention of the Collegian and the public. "I am well-assured the integrity of this year's committee is high, but I don't want a scandal coming out," he After some discussion, the Senate agreed it would be a good idea to set up criteria for future finance committees in addition to the present guidelines. Senate decided to discontinue debate about the political nature of organizations, which pervaded its meeting Tuesday. Organizations that had been denied funding, Southwind, Amnesty International and Young College Republicans, will be referred to an Ad-Hoc Committee for their funding recommendations.

The committee will establish guidelines regarding funding for organizations with political ideologies. Denied organizations could resubmit funding bills once the guidelines are established, which is likely to be next fall.

Two special allocation bills, the Hispanic American Leadership Organization and Speech Unlimited, were dispensed to second readings and approved by the Senate.

HALO was approved for part of the speaking fee of Cesar Chavez, and Speech Unlimited was allocated funds to attend a national forensics conference this weekend in Tacoma, Wash.

Extensive debate surrounded HALO's request.

Members of HALO had raised about $4,000 of the $5,000 speaking fee in about two weeks and requested the difference.

Senate finally approved a bill that will fund what HALO is unable to raise before the Chavez speech. A maximum of $1,000 could be funded by Senate.

Funds were also approved for U-LearN, the Off-Campus Association and the International Coordinating

First readings addressed internal changes recommended for Student Publications to help its financial situation and a K-State policy change that would allow the sale of 3.2 percent beer inside the KSU Stadium during home football games.

A bill for a special allocation to the Illuminating Engineering Society also went through its first reading.

Derek Thoman, architecture senator, was voted the Student Senate representative to the Faculty Senate.

2 Manhattan women qualify to compete in Boston Marathon

LAJEAN RAU

Staff Reporter

Two Manhattan women are on their way to Boston to catch a dream they have been chasing.

Helen Cartwright, 24, and Sandy Robinson, 29, are running in the Boston Marathon Monday. The marathon has been an annual event since 1897, attracting thousands of runners from all around the world.

A marathon consists of 26.2 miles. Cartwright and Robinson ran their first marathon in May and were only four minutes from qualifying for the Boston Marathon. The qualifying cut-off is three hours and 40 minutes for women in their age category

They set their personal records of three hours and 33 minutes at Dallas' Whiterock Marathon later in the year, a time that qualified them for the Boston Marathon.

Their times being identical is not a coincidence, they said. They run side by side, start to finish in all their races. Cartwright said someone she met through running races gave her Robinson's name because she also ran alone and was from Manhattan. "We started running a little together, then we started running every day," Cartwright said. Cartwright and Robinson have been running for only five years. They train together, averaging about 65 miles a week now, which means anywhere from eight to 23 miles a day.

Both women are married and work full-time, so they run in the late afternoon when they get home from work. Cartwright is a dental hygienist, and Robinson is a commissions clerk at an insurance

"You don't always want to go out," Cartwright said. "It's hard taking the time, but once you get started it's hard to quit.'

Both women said being dedicated to a sport has its challenges. "I think it would be a lot easier if we were single," Robinson said.

"You have responsibilities as a wife, and you can't just forget about them."

Cartwright said running takes up a large part of her time and energy.

"It takes a lot of understanding from friends and family because you have to organize everything around your running," she said. "Sometimes, I think our husbands think we are crazy.'

Robinson started running when she met her husband, who was running 10-kilometer races at the time.

"My initial goal was to be able to run two miles," she said. "If you get to two miles, you think you can run two and a half and then five. It just kept growing."

Cartwright said she started running as a member of the rowing team at Wichita State University.

A specific diet is not part of their usual routine, but during the four days before they run a marathon, they increase their carbohydrates and lower their fat intake. "When we're not doing this, we really like sweets," Robinson said laughing. "It's our weakness. But we do eat pretty well most of the

Cartwright and Robinson's next goal is the Wichita River Run, May

"We want to try to cut down the miles," Cartwright said. "We want to do shorter races and improve our 10-kilometer time.

"We're really excited about this marathon. It's a reward for qualifying," she said. "We would like to set a personal record, but it depends on the crowd. There could be 10,000 or more people running." Both women said they think they will continue running marathons.

"I'll always run," they said simultaneously.

"We want to take it easy for a while, but I want to do another one,' Cartwright said. "Once you start, don't plan on not trying another one. It gets addicting.

Robinson said she encourages anyone who has the desire to try running.

"If you have that goal in mind, then you should go for it," she said. "It doesn't matter how fast you do it. You don't have to be fast to run."

Team aims for nationals 17 K-State students to compete in forensics tournament

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter

Seventeen K-State students taking a total of 25 entries will compete at the national forensics tournament April 12-15 in Tecoma, Wash.

This National Individual Events Tournament, sponsored by the American Forensics Association, represents the top 10 percent in the nation, said Craig Brown, director of forensics. Pacific Lutheran University, which is President Jon Wefald's alma mater, will be the host of the tournament, he said.

"Our motto for the trip is, 'We still want to be dressed up on Mon-day (for finals)," Brown said. Preliminary competition, he said, is Saturday and Sunday,. There are three rounds that determine the top 24 in each event.

After preliminaries, there are quarterfinals, semifinals and finals. By finals, which are Monday, he said, there are only six left in each event.

Monday, he said, the individual and sweepstakes awards will be given. The sweepstakes award goes to the school with the most individual trophies.

Making it to the final rounds Monday, Brown said, will depend on many things. "We know everyone there is going to be good," he said.

The attitude and preparation you bring in is important." He said they have to be pumped before giving their speeches, but not too pumped.

If they are too pumped, he said, they may give the speech too fast and not make the time limit, which is one of the biggest things he said he has been stressing.

They just have to realize what is at stake, Brown said. They should ask themselves why they are going. "You see," he said, "this tournament puts them in perspective to others in the nation because everyone there is good." To the forensics team, this tournament is the equivalent of the national basketball tournament, he

Tom Burns, junior in speech and pre-law, is competing in two events, after-dinner speaking and communication analysis, at the tournament.

His after-dinner speech is about poor listening skills. With this, Burns said, he addresses a serious topic in a funny way.

"Once you get them (judges) laughing, you can convince them you are a riot," he said.

In his communication analysis speech, Burns talks about Car Talk, a radio program and what makes it a success, he said.

In preparation for nationals, Burns said he has been giving his speeches to public speaking classes. Laura Pelletier, senior in speech, is also competing in two events, informative and persuasion speaking. This will be her third year at nationals. Her informative speech, she said, is about active noise reduction. She explains how to eliminate noise through opposing noise The idea for her speech came out of Car and Driver and from National Public Radio, she said. Restricting cigarette advertising, she said, is the topic of her persuasion speech. Even though this may be a common topic, Pelletier said she takes a at Howie's Recycling Center, which critically injured an employee of the plant, continued Thursday.

Lt. Rodney Jager, Riley County Police Department investigations officer, said follow-up reports of the explosion that occurred during the smelting of scrap military ordnance Wednesday were not available for release, but investigations are continuing.

According to a spokeswoman for university relations at the KU Med Center, Derek McMullen, who was injured in the explosion, is in critical condition in the burn unit.

Fort Riley public affairs said the explosion apparently came from 105mm-round shellcases someone from the base had taken to the plant. 'We don't know how they got the Marshal, said although the fire department has been called to Howie's two times previously to put out cardboard fires, this it the first time any serious damage has occurred.

"This was one of those freak things. He has been doing this kind of smelting before, and normally, there has been no problem," he said.

Wesche also said residents have complained about fumes coming from the building. The Environmental Protection Agency is aware of this, he said, and has given the OK to the business to continue operations.

Ferry fire kills more than 100

LEGHORN, Italy (AP) - A cabin attendant dangled from the side of a flaming ship for two hours, the only known survivor Thursday from a ferry fire that authorities feared killed 139 people.

"My friends died beside me, it's a miracle I'm alive," said Alessio Bertrand from his hospital bed, where he was being treated for shock.

Bertrand said he and two other crewmen had been watching a soccer game below deck when the ferry rammed an anchored oil tanker Wednesday night in thick fog off northwestern Italy.

"Flames erupted and smoke was everywhere, we wouldn't see anything," said 23-year-old Bertrand.

By the time rescue efforts were halted at dusk Thursday, 40 bodies had been recovered. The ferry carried 72 passengers and a crew of 68. All but one person, an Austrian, were Italian.

Federal spending on Kansas increases

WASHINGTON (AP) - The federal government spent $3,849.64 on each man, woman and child in Kansas last year, the Census Bureau reported Thursday.

Total federal spending in the state increased 5.1 percent to $9.5 billion in the 1990 fiscal year, which ended Sept. 30. Kansas ranked 26th in the nation in per capita spending last year. The state ranked 23rd in 1989, with per person expenditures of $3,612. The study covers nearly all domestic spending, including grants to state and local governments, military and civilian salaries, contracts and direct payments to individuals under such programs as Social Security and Medicare.

Excluded from the report was spending for interest on the federal debt, the savings and loan bailout, foreign aid and intelligence

The largest portion of federal spending in Kansas, almost $5.1 billion, was in the form of direct payments to individuals. That was up from $4.7 billion in 1989.

Social Security accounted for about $2.6 billion of the direct payments last year.

Court rules woman cannot collect

WICHITA (AP) - A federal appeals court has ruled that a former Sedgwick County worker who said she was fired because she is black is not entitled to $120,000 a Wichita judge awarded her. The U.S. 10th Circuit Court of Appeals in Denver ruled that even if Jean Carter was a victim of discrimination, federal law does not allow her to collect punitive damages.

"What we have here is a license for employers to discriminate," said Greg Kite, one of two lawyers representing Carter. "Any teeth that the discrimination laws may have had are gone, it's as if we have been defanged."

The appeals court decision Monday limits county taxpayers' liability to a little more than $10,000, plus attorney's fees, said Alan Rupe, the lawyer who represented the county.

Carter sued the county and her former bosses after they fired her from her community corrections secretarial job in 1985. Carter said she had been the target of discrimination.

Advertising students to compete

Five K-State students will be competing in the National Student Advertising Case Competition today in Topeka.

The competition is in conjunction with the Annual Convention of the 9th District of the American Advertising Federation. "It was developed as a competition between collegiate ad clubs. Now it's more of a competition between universities," said Robert Pearce, associate professor of advertising.

"It is a chance for the students to apply everything they've learned about advertising and more," Pearce said.

The AAF finds a national client to host the competition. This year it is American Airlines.

The students develop a whole campaign around a product, usually a consumer good, with a well-defined target audience for which the advertising is aimed.

Council to have leadership conference

Foundations for Organizational Success, part of engineering student council, is having its second annual leadership conference Saturday.

The conference is an interactive and energetic workshop designed to assess your leadership style," said Filza Hassan, senior in architecural engineering. "It (the conference) will help develop the foundations necessary for your organization to succeed."

Hassan said the conference will be at the Ramada Inn and will feature a training seminar by the three top training managers from Southwestern Bell.

The day will be turned over to the managers from Southwestern Bell to deliver their presentation on the knowledge, skill and resources it takes to successfully motivate and develop a student society, she said.

FOS will give students a reference notebook filled with information from how to set up a picnic to how to dress for an interview, she said.

"We didn't want this conference to be just a lecture," Hassan said. "We want the students to be involved the entire day." Students will also be given the opportunity to place their resume in a booklet distributed by FOS to corporate sponsors.

Kevin Meaney, who plays Uncle Buck on the CBS-TV sitcom "Uncle Buck," performs a stand-up routine at Bushwacker's in Aggleville Thursday night.

Stand-up comic turned TV star does area show

'Uncle Buck' star captures sitcom

HOPE SWARTZ

Collegian Reporter Kevin Meaney, the star of the CBS sitcom "Uncle Buck" made his third appearance this week at Bushwacker's comedy invasion. Meaney has spent the last 15 years appearing in the movie "Big," the television series "Limited Part-ners" and "Sunday Night," as well as numerous appearances on HBO Comedy Specials.

'Somebody just called me up and asked if I was interested in doing 'Uncle Buck.' That's how easy it was. They asked if I wanted to come to Los Angeles and read for the part," Meaney said. "So, they sent me a plane ticket. I went out there, and the next day I had the part."

Both of his other series were comedies also. "Sunday Night" was a variety show in which Meaney provided the comic relief. But he said he would now like to pursue more dramatic roles.

'There were real tender moments throughout the show (Uncle Buck). I mean, he's a really big lummox of a guy that makes a lot of mistakes. He has a big heart, and I think we showed that really well," he said.

"The writers and the producers of the show saw I could really pull that off. Like the first episode where I'm talking about why I took the kids over. It was because my brother and his wife died in a car accident. So there were some real nice scences where I'm discussing that."

Local communities' support of entrepreneurs was the featured topic for the Kansas Entrepreneurial Show-SUCCESS case Series. The showcase honors individuals behind the success stories of Kansas businesses.

The sixth and final showcase of the school year was Thursday evening in the K-State Union Little Theatre. The honored guests were Willard Balderson of Wamego and Mary Carol Garrity of Atchison. Clark Balderson spoke on behalf of his father, Willard.

The Small Business Development Center has a program called Kansas Rural Enterprise Institute. The showcase is part of KREI and is made possible through the Southwestern Bell Foundation.

The KREI is a non-profit economic think-tank that focuses on job creation activities in rural areas. It is a way to save small towns, said Fred Rice, director of the Small Business Development Center.

Throughout the Showcase Series, we have tried to expose you to who entrepreneurs are and how they got started in building successful business ventures," Rice said. "By honoring 12 entrepreneurs and inviting them to come and tell their stories, we have introduced you to the real world in which they operate."

Willard Balderson is director emeritus of Balderson Inc., and retired 15 years ago after a career with the company. It started as a blacksmith shop in Wamego owned by Willard Balderson's father, Rice said.

A Balderson contract with the Kansas Highway Department was a turning point. Convincing them they could build a better snow plow lead to a successful company. Willard Balderson and his father expanded the line of products, which are currently exported, Rice said.

Balderson Inc. employs more than 350 in the United States and has established other plants with locations in Florida and Belgium. Caterpillar Inc. purchased more than 65 percent of Balderson Inc. in 1990, Rice said.

Entrepreneurs must not seek obstacles, but seek opportunities. They must have good work habits and know what it means to be in business, Clark Balderson said.

When the 1982 oil shock hit the world economy, business decreased 60 percent in one month.

Clark Balderson said it was like a

Balderson employees were largely Kansans, as well as products of Kansas education at the time of the oil shock. The Kansas state motto means keep your eyes on the end of the furrow and that is what the employees did through the difficult times, Clark Balderson said.

South Africa poised for overdue changes

Cry, the beloved country, for the unborn child that is the inheritor of our fear ... Let him not be too moved when the birds of his land are singing, nor give too much of his heart to a mountain or a valley. For fear will rob him of all if he gives too much." - from Paton's Cry, the Beloved Country.

lan Paton first published those words in 1948, in his novel about a South Africa that was a slave to apartheid, and a continent that was a slave to illiteracy, poverty and despotism. Now, however, a new Africa is on the verge of conception.

The deluge of media hype fostered by the Persian Gulf War (and our ensuing victory, I might add) has unfairly diverted global attention from a continent in the midst of sweeping

"What reform?" you might ask. In a word: democracy.

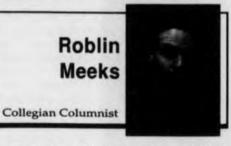

As a result of the breakdown of the oneparty infrastructure in Eastern Europe, the Soviet Union and China and the ensuing demands for democracy in these countries, a fresh life has been given to African

As in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union, African one-party governments have failed to produce acceptable standards of living and to ameliorate rapidly wilting economies fraught with homelessness and poverty. As a result, public demands for change have only been further fueled as alternatives from radios and newspapers bringing news from the Soviet Bloc.

In the last 12 months alone, nine countries including Benin and Gabon have had multiparty elections, most of which have seen nothing of the sort since gaining independence. In fact, more nations have introduced multiparty elections in the past year than in the previous 25 years combined.

The excitement does not stop there, however. The populations of countries such as Nigeria, Zambia, Mozambique, the beloved country of South Africa, and about eight or nine others have applied sufficient social pressure to their respective governments, forcing them to approve measures progressng towards free multi-party elections.

How was pressure applied? In Zambia, for instance, multiple parties were legalized by the ruling government in late 1990, only after a year of intense rioting. Elections are soon to follow in July 1991. Niger witnessed a similar state of unrest prior to promises of multi-party elections, this time student and labor strikes were the main catalysts.

What will these new elections mean for African states? At the outset, there will probably be little drastic change, as several incumbents could and will regain their positions of power. Many citizens are still extremely leery of change, as are most people. Nevertheless, as free elections continue, the remnants of the old systems will eventually be flushed out as the people gain confidence in political and economic innovation.

Other reasons could be to blame for the perpetuation of present totalitarian regimes as well. In Benin, for example, violence-free elections were recently held where their for-mer president, since 1972, General Mathieu Kerekou, received 26 percent of the vote. In the runoff election, he will face Nicephore

Soglo, the current prime minister of Benin, who himself received 37 percent of the vote. General Kerekou may have received the support he did because only 20 percent of the population is literate. The country did try to circumvent this, however, by allowing those who could not write their names in the voter register, as most could not do, to instead stamp a fingerprint.

Even if new elections don't totally revolutionize economics and society to Copernican proportions immediately, any novel ideas can have positive effects. For example, in Zaire, societal muscle has forced the government to relax once suffocating constraints on the press. Supposedly, if incumbents do retain their mantle of leadership in the face of these elections, they will still be driven to update laws and public policies, and reformers will be able to better understand the weapons necessary to serious social and governmental

Another question I have often heard asked is: If such sweeping positive revolution is taking place across the continent, why is there still fractional violence occurring around Johannesburg and other townships in industrialized areas?

It is true that the African National Congress and the Zulu-based Inkatha Freedom Party are still engaged in armed conflict. However, the recent killing of 15 mourners March 27, breaking a volatile truce between the two groups, could be due to right-wing white organizations dedicated to the elimination of black solidarity.

nfortunately, most of the news coverage has been stolen by the Baltic States and America's playing in the Middle East sandbox. What little information that has appeared in the media (excluding such publications as the Christian Science Monitor) has basically succeeded in highlighting only the racial Indeed, wonderful things are happening throughout the eastern hemisphere - things that should not be ignored. But it's time that people in South Africa, and the continent in general, receive deserving global awareness and commitment in their democratic infancy.

With proper care, the unborn child of Paton's vision could cease to be the inheritor of a political system based on subjugation and finally take possession of a land filled with humans and human rights.

Fleeing Kurds betrayed, promised U.S. help fails

The United States' promises to protect Kurdish refugees attempting to flee Iraq may be too late. The refugees need action, not words.

The refugees, now fighting for their lives against both the environment and Iraqi bomb fire in mountain passes leading into Iran, rebelled against Saddam Hussein - with the encouragement of President

They were told that the United States would back Kurdish efforts to overthrow the dictator, and they found themselves a people without a state.

Iraqi forces have been warned to leave the refugees alone or the United States would intervene. But the rebels believed the intervention would come a little bit sooner.

Saddam has ignored the U.S. warnings and continues to send forces to push the refugees deeper into the mountains. The refugees are still fending off the Iraqis, and they continue to wait for the United States to follow through on its promise.

Bush used the Kurdish rebels. When it was beneficial for Bush to encourage an uprising, he gave his support. After allied forces captured an overwhelming victory, Bush no longer needed a struggle for power in Iraq.

Then, it was no longer convenient for Bush to offer military support. His people wanted out of the Persian Gulf War as quickly as possible. They wanted their loved ones home.

Through his promises and words of encouragement, Bush has possibly taken the Kurdish future away from them. They were lied to, and now they are paying for it.

Save the lip service

The fifth year of my college education is nearing an end, and with this end comes the long awaited event of graduation. One of the more prominent aspects of my collegiate endeavor has been the element of diversity, instituted by the administration under the guidance of President Wefald. As a member of the disabled population at K-State, I have often found myself involved in issues and efforts concerned with diversity.

This past week was recently adopted by Student Senate and the University as Disability Awarenes Week. This week addresssed the diversity issue, along with Racial/Ethnic Harmony Week, Hispanic Aawareness Month, Black History Month, Native American Heritage Month and International Student Week. Rather than attempt to justify the existence of Disability Awareness Week, I would prefer to deliver a definition of diversity and the necessity of these awareness events. Diversity applies to differences and varieties, but that does not necessarily mean separation, isolation or segregation, terms usually associated with minority populations. However, one term that is associated and plays an integral, but unnecessary, role in diversity is discrimination.

To most people, the term discrimination implies derogatory comments, thoughts or behaviors toward another individual or group, due to physical appearance or belief, which limit involvement or interaction. Though these can be disheartening to the targeted individual, that very individual's pride or level of self worth should negate the source and intent of these actions and attitudes.

Overcoming these critical perceptions relies on the inner strength of the target as an individual and not on the power or security of the group as one unit. The will to succeed, regardless of the odds, shows the true quality of the individual, and not the dependence on excuses as exoneration for failure. My philosophy is, "If I fail, it is through fault on my own behalf." However, lack of access denies the opportunity to fail or succeed.

For the disabled individual, accessibility is a reality, not an excuse. The limitations of the individual, whether physical or mental, determine the means of entry for interaction with society, and when these procedures are not present or provided, interaction is not possible. The intent of diversity should allow all variations the equal opportunity and availability of resource and experience.

Last fall, I was invited to take part in a video production addressing the issue of diversity at K-State as a representative of the disabled population and just recently was contacted again to attend the preview showing of the final product. While I would like to attend, the lack of foresight by the planners of this event prevents me from participating. The showing has been scheduled in Fairchild Hall, one of the most inaccessible buildings on campus. I was, however, offered an individualized viewing of this production at another location, thus isolating me from the true spirit of this participatory effort.

It seems quite appropriate that the scheduling of this preview should occur on the first day of the newly established Disability Awareness Week. This absence of insight in regard to the very topic of this video, diversity and the integration of each facet of the population, delivers to me the vehement facade of commitment by the University's administration to these topics

Save the lip service for the alumni and benefactors.

Ode to open house

I am a native Kansan and the father of a few. One attends K-State, and another one is due. I have not attended college, it was not my fortune to. So it may not be my place to speak to what I do.

I attended open house along with many who had come to see their children, and all that they could do. I had a special son who had an egg to drop. We even worked together so it wouldn't go "kerplop."

The root of architecture, as best I understand, is to plan for all the forces the situation may demand. I saw the situation of a plan in dire need. Surely this fine school can teach in fact and deed.

It is a great tradition to drop the poor ole egg. But I failed to the planning that is architecture's leg. It was a super open house, and most of us had fun. Even if I steamed a bit as I waited in the sun

Sexuality, honor and family are the main themes of the Spanish drama "La Casa de Bernarda Alba."

The drama, written by Frederico Garcia Lorca, will be performed by the Reportorio Espanol at 8 p.m April 16 in McCain Auditorium as part of Hispanic Awareness Month, said Richard Martin, director of McCain Auditorium.

Bradley Shaw, head of the Department of Modern Languages, said the play deals with a mother, Bernarda Alba, who is determined to protect her daughters from evil influences, including men.

Bernarda's own zealousness contributes to making happen what she did not want to happen, he said, and one of her five daughters sneaks away to meet a

Martin, who saw the play in New York, said one of the interesting aspects of the play is that no men appear on the stage.

The play does mention two men, he said: Bernarda's recently deceased husband and the man her daughter loves.

The drama gives a picture of life in Spain during the Spanish Civil War of the 1930s, he said, and also presents the conflict between generations - between Bemarda and her mother and between Bernarda and her daughters.

Lorca frequently deals with es-tablished social values, such as family honor and the way these values can be oppressive in individual lives, Shaw said.

The drama will be presented in Spanish, Martin said, but a synopsis giving the background of the play will be provided.

He does not expect many peo-ple who do not have any knowledge of the Spanish language to attend, he said, because people tend to be put off by the idea of seeing a play they know nothing

Even if a person has little or no Spanish, Shaw said, he or she can still pick up ideas and feelings about the characters and relationships in the play because of gestures, intonation and physical communication.

The presentation is funded by the Mid-America Arts Alliance, the National Endowment for the Arts, the Kansas Arts Commission and private sources, Martin said, and the fine arts fee helps

Sexuality theme Program targets drug abuse of Spanish play Police begin D.A.R.E. school education classes of entertainment in

LORI STAUFFER Staff Reporter

Not long ago, Manhattan was named by witnesses in a grand jury hearing in Washington state as one of the top drop-off spots for drugs. Amazingly, Manhattan has not had the problems that have followed drug trafficking, said Sgt. Stanley Conkwright, Riley County Police Department. However, on any given day, Con-kwright said he could give a breathalizer test at Manhattan High School, and at least 200 students would be determined legally drunk.

Drugs are a problem in Manhattan just as it is in Los Angeles or even Wichita, he said.

To win battles in the war against drugs, police departments across the country are setting goals for eradication, enforcement and education.

Education, Conkwright said, is the key to reducing drug abuse, and it must start early.

One of the primary methods police are following is implementing a Drug Abuse Resistance Education program into elementary or middleschool classes.

D.A.R.E. programs were initiated in Los Angeles by concerned law enforcement officals, parents and in-structors in 1979, to combat problems of gangs and drugs in the schools. The committee formed from this group developed a curriculum that was turned over to the police departments nationally.

D.A.R.E., the complete class curriculum, takes a three-prong attack through schools, families and law enforcement organizations.

Conkwright said the original group developed D.A.R.E to teach fifth and sixth grade students a lifestyle free of drugs and how to handle the pressures they will be facing in the coming years.

After 80 hours of training, police officers go into the classroom for one hour once a week for 17 weeks. Conkwright and Riley County Police Officer Larry George have been certified as D.A.R.E instructors.

Sixth graders were chosen because they are at the time in life where they are fighting through many changes and pressures. It is the best time to give them defenses to use against pressures from friends, family, school and from the media, Conkwright said.

Lisa Stramel, a sixth grade instuctor at Lee School, whose class was taught by Conkwright last semester, said the program has taught the stu-dents more than just about drug and alcohol prevention. The children learned a lot about choices and decision-making. They have related a lot of things we've learned in the program to their every-day experiences," she said. "It has definitely increased their communication skills.'

Conkwright said students face four types of pressure including friendly persuasion, teasing, tempting and heavy pressure. All are tough for children to deal with.

Even most college students are under what is termed tempting pressure at almost every party they attend, he said.

"Who hasn't been to a party where there hasn't been some form of alcohol or drug? Alcohol is the second favorite form of entertainment in America," he said. "Kids get into trouble when they don't drink, but their friends do. You get tempted to get involved."

Conkwright said the program also teaches students how to back away from stress and how to deal with it successfully.

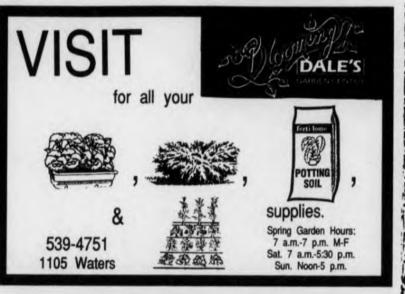

"We tell them to back away from the problem, to not worry about it for a few minutes," he said. "This gives them a chance to think about the situation clearly and make careful decisions.'

In another session, Conkwright chooses a high school or college student to visit the class as a role model. He said although students usually think athletes are ideal, others who excel in their fields can provide a positive role model as well.

The students challenge Conkwright every day, he said, and that earning the children's respect and familiarity is one of the best aspects of being a part of the program.

"They get to see a police officer for a year in a way they have never seen before," he said. "That's what's nice about this program. The kids get to know Larry and me, and they aren't afraid to challenge us."

"I guess he saw how bad it was. He asked me if I would like to get out and come to America with him."

Sergio and Sonnia's mom helped her leave Ecuador. "My mom gave someone in the government money, and they just ripped up the papers saying I was married. When I came to America, I came under my maiden name. Santigo couldn't say anything about it. You can do anything down there if you have money. "I don't know how I did it now. I owe my life to Uncle Sergio. He is such a great man.'

After a week with family members in New York City, Sonnia moved in with her uncle Sergio, aunt Maria and cousins Willie and Jeannette in Junction City.

She had missed out on part of seventh and eighth grades in Ecuador, and at age 15, a Junction City middle school placed her in eighth grade.

"It was because of my English. But the work was too easy. In Ecuador you have to study more, you have more homework." The next year, Sonnia advanced to 11th grade — the same grade as other girls her age. As a junior at Junction City High School, Sonnia is involved in Teachers of Tomorrow, a program for high school students who are interested in becoming teachers. The high schoolers work with students in education at K-State. Sonnia plans on becoming a Spanish teacher. She wants to attend K-State if she gets the financial aid she needs.

"I would like to teach high schoolers, maybe. I don't have the patience for little kids," she said.

"But what I really want to be is a lawyer. I don't know why really, that just interests me." Law school is a long way off for Sonnia, though. She's still waiting to get her first driver's license and to complete her senior year.

"I want to go out for basketball. I went out this year, but I just couldn't do it all. I get up at 6:30, go to school, and I would practice till 5 or something. Then I still had to take care of Dennisse and do homework and stuff. It was just too much. "But, we're going to work it out next year, somehow. I really like to play basketball, and I'm pretty good - good enough to play "See, here's my basketball team in eighth grade," she said pointing to an 8 x 10 photograph stuck in the back of her daughter's baby

And then Sonnia dug out another picture.

"This is my favorite picture of Dennisse. Doesn't she look so cute? See, she's wearing a new dress, and she's so proud of it. Doesn't she just look so cute?"

Dennisse's round brown eyes lit up when she heard her name. But she had something other than old pictures on her mind.

She tugged on her mom's shirt. "Mommy, Mommy,"

"What do you want?" Sonnia asked. "What, that?"
"She loves sweets," Sonnia said as she handed her daughter a spoonful of ready-made chocolate frosting.

"That's all. No more, Dennisse. Do you understand, no more. It's

"I want to teach her when I say no, I mean no, and to say please and thank you," Sonnia said.

Sonnia's determined to take care of Dennisse the best way she can, but she won't let her rule her life, she said. She's got to live her own life and let Dennisse's life be her own.

"I'll let it be the way she wants it. I'll try to guide her, and I'm not going to let her just do anything she wants, but she's got to make her own decisions.

'Cats sign Jackson, Rone

From Staff and Wire Reports

Vincent Jackson and Trasel Rone, a pair of versatile swingmen, have signed national basketball letters of intent with K-State. K-State coach Dana Altman made the announcement Thursday.

"These two young men provide an excellent start to the spring signing period," Altman said, "Of the young men we were recruiting, these were the two that had indicated that they would sign on the first day. We're pleased that they chose K-State. Both are outstanding athletes with ability to score.'

Jackson, a 6-4, 190-pounder, comes to K-State from Moberly (Mo.) Junior College, where he was the most valuable player on this season's 18-14 Greyhound club.

K-State has had at least one Moberly player on its roster since the 1986-87 season when Altman, a former head coach at Moberly, became an assistant at K-State. Since that time, former Moberly players who have worn Wildcat uniforms include Mitch Richmond, Charles Bledsoe, Fred McCoy and Jeff Wires.

'Moberly has a great tradition, and the the young men who have come to K-State from that junior-college program have made outstanding contributions here," said Altman, who was 94-18 at Moberly from 1983-86.

Jackson averaged 21.3 points per game for Moberly while canning 50.5 of his field goal attempts. He also pulled down five rebounds, dished out 4.3 assists per game and topped the team with 67 steals and 40 blocked shots.

"Vincent is a competitor who is very versatile," Altman said. "His game is impressive from an allaround standpoint. He can play a number of spots for us and he's active on both ends of the court. His athleticism catches your eye right away. It's also important that he's always played for a winner."

Jackson originally hails from East St. Louis, Ill., where he attended Lincoln High School. While at Lincoln, he played on three state championship teams.

Rone, 6-6, 205-pounder, comes to K-State from Allen County Community College in Iola, where he averaged 25.5 points and 9.9 rebounds per game last season.

"Trasel is very athletic," Altman said. "He's got a chance to be quite a player. He's a good three-point shooter, who also gives you and insideoutside combination with his rebounding ability."

Agreeing with Altman's assessment was former Allen County coach Neil Crane, who tutored Rone at the Iola school.

"Trasel is a very good player, he can really shoot the three-pointer," Crane said. "He's also a good rebounder. In his last game at Allen, he had 25 points and 21 rebounds. As good as he is, his best basketball is still in front of him."

Rone recently scored 18 points and pulled down 11 rebounds in the Texas-American All-Star Game at Midland, Texas. His rebounding total tied the record for that game, which had previously been set by Mitch Richmond.

Rone is from Chicago, Ill., and he attended Bowen High School.

K-State now has four signees this year. In the early signing period, the Wildcats inked 6-1 guard Brian Henson from McPherson and 6-8 forward George Hill from Fairhope,

After sweeping a doubleheader from Southwest Missouri State at Frank Myers Field Tuesday to extend its winning streak to three games, the K-State baseball team will make a crucial trip this weekend to Ames,

K-State, 5-7 in Big Eight play, is presently sitting in the fifth-place slot behind Oklahoma State (4-0), Oklahoma (6-2), Missouri (5-3) and Kan-

K-State coach Mike Clark has said this is a crucial series midway through the conference schedule, and that the Wildcats need a good showing to help their odds of making a trip to the postseason tournament.

"We need to get at least a split out of this, and it would sure help our causes if we could win three or four," Clark said. "We need to play well."

K-State's main downfall on the season has been the lack of consistency. They have yet to put a full four-game series together. Last weekend in Missouri, Clark saw the potential in two games, but also saw let downs in the two losses.

'We had two bad games in the Missouri series and two good games, and we still almost won three games," Clark said. "I thought the doubleheader win against Southwest Missouri State was a big one for us. Hopefully, we can take this momentum with us and put together a good four-game series.'

K-State has suffered important losses that surrounded errors, and the pitching has seen its own lump of inconsistency. The inconsistency will have to cease and the Wildcats will have to play some hard-nosed baseball in order to make the top four and trip to Oklahoma City.

We sure want to make it to Oklahoma City, but it would make it easier if we went out and played good baseball. If we do that for these last 12 conference games, we will be in Oklahoma City," Clark said. "The main thing is that we come out every game and play good baseball. So far, we have just been too up and down."

Iowa State, although sitting at only 2-6 in the Big Eight, is no team to be taken lightly, Clark said. Most of the Big Eight coaches agree that Ames is one of the worst and toughest places to play. But K-State may have revenge on its side after the Cyclones took three out of four last season.

"Ames is probably the toughest place to play in the Big Eight Conference. Their field sits directly opposite of every other in the Big Eight," Clark said. "If you have a nice day and the wind is blowing, it is blowing right in the batter's face. When you have a cold and miserable day, that is when the wind is blowing out."

Clark said Iowa State's pitching is the strong point of the team, and the Cyclones have struggled at the plate. Iowa State's run total has been low throughout the year, so Clark said he believes if K-State can get the bats going, it could be a good series for the 'Cats.

"Their pitching is their strong point. They have good starting pitching. Their one weak point this year has been their hitting," Clark said. "I think if we keep it low-run ballgames for them, then our offense will be able to score enough to win the

The tennis team travels to Iowa State and Nebraska Sunday and Monday looking to continue its improved play against Big Eight competition.

The squad carries a record of 4-16, but is 1-2 since entering the Big Eight season and is steadily improving in a conference that coach Steve Bietau said is better than in any of his seven seasons at

After falling in a 6-3 loss to Colorado at home April 6, the team took advantage of a week off to emphasize fundamentals and to recuperate from the two months of regular competition.

"We're anxious to get on the court and compete," Bietau said following the off week. "We're at a point where we're not going to benefit as much from practice as playing in a match. I see that as a good sign that we're ready to challenge ourselves."

The ISU team is winless in the conference and 4-11 on the spring. Last week the Cyclones fell to Oklahoma 1-8 and to Oklahoma State 0-9. Wednesday, they dropped their third dual in a row, losing to Nebraska 2-7. In spite of its record, however, Bietau said ISU was making progress.

"They're an improved team and rate them like Wichita State," Bietau said. "We've beaten them recently, but now they're up a little bit and we're down a little, so it will be pretty even. I think they'll really be shooting for us this weekend."

At No. 1 singles, the Cyclones feature Susanne Pollman, a transfer from Cook County (Texas) Community College, whom Bietau recruited for the Wildcats last season. Pollman is 13-12 on the year and has one Big Eight win, over Ellise Tsalikis of Oklahoma. Bietau anticipated an interesting meeting between Pollman and Wildcat freshman Michele Riniker.

"We know she's a good player; she was one of the best juco players in the nation," Bietau said. "She and Michele are very similar and should challenge each other."

Riniker takes a four-match winning streak into the meeting with Pollman and was named Big-Eight player of the week Wednesday for wins against Missouri and Colorado.

"That's a nice honor and we're very proud of what she's accomplished this year, but Michele and I both feel that her best tennis is yet to come," Bietau said.

Though they struggled to a 3-14 mark against several nationally ranked teams prior to conference play, the Big Eight provides no less of a challenge to the squad, Bietau

"This is the best that I've seen the Big Eight in any of the seven years I've been here," Bietau said. "Iowa State and Oklahoma are improved this year. Colorado didn't show it when they played us Saturday, but they are much stronger this season. Nebraska is good, and OSU is better than ever — and they're only a week away."

Thinclads to compete

JENIFER SCHEIBLER Sports Reporter

North is the direction the K-State men's and women's track teams will head this weekend.

They will be competing in the six-team Nebraska Invitational in Lincoln Saturday. The meet will provide the Wildcats with a taste of what to expect from other Big Eight competition.

In addition to K-State and Nebraska, teams competing are Missouri, Kansas, Colorado State and Minnesota

Coach John Capriotti said most of the teams will be using this meet to tuneup for the upcoming Kansas (April 19-20) and Drake (April 25-27) Relays.

"No one is going to compete in two or three events and go all out," he said.

Capriotti said he plans to run his sprinters and distance runners in shorter races to prepare them for the tough schedule ahead. "We are looking to get some quality performances in the next two weekends of meets," he said. Although the meet isn't considered to be one of the "biggies," Capriotti said he expects there to be good match-ups in every event. The Wildcat relay teams have been doing well this year, including a men's sprint medley relay team victory at the Texas Relays last weekend.

The Wildcats will not be heading to Nebraska at full force. Capriotti said he plans to hold some athletes out of the meet due to injuries to ensure they are ready to compete next weekend at KU. Two of these athletes who will be sitting this meet out are sprinter Marcus Wright and high jumper R.D. Cogswell.

Wright, who sustained a hamstring injury last weekend in the Texas meet, has been instrumental in the Wildcats' relay success.

Cogswell was the runner-up in the Big Eight Outdoor high jump competition and is expected to challenge for the title this year. Both are expected to compete next weekend.

Women's golf team to battle some of nation's elite teams

The K-State women's golf team ventures to Columbus, Ohio, for the Lady Buckeye Spring Invitational this weekend. According to K-State assistant coach Mark Elliott, the field will be the toughest the team has faced thus far.

The field of 18 teams is highlighted by five that currently are ranked by Golf Week - Duke ranks 15, Furman is 20, Minnesota is 30, Iowa is 33 and Illinois ends the parade of nationally elite teams at 34.

"It'll be a fun tournament. There will be five Top-35 teams, and we haven't finished lower than fifth this said. "If we finish in the top five in this tournament, we played great. Even if we're in the top 10, I still think we will have played well.

"We've played against Minnesota and Iowa, and I know for a fact we can play with those schools. I'd like to see us in the top five battling those ranked teams."

Much of reason for Elliott's upbeat thought on the meet centers on the fact that his team is playing at a level higher than it has reached all year. The optimism doesn't end with the coach, as his optimism is bleeding over to the golfers.

Valerie Hahn is coming off of being named the Big Eight Player-of-season," K-State coach Mark Elliott the-Month and Adena Hagedorn, who has played consistently near the top, is knocking on Hahn's door.

Even more important to the team at this stage is the resurgence of Chris Adams. 'Chris is playing well, and she hasn't done that so far this spring,'

Elliott said. "She's a senior — the only one we've got — and we need her to play well. "We played a round in Topeka last week and she shot a 73. She hadn't done that in a long time."

The meet, hosted by Ohio State, begins Saturday with 36 holes, followed by the decisive 18 holes to be completed Sunday.

Rugby club needs win for berth in Final Four

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

It's been a while since a K-State team has had a shot at going to the Final Four.

While most people are starting to see images of the 1988 Mitch Richmond-led basketball team dancing in their heads, this possible Final Four unit is the K-State/Fort Riley Rugby Football Club.

The Ruggers — as some of them wish to be called — will be traveling to Lawrence as a 25-man team to take part in the Collegiate Westerns this Saturday and Sunday

Team president Steve Jackman said he thought the tournament will be the toughest tournament the team has taken part in all season.

"If we get by Texas, then I'd have to say the match of the tournament will between us and Air Force, who should be able to beat New Mexico State," Jackman said. "If we win that one (Air Force), then the championJackman said the team's practices have been tough the past few weeks. "Normally, we have a somewhat light practice on Thursdays, but last week was really tough," he said. "I did some running in the morning and then we had a really tough practice that night. I just about died."

The winner of this tournament will then travel to Houston to take part in the Final Four of rugby May 3-4. Other schools participating in the tournament are Wyoming, Missouri, Arkansas, Nebraska, Air Force, New Mexico State University and the University of Texas-Austin. The tournament starts at 9 a.m. with Wyoming vs. Missouri, then Arkansas vs. Nebraska at 10, Air Force vs. New Mexico State at 11 and K-State vs. Texas at noon. If K-State wins in the first round, it will face the Air Force-New Mexico State winner at 4 p.m. If the unit wins that contest, it will then play for the championship at 1 p.m. Sunday.

K-State coach Mike Duncan said he feels his charges are a little cocky now, but believes they will be focused when tournament rolls around.

"After that first hit, then we're going to dictate everything goes on during play in the tournament," Duncan said. "There are a lot of teams that like to try cute things on teams, but we're the kind of team that likes to get down and dirty."

Although the tournament brackets are set up like a double-elimination tournament, once the champion is crowned, the other games are played out for seeding purposes for next year's tournament.

Some players to watch on the K-State team are Steve Jackman, Ty Gray, Steve Robke and Dan Stoltz. These four will be vying four spots on the Collegiate All-Star squad and from there they can either qualify for the United States Eagles Junior Team or the Elite team of the United States Eagles, which is one of the better teams in the world.

Mother, daughter murdered in home

By the Associated Press

BENTON - A woman and her daughter were found slain Thursday in their rural home a mile east of this small community.

A Butler County sheriff's deputy discovered the victims after the employer of the older woman called authorities when she did not show up for work through an unlocked door and discovered the bodies in a bathroom. said Undersheriff Ron Morrison. The victims appeared to have died from heavy trauma to their heads.

The deputy entered the house

Sheriff's officials were withholding the names of the two victims but acquaintances identified them as Mildred McDowell and her daughter, Janet.

An autopsy was to be performed to determine the cause of death. Morrison said the two victims had been dead for several days.

The women lived a mile east and a mile south of Benton, a town of about 700 residents about 15 miles northeast of Wichita.

Mother Goose gala to benefit Farrell

Friends of Libraries sponsors event

MELANIE SCHOENBECK Collegian Reporter

The dish probably won't run away with the spoon, but Mother Goose will be present at the "The Goose Feather Gala," at 6:30 p.m. Saturday in Farrell Library.

Those attending the gala, an annual benefit for K-State libraries, will be greeted by Mother Goose, walk through a castle archway and encounter an 11-foot Mother Goose suspended from the ceiling.

The Friends of the Libraries of Kansas State University sponsors the event, using a different theme each year. Tickets and sponsorships are available.

Nursery rhymes with a twist will highlight the evening. The rhymes have been modernized to include various topics, said Trisha Cash, member of Friends of the KSU Libraries and co-chair of the benefit.

The event contains tongue-incheek humor. People should be able to laugh at themselves, Cash said. The cast of characters for the gala will be in costume. The theater department is renting costumes, and some people have made their own for the event. "It is certainly not mandatory, but probably at least one-third of the guests will show up in costume," Cash said.

Ole' King Cole and The Queen of Hearts will hold court. Some of the other characters include the Court Chamberlain, Tarts, Fiddlers and Pipers.

"I think people will particularly enjoy the King and Queen holding court because there are many people performing various tasks and entertaining them. It is fun when you catch the spontaneity of it all," Cash said.

"The King has his fiddlers. They do a lot of fiddling around but not on instruments. Instead, they are actually a quartet that sings."

During the first stages of developing the theme, people were won-dering how it would work, said Kathleen Ward, a committee member for the event and part of the cast. She said she is confident the theme is good and the performances will be satirically funny.

Even the invitations use the nursery rhymes.

"The Goose Feather Gala" invitations include a reply card that looks like a golden egg. Inside is a rhyme with blanks that can be filled

"Mother Goose's goose laid the golden egg. We have been asking people to help us feather Farrell's nest by returning a contribution in their gold egg," Cash said.

Guests will be entertained from arrival to departure. It is designed to let guests participate as much as they want without distracting from personal desires for the evening, Cash said.

Union to show Picture of Year

ERIC MELIN

Collegian Reviewer

The Academy Award winner for Best Picture of 1990 will be showing this weekend at the K-State Union. "Dances With Wolves," an epic western motion picture, stars and was directed by Kevin Costner.

After receiving Best Drama Picture at the Golden Globes ceremony, the film went on to garner Costner a Best Director award from the Director's Guild of America. On Oscar night, "Dances With Wolves" cleaned up all the competition with a total of seven awards.

The three-hour Civil War-era picture has remained in the Top-10 grossing film chart ever since it was released last year. In 22 weeks, "Dances With Wolves" has grossed more than $151 million, making it one of the most popular movies of both years. "Home Alone" remains the most popular film, however, grossing a total of $260 million in 21 weeks of release.

After sweeping the Academy Awards, "Dances With Wolves" has enjoyed renewed success at the box office and currently stands at the number four position. All of its Oscars, however, were won for technical awards. Costner, Graham Greene and Mary McDonnell were beaten out in the acting categories.

The Academy Award for Best Director, which also went to Costner, caused quite a controversy. Many thought Martin Scorsese, nominated for "GoodFellas," should have received the honor. The only other time Scorsese has been nominated was for 'Raging Bull" in 1980, when he was beaten by another actor-turned-director, Robert Redford, for "Ordinary People."

Many critics also thought audiences were overrating the film. Some claim it is too long, and it's hard to maintain interest. Others complained of its standard story. They claim that placing a white man in the protagonist position and having him "save" the unfortunate Indians is unoriginal and contrived.

You can decide for yourself. 'Dances With Wolves" will be showing at 7 p.m. tonight, Saturday and Sunday, and at 10 p.m. tonight and Saturday in Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75 with a student ID.

Concordia luncheon to feature K-State arts

LAURA BIRRELL

Collegian Reporter

The Concordia community will feature a luncheon today to help inform the community and K-State alumni of the fine arts and programs K-State has to offer.

The luncheons are a joint effort of Friends of Art and the Alumni Association. The Alumni Association helps make lists for invitations to be sent out.

"The Concordia luncheon will be featuring a mime dance and a violinist who will play while dinner is being served," said Susan Kueker, Con-

The luncheons started in 1987, and there have been two or three every year since then. Usually luncheons feature a live performance from the K-State dance department and slide show of art presented by Wefald. Next year, they are hoping to have four luncheons in different Kansas communities.

"Through these luncheons, people become aware that K-State has outstanding arts," said Tresa Weaver, director for alumni clubs.

"So few people are aware of the arts K-State has to offer," she said. "I erages about 30 people from the think people tend to think of KU or Wichita when they think of art, but I think this is a good program.

"Invitations were sent to everyone in the region who might be interested," Kueker said. "Anyone is welcome; this program is to make every-one aware, not just K-State Alumni."

Luncheon town locations are chosen by regional access. The regions are chosen by whether or not they have had a luncheon in the past and the amount of interest by K-State Alumni in that area.

The luncheon begins at 11:30 a.m. and costs $9 a person. Attendance av-community. "This is the target size because we like to be able to visit with them and make contact. There is no head table, so we can talk person to person," Weaver said.

Everyone who attends is automatically on the mailing list for the "Celebrate K-State" newsletter. This newsletter helps people keep up-todate with the art news at K-State. There will also be interest cards that people can mail in for information and an opportunity for them to join Friends of Art, Weaver said.

Kansas State University Open House

Manhattan, Kansas 66506

The 1992 All-University Open House Coordinating Council is taking applications for student coordinators. These will be the individuals who will help make the All-University Open House Program on Saturday, April 4, 1992, a great success. The following volunteer positions are open:

COORDINATOR: This individual will provide supervision and leadership to the committee chairpersons who are listed below. Strong organizational skills and public relations interests are requirements. For more information, contact last year's coordinator, Martha Kropf, at 539-7606.

ASSISTANT COORDINATOR: This individual will assist the coordinator in providing supervision and leadership to the committee chairpersons who are listed below. Strong organizational skills and public relations interests are requirements. For more information, contact last year's assistant coordinator, Tresa Walters, at 537-9075.

MEDIA CHAIRPERSON: This person is responsible for the coordination of the entire public relations program, which includes TV and radio interviews, high school visitations, and community contacts. This individual will work closely with University Relations. Suggested skills include long term planning and organizational abilities, and excellent communication skills. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Britt Owen, at 539-7606.

STUDENT LIFE EXHIBITS CHAIRPERSON: This person is responsible for coordinating the student organizations' and university departments' table displays in the K-State Union. This person will have the opportunity to work directly with student organization representatives and much of the staff of the K-State Union. This position requires excellent organizational and communication skills. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Mary Copple, at 539-2859.

ENTERTAINMENT CHAIRPERSON: This position involves working with elementary, junior and senior high school music groups, as well as area entertainment groups, who will be invited to the campus to entertain throughout Saturday of Open House. The individual in this position should possess excellent organizational and communication skills, as well as the ability to fulfill long term planning. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Phyllis McDaniel, at 539-8751.

SPECIAL PROJECTS CHAIRPERSON: The assignment for this position includes developing new ideas, special activities, and other promotional activities for the weekend of Open House. This position requires excellent communication skills, organizational abilities, and creativity in planning. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Melissa Schock, at 539-7606.

If you are interested in helping when K-State organizes the 13th annual All-University Open House on April 4, 1992, applications are available in 122 Anderson Hall, Office of the Vice President for Institutional Advancement. Completed applications must be turned in no later than Monday, April 29, 1991. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact one of the students listed, or Pat Bosco, Associate Vice President for Institutional Advancement, 122 Anderson Hall, 532-6237.

Merger of K-State, KCT passes House; bill goes to Finney

ELVYN JONES

City/Government Editor

The merger of K-State and the Kansas College of Technology in Salina won final Legislative approval Saturday.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said the merger was approved by the Kansas House 112-11. The bill now goes to Gov. Joan Finney for her signature.

Sue Peterson, assistant to President Jon Wefald, said Finney is quoted in the Salina Journal as looking favorably on the bill. The governor did put the merger on her budget recommendations before this Legislative session.

Robert Krause, vice president for institutional advancement, said the merger will allow both institutions to strengthen their programs.

The type of debate we heard in the Senate was most appropriate," he said. "The overwhelming consenus reached is that this is good public policy.

Work will begin immediately on details about construction and administrative changes at KCT,

"There are a million details we will be working on the next week to 10 days," he said. "We are very excited about adding Kansas State University-Salina - that sounds good to say.'

But not everything went so smoothly as the regular Legislative session concluded Saturday. Remaining to be resolved in the veto session that convenes April 24 are decisions on taxes, which will determine any final decision made for higher-education

"It's pretty cut and dried," Peterson said. "If they don't pass an income tax increase, we will be cut; if they do, we will probably see a little extra money.'

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said she voted with the Democrats on the Senate Taxation Committee April 11 on approving a revenue package calling for income tax increases and a 1/4 -cent sales tax increase.

The bill arrived on the Senate floor too late to be debated before the session ended, she said.

Oleen said she voted with the Democrats out of concern for what she called the "investment ■ See KCT, Page 5

Senate says UFM issue dead

Rules could be added after allocations process examined

CHRISSY VENDEL

ERWIN SEBA

Staff Reporters

While some people were shocked at Thursday's disclosure of objectionable activities by last year's Senate Finance Committee, many senators were aware of what they termed a dead issue.

During Thursday's Student Senate meeting, Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt said last year's committee might not have handled the allocation process fairly.

"The money that would've been allocated to UFM was dispersed into other groups where it wasn't easily recognized or retrieved," he said.

Phil Anderson, Faculty Senate representative to Student Senate, said he found out about last year's activities when a former senator, Laura Vetter, told him Thursday. He said he was shocked and called Heitschmidt to advise him to make an announcement at that night's meeting in order to avoid the appearance of a cover-

"Todd knew he had a problem, and he asked for my advice," Anderson said about his conversation with Heitschmidt.

Most senators said there was nothing covert about what the 1990 Finance Committee did with the about $13,000 left over when UFM funding was cut.

Travis Stumpff, former Senate vice chairman, said it was simply a policy decision, and everyone in Senate knew what the committee was

"They went down the requests and had to spend the money somewhere," he said. "It wasn't to be nice to the groups, it was to screw UFM."

Anderson said he was surprised when he was told it was reasonably well-known among senators that last year's committee didn't want to fund UFM, so it took the amount of money UFM requested and divided it among other groups in order to make it hard for Senate to restore UFM's budget.

"I don't know if it was illegal, but it was unethical," Anderson said. Anderson said the committee acted inappropriately by not explicitly citing the sources of funds for the various groups. He suggested that a mechanism is needed to ensure 100-percent integrity in future committee reports.

Among the groups which received increases were Associated Students of Kansas at K-State, Consumer Relations Board, Legal Services, Sports Club Council and the Student Gov-

Views of TSI meet criticism

Editor's note: This is the second of two stories about the administration of computing at the University.

As the Executive Computing Council begins a review of the administration of computing at K-State, the issues the council will examine have been defined by an outside consultant's study.

The review, which begins Tuesday, is expected to cause major changes in the organization of the Office of Computing and Telecommunications Activities, which supervises University computing.

It has also been predicted that the director of that office, Tom Gallagher, will no longer be in charge of University computing after the review concludes.

However, the outside study, conducted by Technology Specialists Inc., is criticized for ignoring a long history of underfunding and administrative inattention to computing, as well as blaming problems on CTA when there are other causes.

The response of the Administrative Computing Advisory Committee describes the TSI report as essentially correct, but that some of the assertions it makes "are more attention getting." According to the TSI report, the time-lag between an accounting event and its recording in the Financial Records System can be as long as eight weeks.

"Without doubt this has occurred but is often procedural and outside the purview of computing," the committee response states.

Gallagher, who described the report as a snapshot, wrote in the CTA response, "We are surprised that the TSI consultants failed to fulfill the charge to 'make additional recommendations in the context of the KSU financial situation."

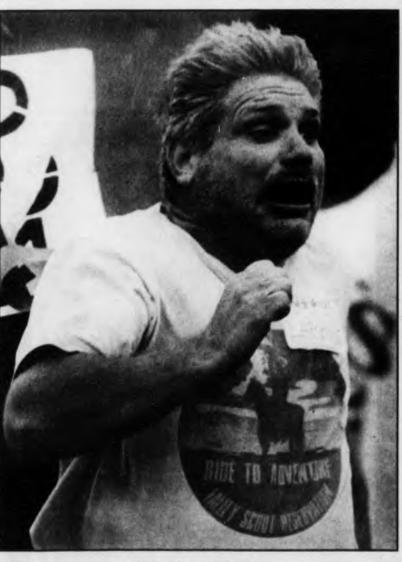

The importance of reliable funding for computing improvements was also emphasized in the administrative committee response.

"The history in computing has been that changes are begun and if the needed resources do not materialize the plan comes to a standstill," according to the response. "Careful long-term planning of resources can help prevent the apathy and poor attitudes that are a result of raised expectations never being effected."

One of the reasons for the TSI report was a fear of another such standstill.

Funding cuts made by the Legislature last year threatened fulfillment of a computing plan laid out by EDUCOM, a consulting group specializing in academic computing, said Tom Rawson, vice president ■ See COMPUTERS, Page 14

The bright smiles of the more than 65 Special Olympians broke through the a sky full of gray clouds at the KSU Special Olympics Field Day Saturday.

Participants from Manhattan, Ogden, Junction City, Wamego and surrounding areas spent the day participating in various events at R.V. Christian Track next to Bramlage Colliseum. The day was a warm-up for the regional Special Olympics,

"The first annual Multicultural Student Council leadership conference was a wonderful growing period for the young organization," said Diana Caldwell, coordinator for minority affairs.

The council members of MSC, comprised of committee members from 11 other minority organizations, spent several months planning and organizing the conference. The structure of the conference was one that allowed for discussion among the participants. There were three sessions during the day, which each had three separate workshops for the participants to attend. Each workshop included some part of the conference's theme leadership. In session one, Tom Cummings, associate director and dean of engineering, delivered a presentation titled "Projecting Self-Confidence."

Cummings said in order to display self-confidence, one must have academic knowledge, social knowledge and the proper skills to be an effective leader.

"You as an individual have a very definite self-worth," he said. "If you are aware of this, it makes it much easier to project your self-confidence."

Another way to project your selfconfidence is to show a genuine enthusiasm for what you are doing, Cummings said.

"If you are really involved with your project, you develop a real passion for what you are doing," he said. "You must have faith in what you represent." Cummings has worked with four organizations - American Indian Science and Engineering Society, Hispanic American Leadership Organization, National Society of

Scientist discredits Chemobyl facts

LONDON (AP) - The most senior scientist at the Chernobyl nuclear power station says the disaster claimed up to 10,000 lives, thousands more than Soviet authorities have admitted, a newspaper reported Sunday.

The Independent newspaper quoted Vladimir Chernousenko as saying the fatalities included miners and military men who died from exposure to radiation during cleanup after the accident.

He is the scientific director in charge of the 18-mile exclusion zone surrounding the power station and said he himself had been given between two and four years to live because of his exposure to radiation. He said that, in part, prompted him to come forward.

Soviet authorities have said 31 people died immediately following the explosion in April 1986.

Chernousenko said 3.5 million people living in nearby Kiev were exposed to radiation levels hundreds of times higher than safe limits. He said the city should have been evacuated.

Stolen van Gogh paintings recovered

AMSTERDAM, Netherlands (AP) - Two armed robbers stole 20 paintings by Vincent van Gogh Sunday in the Netherlands' priciest art theft but abandoned the works less than an hour later outside a railway station, police said.

The haul from the Vincent van Gogh National Museum, which included the final version of his masterpiece "The Potato Eaters," was worth hundreds of millions of dollars, police spokesman Klaas Wilting said.

Police said they did not know why the robbers left the works less than an hour after fleeing. Police found the paintings in two garment bags in the getaway car, parked at the Amstel railway station about 11/2 miles away. There were no arrests.

Oil tanker sinks off Italian Riviera

GENOA, Italy (AP) - Rocked by one last explosion, a fireravaged tanker holding millions of gallons of oil sank Sunday off the Italian Riviera, and experts worked to avert an ecological catastrophe in the Mediterranean.

The Cypriot-registered tanker Haven appeared to have remained intact on the sandy sea bottom 11/2 miles off the shore and it was believed most of the vessel's crude remained inside, officials said.

The tanker held nearly 42 million gallons of Iranian crude when it first caught fire Thursday. A Genoa port authority official, giving a rough estimate, said 15 million gallons of oil may have burned. The official spoke on condition of anonymity.

PINEVILLE, Mo. (AP) - A 22-year-old Pineville reserve police officer was killed Sunday by two gunshots to the head and the city police marshal was wounded in an early morning shootout at a convenience store parking lot, authorities said.

McDonald County Sheriff Lou Keeling said law officers from Missouri, Oklahoma and Arkansas were searching a five squaremile area near the Arkansas border for one of two teen-age suspects, both from Gravette, Ark.

Pineville, a community of about 500, is in the southwestern corner of Missouri, about 30 miles south of Joplin.

The second suspect was in custody, and Keeling said charges of first degree murder and attempted murder would be sought. Keeling said officer David Thurman was killed during a scuffle with one of the suspects. He said the suspect may have grabbed the officer's weapon and killed him with his own gun. City Marshal Lloyd Perkins, 65, was grazed on the head by two bullets, Keeling said. Perkins was treated at Bates Memorial Hospital in Bentonville, Ark., where he was listed in stable condition.

Homes evacuated because of floods

(AP) - Waters of the Ninnescah River were receding Sunday at Kingman, where several families had to evacuate Saturday night because of flooding

'Things are improving," said Paulette Forcum, a dispatcher with the Kingman County sheriff's department. She said high water had closed some bridges on township roads.

She said she knew of three homes that were evacuated Saturday night, but the residents were able to return Sunday morning. Light showers, and even a little sleet, were reported in Kansas on Sunday. Rainfall totals during the 24-hour period ending at 7 a.m. ranged up to 1.11 inches at Manhattan.

At mid-afternoon, there was an isolated thunderstorm reported about 30 miles southwest of Pratt, associated with an area of showers extending from 20 miles west of Salina through Pratt and into northwest Oklahoma.

1st Infantry return Health educators of Big Eight share ideas planned for May

From Staff and Wire Reports

The main body of the 1st Infantry Division is tentatively scheduled to return from the Persian Gulf in May.

Col. Gary LaGrange told family members Thursday that military officials had provided the tentative schedule to enable the base to make preparations for the division's arrival.

LaGrange stressed that the schedule is tentative, and Fort Riley's public affairs officials could not confirm LaGrange's return dates.

Officials said Friday that more than 900 soldiers from several different Fort Riley units are scheduled to arrive May 4.

Those soldiers will make up an advance party that will reopen barracks, dining facilities and administrative offices in preparation of the return of the bulk of the soldiers between May 12 and May 15.

Just don't drink the water. George Marchin, associate professor of biology, and Steve Upton, assistant professor of biology, have confirmed the existence of the parasites, giardia and cryptosporidium, in Tuttle Creek Reservoir, Milford Lake, the Kansas River and streams of the Konza Prarie.

The parasites are known to cause a gastrointestinal disease, making the victim very sick, Marchin said.

Although diarrhea is the primary symptom, he said, the infection may become more severe in some people or be asymptomatic in others.

"It feels like the flu," Upton said. "They experience abdominal cramps and have diarrhea."

It is not likely people will be-come infected by swimming in these areas. Drinking the water without first treating it, however, will increase the risk, Marchin said.

"You would have to gulp down quite a bit of water to become infected," he said. "But, if I were camping, I wouldn't draw the water without boiling it or treating it in some way.

Upton said Manhattan has an excellent filtering system, so the parasites are not transferred into city

Treatment takes one to two weeks and usually involves administering the drug Flagyl.

"This disease is very common. A lot of people are treated for it," Marchin said.

Giardia is a flagellated parasite that can be found in several areas of the country. Cryptosporidium is even more common, Upton said.

Because of the universality of the parasites, Marchin said the discovery here was not surprising.

Post-Persian Gulf: Bush has sights set on Central America | Sanitized war work of White House, Pentagon demonization

RYAN HAYTER

President George Bush's attempts to move American industry into Central America is causing problems in John Swomley Jr., secretary of the National Board of the American Civil Liberties Union, lectured about U.S. policies in Central America following a rice and bean dinner sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance for Central America Friday.

"George Bush wants to make Central America the sweatshop of American industry," Swomley said.

He warned that if free-trade agreements pass, industry will be able to move into those countries without legal safeguards.

"Bush's efforts to provide cheaper taxes and labor to American industry will not only lose jobs for workers in the United States," he said, "but it will result in large-scale exploitation of workers in Central America."

Bush's policies are a continution of those established by the Kissinger Commission under former President Ronald Reagan.

Swomley said under these policies, the United States would induce, or if necessary coerce, Central American nations to become junior partners in a new regional alliance with the United States as the senior, dominant partner.

"Cultural imperialism was set by the Kissinger commission," he said.

"Reagan had little to do with what was going on," he said. "Bush was the mastermind behind much of the Central American policy."

Swomley said the Bush administration provided $7 million to organize the electoral opposition to the Sandinistas in Nicarauga, delivering free gifts, food and money to the

"After the election was over, Bush promised $300 million in aid," he said. "But, we've held it back because their government has not been able to destroy the Sandinistas' lead labor union.

Swomley said Panama is the key to Bush's Central American policy.

The 1985 campaign against General Noriega began after he refused to allow Panama to be used as a staging ground for military attacks against Nicaragua," Swomley said. "Panama also refused, at the time, to end trade with Cuba.'

He said the Bush administration has censored from public view the many atrocities committed by the American military in Panama. Many arrests have been made, 14 mass graves have been discovered and media that oppose Bush policy have been shut down.

Swomley said despite an unceasing search, American officials haven't found documents that conclusively reveal Noriega trafficked any

JODELL LAMER

Collegian Reporter "Lessons to be learned from the War in the Gulf" was the topic of the speech given by John Swomley in the K-State Union Courtyard Friday

The speech was part of a panel discussion and public forum sponsored by the Coalition for Peace in the Middle East.

Swomley, professor of social ethics, teaches at the St. Paul School of Theology in Kansas City, Mo.

"You cannot trust what comes out of the White House," Swomley said. 'In this war, the White House and the Pentagon managed the news more carefully and entirely, from their perspective, than in any war anywhere in the world up to this time, including the Soviet Union."

Swomley gave examples of events occurring in Iraq prior to the war that were hidden by the government. He called this the most sanitized war in

"There is a long build-up of demonization of the leader of the country to permit the American people to feel good about going into the war,' Swomley said.

He said the demonization process creates the feeling that the other side is so evil that we ought to be the messianic nation that goes and sets things

Swomley said another lesson was that more than 70 percent of all the bomb destruction was non-surgical.

"The bombing was so extensive, and it was extensive in Panama too, that we need to lay to rest this idea that you can have anything like a surgical strike," he said.

Swomley said he was bothered by the yellow-ribbon campaigns. He said one objective of the military may have been the selection of reserve units from specific areas of the "People who put out yellow ribbons and were opposed to the war were indirectly futhering the military objective at this point," he said.

"How can you support the troops but not the war?" he asked. "There was a virtual mass-hysteria about this and afterward a mass-euphoria with respect to the yellow ribbons."

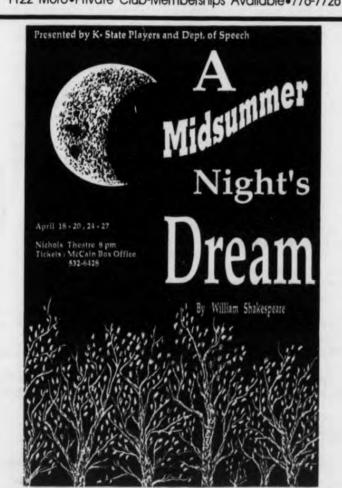

Swomley said the initial spillage of oil in Persian Gulf was probably from the bombing by U.S. planes.

"The military can't contradict this," he said. "The censorship was so tight that there was no independent source of news that permitted any newspaper to verify any of their (Iraqi) charges."

Swomley said the United States may move militarily on Cuba or Libya next.

"If we are to prevent future wars, we have got to be alerted at the very country to bolster support for the first sign of demonization," he said.

Bradley not Superman, but could be in '92

en. Bill Bradley, D-New Jersey, should be President. Bradley will deliver a Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium. Everyone in Manhattan oughta go. The Missouri-born, New Jersey Democrat is one of the better speakers in American politics, and one of the smarter politicians, too.

This, of course, makes him a weasel. Among the other weasels, however, he is pretty docile. He dodges issues, patronizes constituents and spends more time in speeches referring to his basketball days as a Princeton All-American and a Knickerbocker than he ever spent on the basketball court. But these sorts of things are part of the unavoidable truth about politicians - they are swine, but necessary swine.

Resigned to the fact that we have to elect somebody President of the United States again, voters need to ask two questions. Was the Persian Gulf War good enough to re-elect George Bush? Would a different president perform

The gulf war achieved most of the administration's stated goals. Iraq was sent out of Kuwait by a combined effort of the world community, led by the United States. A New World Order settled over the globe, and nobody is going to invade anybody ever again.

Then reality, as it tends to do, screwed up a lot of things. With Saddam Hussein still in power, and the civil war failing, hundreds of thousands of Kurds became refugees. As of last Friday, 900,000 refugees had fled to Iran, the "Country with a Heart."

Bush became angry, bitter on television, and yelled at a bunch of people asking him to maybe give these refugees, who would not be refugees if not for the Persian Gulf War's ultimate failure of not removing Saddam, some real help. By declaring the refugees a jurisdictional problem, Bush confirms what many cynics declared years ago. Bush uses morality when it suits his political ambitions. In my father's terms, he is not a terribly consistent

So to the question whether the gulf war should be the vehicle Bush drives to a second term, his unwillingness to aid the refugees presents a problem. The war could be a nice, new, shiny Chevy Lumina that Bush could drive to re-election, but the refugee dilemma and other post-war fallout might just be an Edsel with a dragging tailpipe and a shot

If Bush's campaign uses the war as its key issue — a severe likelihood — and the voters remember the number of Kurds killed or misplaced, the voters might feel the inherent condescending tone of jingoistic TV commercials and look for someone eise. And why not, if the New World Order is going to do away with warmongers and mean people?

Bush has been like the absent-minded professer of the old Disney movies. In his pursuit of higher values, he has forgotten to tie his shoes, make his bed or change his boxer shorts. Where is his domestic policy? Can he remember basic U.S. geography? Does he understand that one in eight children is hungry, or does he figure that school lunches and GI rations are sufficient for growing boys? I apologize for my bleeding heart, but Bush has neglected his own country in the course of saving another.

So no, the war ought not be enough to reelect Bush. However, it does recommend Bush for Secretary of War in the next cabinet. Next question.

else were president? Perhaps. Another person code changes. He knows arcana about Lex might have been able to fight a war and juggle domestic crises, as past presidents have done, FDR being the most notable example. But we bought the ticket, and are doomed to ride out this last leg of the Bush/Quayle whirlymachine. Refreshment, read "Barf," bags will be provided at the ride's conclusion. Please leave your seat belts on until we have come to a complete stop. And, please, have a nice day.

Who will get the role of Superman in 1992? Bush, of course, will still be in pretty good shape and already has his costume, besides. On the Democrat side, Paul Tsongas has auditioned, but the casting director thought he was too derivative of the last guy who was up for the part: Dukakis. Mario Cuomo is having a successful run of "Fiorello" in New York, and has telegraphed that he must once again decline the offer. The new Virginia governor, Douglas Wilder, might try out, but his lack of experience might lead a casting director to doubt his lack of depth in portraying Superman so soon. Jesse Jackson's acting techniques are too revolutionary for the simple staging of Superman. In another few years maybe (when the country catches up to him).

No, the best choice is Bill Bradley. He's Would it make any difference if someone tall, athletic and can see through leaden tax Luthor's economic situation (that's Russia, if this has become too obscure). Bill Bradley is politically correct without being orthodox. He is deeply involved in various human rights organizations, but (conditionally) supported the Nicaraguan Contras. He is a liberal, but not a loony liberal. He is much closer in economic theory to the Republican freetraders than to Ted Kennedy. The 1986 tax code reform was Bradley's bill all the way. He is the perfect medium for a president after Reagan and Bush.

f there really is a New World Order, Bradley would make a better president than Bush. Bradley, unlike Bush, has two hands. He could conduct foreign policy well, while at the same time conduct domestic policy. This is something Bush cannot do, or as Sylvia Plath said about her father, he "do not do." Bradley

The secret to Bradley's ability is his rare capacity for caution. While this has been, at times, a weakness (such as in his most recent bid for senatorial re-election), caution is the quality that makes Bradley the most attractive potential candidate the Democrat party has to offer in 1992.

Bill Bradley is not Superman, and that may be why he'd make a good one.

Military must tighten belt

The ominous threat of world war with the Soviet Union and the Warsaw Pact has pretty much vanished.

The Soviet Union must take care of many internal problems that threaten the existence of the Union. The Warsaw Pact officially disbanded months

The bulk of our military forces were conceptionally designed to deter this massive threat, which in the span of two years has abruptly disappeared.

The U.S. military must change to reflect this diminishing threat.

Last Friday, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney introduced a plan to close 31 U.S. military installations and 12 smaller bases during the next five years. At least 28 bases would be reduced or reassigned tasks, and some installations would grow.

The closings are part of a long-range plan to shrink the U.S. military by 25 percent by

The proposal would save $850 million in the first five years and about $1.7 billion per year after that.

Critics of the plan contend this is a ploy by President Bush and his cabinet to target military installations in Democratic strongholds. Most of the critics of the plan appear to be Democrat congressmen.

Many local jobs are in jeopardy, and they fear dissatisfied voters will elect Republican legislators.

The proposal is to close obsolete or unneeded bases and reduce waste in the U.S. military. Difficult choices have been made in many smoke-filled rooms in Washington, D.C., and the plan will affect both Democrats and Republicans.

The plan will have a rough going when presented as legislation later this year, but something will have to be done to reduce the size of our military.

The U.S. military is taking its first steps in tightening its belt, as most of America already has.

The U.S. military should be commended for its efforts to reduce its size because there is a reduced threat.

Glorifying alcohol, consumption wrong

Editor,

Over the years, I have read a lot of things in the Collegian that have aroused me, angered me, stirred me or tickled me. I find a great deal of the contents to be sophomoric, but I have tolerated that, attributing it to the fact that this is a student newspaper and there has to be a lot of learning that takes place before staff members are ready for positions in realworld newspapers.

One of the most blatant examples of what I consider to be bad judgment occurred in last Monday's paper. I am talking about the feature story on the Jalapeno Fest. This is one of the most revolting pieces I have read in a long time. I'm really sorry the piece was written, and I'm additionally sorry that an editorial decision to print it was made themselves in oddball ways; I have no quarrel with either. But this article was written in a style that glorified the activities that took place, and those were all abusive as far as alcohol was concerned. Drinking games, drinking to get drunk, driving after drinking, drinking for long periods and drinking for the purpose of consuming huge quantities of alcohol were all mentioned, modified with such adjectives as "laughing," "fun-filled" and "wonderful." I am appalled at your lack of a perspective on the alcohol issue.

In the last year, I have dealt with at least two students who admitted to me that their problems in the classroom were partially related to their drinking problems. I can't imagine how many of the students I see have a problem they don't or won't tell me about, or a difficulty caused by a relative or loved one who has an alcohol problem. Recent signs on campus have seemed encouraging, as University groups have appeared to be dealing more intelligently with alcohol. This article seems to indicate that we have taken a step backwards.

If I were a glutton for self punishment, I would ask some more questions about this event. What group organized or sponsored it? (I'd like to stay as far away from them as possible; but please tell me they have no official connection with K-State or any of its registered organizations.) Where is Cedar Hills Golf Course, and why would anyone with an iota of common sense let such an event take place at their place of business? (I'd want to be sure they never got a penny of my recreation money, but I'd also want to stay a long way from the drivers leaving the course.) What would the editors of the Collegian say was the purpose of printing a story of this nature? (How about, "It was an interesting John Boyer able illness. Knowing that the illness is a cold is one thing, but when it's not and goes undiagnosed it's another.

But, most people try to sweat out a sickness without going to the doctor, and going undiagnosed can be fatal.

Last week, a K-State student died of a rare viral infection with symptoms similar to mononucleosis. Bannus Niemeir, senior in agricultural education, did visit a doctor about his symptoms, but probably was unaware at the time of diagnosis how serious his illness was.

Without a doctor's opinion, how can any of us really be sure what the persistent cough and fever means? Niemeir's death should give cause to take any illness seriously and to ask questions about what exactly is happening in the body.

Finals are coming soon. Students will be experiencing increased stress, which will lower the immune system. These are the times a visit to the doctor may help.

It could mean the difference between life and death.

Bradley not Superman, but could be in '92

en. Bill Bradley, D-New Jersey, should be President. Bradley will deliver a Landon Lecture at 10:30 a.m. today in McCain Auditorium. Everyone in Manhattan oughta go. The Missouri-born, New Jersey Democrat is one of the better speakers in American politics, and one of the smarter politicians, too.

This, of course, makes him a weasel. Among the other weasels, however, he is pretty docile. He dodges issues, patronizes constituents and spends more time in speeches referring to his basketball days as a Princeton All-American and a Knickerbocker than he ever spent on the basketball court. But these sorts of things are part of the unavoidable truth about politicians - they are swine, but necessary swine.

Resigned to the fact that we have to elect somebody President of the United States again, voters need to ask two questions. Was the Persian Gulf War good enough to re-elect George Bush? Would a different president perform

The gulf war achieved most of the administration's stated goals. Iraq was sent out of Kuwait by a combined effort of the world community, led by the United States. A New World Order settled over the globe, and nobody is going to invade anybody ever again.

Then reality, as it tends to do, screwed up a lot of things. With Saddam Hussein still in power, and the civil war failing, hundreds of thousands of Kurds became refugees. As of last Friday, 900,000 refugees had fled to Iran, the "Country with a Heart."

Bush became angry, bitter on television, and yelled at a bunch of people asking him to maybe give these refugees, who would not be refugees if not for the Persian Gulf War's ultimate failure of not removing Saddam, some real help. By declaring the refugees a jurisdictional problem, Bush confirms what many cynics declared years ago. Bush uses morality when it suits his political ambitions. In my father's terms, he is not a terribly consistent

So to the question whether the gulf war should be the vehicle Bush drives to a second term, his unwillingness to aid the refugees presents a problem. The war could be a nice, new, shiny Chevy Lumina that Bush could drive to re-election, but the refugee dilemma and other post-war fallout might just be an Edsel with a dragging tailpipe and a shot

If Bush's campaign uses the war as its key issue — a severe likelihood — and the voters remember the number of Kurds killed or misplaced, the voters might feel the inherent condescending tone of jingoistic TV commercials and look for someone eise. And why not, if the New World Order is going to do away with warmongers and mean people?

Bush has been like the absent-minded professer of the old Disney movies. In his pursuit of higher values, he has forgotten to tie his shoes, make his bed or change his boxer shorts. Where is his domestic policy? Can he remember basic U.S. geography? Does he understand that one in eight children is hungry, or does he figure that school lunches and apologize for my bleeding heart, but Bush has neglected his own country in the course of saving another.

Who will get the role of Superman in 1992? Bush, of course, will still be in pretty good shape and already has his costume, besides. On the Democrat side, Paul Tsongas has auditioned, but the casting director thought he was too derivative of the last guy who was up for the part: Dukakis. Mario Cuomo is having a successful run of "Fiorello" in New York, and has telegraphed that he must once again decline the offer. The new Virginia governor, Douglas Wilder, GI rations are sufficient for growing boys? I might try out, but his lack of experience might lead a casting director to doubt his lack of depth in portraying Superman so soon. Jesse Jackson's acting techniques are too revolutionary for the simple staging of Superman. In another few years maybe (when the country catches up to him).

Heitschmidt said he made his announcement because he did not want last year's controversy to affect this year's allocation process.

"Last year they made recommendations; the Senate didn't like them, and they were overturned," he said. "It was taken care of."

Heitschmidt said he thought close questioning of this year's committee members regarding their personal agendas would prevent the problem from reoccurring this year.

"It was a comfort to me that Craig didn't agree with what happened last year," he said referring to Craig Uhrich, this year's finance committee chairman.

Uhrich said he was concerned about the timing of the disclosure.

"I hope people realize this was last year's committee, it does not pertain to this year's allocation process," he

Sean Cash, arts and sciences senator, said he didn't think the committee acted unjustly.

"The entire Senate knew the policy decision to cut UFM. It was clear what was going on," Cash said. "It's all in how you interpret it."

Pete Marsh, Senate chairman and a member of last year's finance committee, described how money was redistributed after the decision to cut UFM was made.

"Of course we didn't draw arrows to where it went," he said. "We wanted UFM to get nothing, but then Senate decided differently.
"This is a dead issue," he said.

"Everyone more or less benefited

Uhrich said whenever a budget is drawn up, the left-over money normally goes into a contingency fund, but they didn't do that last year.

"They thought if they put the $13,000 into contingencies, then people would just take it out and fund UFM," Uhrich said. "They looked back at the groups they were done funding and put the money back into their cuts."

During last year's meetings, Uhrich said that things were said in conversation about putting the money back in small increments, so it would be hard to get it back out.

"It was OK to the letter of the law, but to the spirit of the law, probably not," he said.

Uhrich said he wasn't one of UFM's bigger fans, but he did think it deserved some money.

"The main thing that bothered me was when we started putting the money back in," he said.

Marsh said Senate Adviser Sally Routson gave the committee very conservative estimates of SGA's projected income with which to prepare the budget and didn't tell the committee about additional money she had discovered.

Routson said the conservative estimate came from the University Office of the Controller. She discovered the additional funds in a little-used SGA account only after the decision was made to fund UFM.

Routson came across about $15,000, and with that money plus some additional cuts, Senate could fund UFM without running a deficit.

Even though many senators believe the issue ended with last year's funding of UFM, Heitschmidt said Senate would examine additional guidelines for future finance

She said she wouldn't expect the regents to increase tuitions when they meet in Manhattan Thursday.

While starring for the NBA's New York Knicks for 10 years beginning in 1967, Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., was on the road and on the run constantly.

It was no different Sunday night. Just moments after arriving in Manhattan from a visit with Gov. Joan Finney at Cedar Crest in Topeka, the 47-year-old native of Crystal City, Mo., was recounting his years as a college and professional basketball player.

But just briefly, mind you. A dinner engagement was to follow in minutes, and it would be time to be on the road again.

While he was talking about his days at Princeton University and in New York, it was obvious Bradley was proud of what he had accomplished within a team framework.

I can't really talk about a game that I had that was meaningful apart from the success we might have enjoyed as a team.

This is a man who breaks the stereotypical political mold. He really didn't want to talk about his own exploits, and the humility didn't appear phony.

Understandably, he paused for a moment before recalling what he termed his greatest experience as a player at Princeton. It came on the road to the Final Four in 1965.

"I can't really talk about a game that I had that was meaningful apart from the success we might have enjoyed as a team," he said. "For that reason, the game we won in the Eastern Regional final, 109-69 over Providence, was probably the

"Providence was favored to win, and we beat them, and badly. I think I scored 41 points, so it wasn't my greatest game scoring."

That top-scoring performance came in the third-place game of the Final Four following the win over Providence. The opponent was Wichita State, and Bradley lit the Shockers up for 58 points, beating his previous scoring best of 51.

Bradley said the thrill of participating in a Final Four is different than the thrill experienced on the night of an election, but the work done in a season closely resembles that done in an election campaign.

"On election night, it's all over. You're just waiting for results," he said. "In the Final Four, there's a great deal of pressure. You're determining those results.

"A more valid comparison can be made, I think, between an election campaign and the work you do in the course of a season leading up to the Final Four. You do planning like a game plan - and if you've done it well, the results are evident."

The work Bradley did in his most recent campaign paid off in his election to a third term in the Senate. The work he did on the floor at Princeton paid off in a chance to play in the NBA with the Knicks.

And his time in New York helped Bradley grow immensely, he said.

"It was a unique opportunity to play the game I loved and to travel around the country and see it," he said. "It was an extremely important time in my life. I grew up a lot in those years."

That growth, and his chance to see the United States, logically led to his involvement in political life,

CHRISTOPHER T. ASSAF/Staff

Bill Bradley, D-N.J., arrived in Manhattan late Sunday for a Landon Lecture he will give this morning. The former professional basketball player was recently elected to a third term in the U.S. Senate.

"That probably was not unimportant," he said of time on the road relating to his desire to benefit the nation he had seen while playing basketball. "There was a relation between what I did on the road as a basketball player and what I'm doing now as a political leader.

'I was always trying to find the essence of every place I was in then, and I am still doing so today."

In addition to trying to find that essence, Bradley is also still trying his hand at competitive basketball at least once a year. A benefit 3-on-3 game for his daughter's spots on the floor are auctioned off provides the chance.

This year's installment came just last Sunday.

"Usually five dentists of about my age buy the spots and we go at it," Bradley said. "This year, we played two games, and then, in the third game, they brought in a 31-year-old. And, you guessed it, he guarded me and I had to guard him. I pulled a couple of muscles in the process."

Bradley admits he isn't as physically active as he would like to be.

"I ride a stationary bike irreguschool, in which the remaining five larly," he said. "I probably should do it three times a week. That's the only thing I do to stay in shape, really, except shoot around with my daughter occasionally."

Bradley's NBA career came to a close after a storied run. This career as a senator — appears to still be going strong.

"I was just given a new six-year contract by the people of New Jersey," he said, comparing his days under professional contract to those of today. "I'm still fascinated by what makes America work and the decisions we have to make in order to ensure that our country is a better place for our children.'

AUGUSTA, Ga. - The little one finally won a big one.

The Welshman Ian Woosnam, who has labored in the shadow of his more famous European friends, made a par putt just about as long as his 5 feet, 4 inches to turn back Tom Watson on the last hole Sunday and win the 55th Masters.

He won his first major with a scrambling par to finish off a final round of par 72 and a 11-under-par 277 total.

Boddicker, Gibson lead winning effort

By the Associated Press KANSAS CITY, Mo. - It will not comfort the New York Yankees to learn the pitcher who shut them out on four hits for eight innings Sunday hurt himself just before the game.

"I just kind of strained a muscle in my butt while warming up," Mike Boddicker said after Kansas City's 5-3 triumph. "Actually, it hurt a little the whole game. But it was no big deal. You know how it feels when you get a shot? That's how it felt."

The Royals got maximum use of their two high-priced free agents in handing the Yankees their second loss in the three-game set. While Boddicker (1-1) was lowering earned run average to 0.53 for 17 innings, designated hitter Kirk Gibson was hitting two home runs.

Gibson's three-run shot in the first inning off Andy Hawkins (0-1) gave Boddicker a 4-0 lead. Then his solo homer in the eighth made it 5-0 before the Yankees scored three in the ninth off relievers Mark Davis and Jeff Montgomery.

Gibson, who tripled on opening day, hadn't had a multiple-homer

Scott McFall added the first in-

Sean Pedersen claimed the win for K-State. He replaced starter Dan Driskill in the third, and allowed only two Iowa State hits and had two K's.

Saturday's games were dominated by pitching, and Iowa State had the upper hand. The Cyclones swept the doubleheader 3-2 and K-State rallied from a two-run deficit in the eighth inning of the first game. Lance Wilson tied the score with a two-RBI single. However, the Big Eight's leading batter Tom Vantiger tripled off of Kent Hipp (5-3), and scored in the bottom of the ninth.

The Cyclones' other two runs came on solo home run shots by John Camelin and Kevin Monroe.

Tim Churchman went seven innings in the second game of the doubleheader, allowing only five hits and striking out five, but Cy-clone pitcher Matt Petersen allowed only three hits to shutout K-State 2-0.

The Wildcats had the bases loaded in the top of the final inning, but failed to get any runs across the plate.

With the split, K-State moves to 26-18 overall and 7-9 in Big Eight play, and Iowa State goes to 15-17 overall and 4-8 in conference play.

Girl scouts earn engineering interest patches

Kansas troops visit University, attend workshops for badges

KELLY BERG Campus Editor

More than 350 Girl Scouts, ranging from 4th-graders to high-school seniors, have an interest patch to sew on their uniforms as a result of their visit to K-State Saturday

Girl Scout troops from 13 counties in Northeast Kansas were on campus to participate in the engineering workshops sponsored by the Society of Women Engineers, the College of Engineering, Campus Girl Scouts and Kaw Valley Girl Scout Council and to earn the newly designed engineering interest patch.

Lynda Bachelor, adviser for the Campus Girl Scouts and organizer for the event, said she originally got the idea for the engineering badge last June when she noted that the Girl Scouts' badge book doesn't offer an engineering badge.

She said her job as campus adviser includes trying to find ways to link K-State with other Girl Scout groups across the state. K-State's state-ofthe art engineering college — and the Girl Scouts' lack of an engineering badge - offered a chance for the men Engineers. These precautions campus to establish that link by providing the medium for young girls to learn about the many different fields of engineering.

"I tried to use as many K-State volunteers (for the workshops) as possible rather than just relying on area Girl Scouts," Bachelor said.

A lot of the volunteers came out of the College of Engineering, she said.

"The engineering college has bent over backwards for us," she said. The workshop started with opening remarks by Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering; Fran Hug, president of KVGSC; and Susan Dutch, program director of

The girls were then divided into 12 groups - eight junior and four cadet/ senior — and proceeded through a series of eight different workshops, each presenting a different type of engineering.

Each Girl Scout wore a colorcoded name tag to help designate which of the 12 groups she belonged to and each group had a group guide who was either a Campus Girl Scout or a member of the Society of Wo-helped keep the large number of young girls organized and to eliminate as much confusion as possible.

The group guides had special training sessions before the day of the workshops to teach them how to deal with their young guests.

"This was all new to most of them," Bachelor said. "So we tried to give them pointers.

"We also tried to keep the groups small so the girls could learn as much as possible and then gather together at the end of the day and share what they learned with the other groups."

Throughout the course of the workshops, the junior Girl Scouts were required to complete five activities and the senior Girl Scouts were required to complete eight.

These activities ranged from building a bridge with popsicle sticks and testing the durability of the structure in a compression tester, to visiting a nuclear power facility and discussing the advantages and disadvantages of using nuclear energy.

"By not making the badge requirements really specific, we hope to make it so Girl Scouts all over can utilize the engineering badge," Bachelor said. "We're hoping to get this badge nationally recognized.'

She said when a council develops a badge, in order to make it a nationally recognized badge, it needs to write up the requirements to receive the badge and send them to the national Girl Scout council.

If the badge is accepted, it will be included in the regular official Girl Scout badge book, which will make it available to all Girl Scouts.

Bachelor said the badge was designed by Marie Watson, Manhattan resident, while the projects and activities were designed by the Society of Women Engineers.

One small thing that happened here today might have changed the whole direction of someone's life. -Fran Hug

KVGSC president

Jan Galitzer, conference coordinator for the Division of Continuing Education, was also a key organizer for the event.

Bachelor said, "I picked Jan to be involved because she's worked with youth before. I figured she would be most likely to know all the special considerations and conditions you run across when dealing with youth."

Bachelor and Galitzer said they envision a possible series developing out of the engineering workshop.

"I vision each college doing workshops," Galitzer said. "This year we did engineering, but we could create a whole series of K-State Interest Days to help young girls know about their different career opportunities.

"We need to tap into the wonderful resources we have here at K-State," she said.

Both women said they were encouraged by the engineering badge workshop's success. We had to turn away more than 100 Girl Scouts for this program," Bachelor said, "because so many people responded.'

She attributed the overall success of the event to the cooperation from the University.

Galitzer said, "Student involvement was the key; it was necessary for the success of the event."

Hug, who was one of only four women who graduated from the College of Architecture and Design in 1969, said she thought the entire program was a huge success.

"One small thing that happened here today might have changed the whole direction of someone's life," she said. "We need to keep having events like this to let the girls know that it's great to be smart and involved in science."

Dutch agreed.

"It's my job to find places like this to have these wonderful programs," she said. "It really helps us (the KVGSC) because it's getting so expensive to do these programs."

After all the girls and volunteers met in Ahearn Field House to discuss the day's events and share what they learned, the junior Girl Scouts headed to their respective homes, but the senior Girl Scouts' day at K-State was not finished.

The remaining girls were divided into six groups and each group spent the night at a different cooperating sorority.

The girls arrived at the sorority houses about 4 p.m., but then left again for an evening of activities planned at the K-State Union.

Bachelor said the Girl Scouts watched a movie, played pool and bowled in the Union until about 11:30 p.m., then returned to the sorority houses.

"They got to act like K-State students for the day," Bachelor said. Michelle Dutton, junior in marketing and Alpha Delta Pi member said about 20 girls slept in their recreation room in the basement of the house in sleeping bags.

"They were really well-behaved," Dutton said. "They were pretty tired by the time they got here, and most of them fell right to sleep."

Essential Edge on target at half-way point

Campaign goals now exceed $100 million

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

Editor's note: This is the first of a series of articles about the Essential Edge

The Essential Edge Campaign is halfway through its five-year goal of $100 million for K-State.

Next fall, the Essential Edge will turn its focus toward campus and ask the faculty, staff and students to Work on the campaign began in mid-1988 under the direction of the KSU Foundation. The initial planning step was to sample alumni and friends of the University to see what the fund-raising possibilities actu-

Secondly, each college, intercollegiate athletics, the planned art museum and the library were asked to compile a list of needs for their project.

Goals for the campaign were set by combining the needs of the projects and the resources available to meet those needs. At that point, a national committee determined the goals for each project.

The final determination, from our perspective, comes from the lead volunteers. The campaign has been a volunteer-led campaign," said Rusty Andrews, associate director of the Essential Edge

'The National Campaign Committee, which is all volunteers and mostly alumni, makes the final decision on the goals set for specific projects. Within those parameters we work with the dean, if it's a college, and the department heads within that college to determine the top priorities for that college," he said.

"We're not going to be able to meet all of the needs that could possibly be named on campus. It forces everyone on campus involved in the campaign to make the tough decisions about our biggest needs," Andrews said.

When the $100 million campaign was announced in April 1990, the campaign goals were set, and more than half of the money had already been raised.

Since that time, the KSU Foundation, the college deans and project leaders, and the national committee have worked to develop the existing constituencies and turn those prospective contributions into actual contributions.

Along the way, there have been both successes and stumbling

Mark Moore, director of the Essential Edge campaign, said, "There have been some large gifts that we thought would materialize, but did not. On the other side of the coin, thought were going to happen, but

For example, the winner of the Kansas Lotto contributed $800,000 for new turf at KSU Stadium, a proposed art museum is on the brink of being a reality, and about 75 percent of the overall goal has been reached.

On the down side, the economic condition of the country has hampered contributions; the level of fund raising experience or constituent development is not equal across the campus; two colleges are still in an interim dean situation; and the library has only been able to reach 13 percent of their goal.

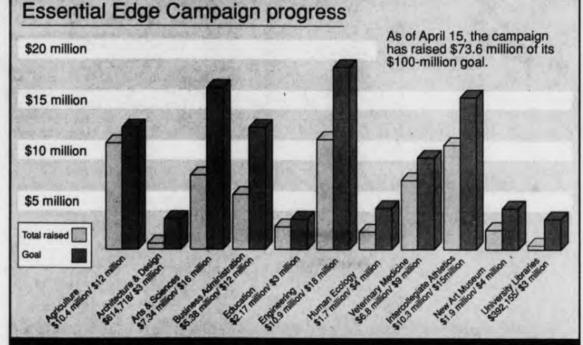

Taking all this in stride, the constituent development officers at the Foundation have been working to accomplish the goals.

"We are on target. We are where we want to be, and I have every reason to believe that the campaign is going to be successful - Not just from a dollar standpoint, but from the number of relationships that we have developed," Moore said. President Jon Wefald agreed with Wefald said things are going well for the Essential Edge Campaign.

We're sure we're going to raise the $100 million, there's no doubt about it, it's a matter of how much we will go over it. I think all of the (projects) will meet their goals before the campaign is over," he said. Foundation President Arthur Loub is not so optimistic.

"This is not an exact science. This does not mean this is infallable and we're going to reach all these goals," Loub said. "But, it does mean we feel confident we're going to reach $100 million. Now, whether we achieve all the sub-objectives is another matter.

meet all of the sub-goals. That happens in every campaign."

The campaign relies on donors for support. The contributions that come in are generally designated to specific projects within the various projects.

We are involved in what we call

"Some things are over sub- constituency fund raising. Which scribed, and others are undersub- means we work with the programs scribed. It's quite possible to meet that are here, and we try to develop your overall aggregate goal and not the best fund-raising models we can with the existing constituencies,"

> "People don't give money anymore to mother university," Loub said. "It's very dedicated money. People know what they want to support. It's their money; they make the

Gymnast competes at nationals

Jeremy Cowell, freshman in mechanical engineering, practices his routine on the rings Wednesday night in the Natatorium.

Freshman represents student-run club at Division II contest in California

MEREDITH JONES Collegian Reporter

Jeremy Cowell, freshman in mechanical engineering, returned Sunday from California where he competed in the Division II National Gymnastics competition. Cowell, of Burlington, Vt., competed Saturday in the all-around competition, which included floor exercise, rings, pommel horse, parallel bars, horizontal bar and vault. He said he felt he competed well even though he didn't place in the competition.

"I didn't place, but I did good for myself," Cowell said. "It gave me a good idea of what to expect in the Cowell said every gymnastics club in the United States could send one member, and he was the only one who showed a real interest in the competition at the University of California in Davis.

Club President Terry Presnell also made the trip, as a coach. The two left Friday.

Presnell, a sophomore in veterinary medicine, said she took care of the paperwork and coached him, so he could just concentrate on his performance.

"It was kind of a last-minute decision to go," Presnell said.

"It's a national event, so there were people from all over the country," Presnell said.

I didn't place, but I did good for myself. It gave me a good idea of what to expect in the future.

> -Jeremy Cowell freshman in mechanical engineering

Presnell said if he had made it to finals, he would have competed Saturday evening, but since he didn't he got the chance to watch other competitors.

Cowell has been in the sport of gymnastics for 13 years.

"I started gymnastics when I was six," he said.

"I competed for a private club in high school," Cowell said.

He said he decided to come to K-State from Vermont because of the engineering program and because he wanted to get away from home.

The K-State Gymnastics Club is a student-run club with more than 100 members.

Leaders needed for multicultural development

Staff Reporter

More than 60 K-State students, faculty and Manhattan residents attended the keynote address of the First Multicultural Student Council leadership conference Saturday aftemoon in the K-State Union Flinthills Room.

Tony Chambers, assistant professor in the department of personnel sevices at the University of Iowa, discussed the leadership challenge in the next millennium for multicultural people in his keynote address.

"We read, talk and hear about the need for leadership," Chambers said. "Leadership, next to love, is the second most discussed topic, and there are more than 700 different definitions.'

Chambers said because all people are culturally different, we need to come to terms with what is meant by diversity and difference.

"Be careful of what you say and how you say it," he said.

Chambers said leadership has to be action-oriented in order to be experienced.

"Leadership is the behavior of leaders," he said. "There must be action - it is dynamic and changing. The action part creates a leader, not the name, label or title. Leadership can happen anywhere by anyone at

Chambers said everyone can contribute to the success of an organization, regardless of being appointed or annointed. "A leader must have the desire to grow, heightened awareness and clear visions," Chambers said. "I don't correlate age positively with wisdom. There are fundamental differences between growing individuals and aging individuals.

Chambers then played a cassette of John Lennon's song "Imagine" and Martin Luther King's "I Have a Dream" speech.

These are visions I would like you to think about because you were there," he said. "We need dreamers in our world today. We must recognize this is an interconnected and related world."

Chambers concluded the keynote address by reading a short story by Dr. Seuss, "Oh, The Places You Will

"The leadership challenge is awaiting," he said.

Bob Garcia, Kansas City resident, came to the event with his son Robert Garcia, senior in finance, who received the Outstanding Multicultural Leader of the Year award

'The speaker has a lot of knowledge and insight," Garcia said.

Healthy choices available

Fast-food restaurants provide for health-conscious patrons

VICKI KNIGHT

Many fast-food places are taking strides to make food choices

Shirley Mukai, unit manager of the local Arby's restaurant, said Arby's changed to low-fat, lowcholesterol mayonnaise a few months ago. It also offers a multigrain bun and has re-introduced salads with light dressing.

Kentucky Fried Chicken is currently test-marketing skinless chicken on the East coast, said Linda Schaffer, assistant manager of the local Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant. She said it should be available in Manhattan around October or November.

McDonald's has introduced a new McLean Deluxe that is 91-percent

Dorthy McDougal, Manhattan resident, has tried the new hamburger. "It was pretty good. It wasn't as greasy as other burgers.'

Environmental Nutrition, a dietetic newsletter, featured the McLean in an article that explained what is in the McLean Deluxe.

"The low-fat quarter-pound ground beef sandwich is made with 91-percent fat-free beef to which carrageenan, a seaweed derivative, has been added," according to the article. Deborah Canter, director of the coordinated program in Dietetics, said the carrageenan is used to put back a sensation of moisture and is

Canter said McDonald's is usually the leader other fast-food restaurants

Fast-food places are definitely doing better and probably have been for the last three years, Canter said.

"They are providing a greater variety of products," she said.

Healthy products help the consumer make better choices. Canter said what it comes down to is the consumer's power of making healthy selections.

Consumers have to take the time to understand what is available and how to ask for items, Canter said.

"Consumers have the right, and should realize they have the right, to ask that certain condiments and seasons not be applied," she said.

She said because the focus has been on decreasing fat content, not sodium content, one can ask not to have fries salted or that any extra salt not be added. Fast-food restaurants are moving in the right direction. They are responsive to consumer demands, Canter said.

"People need to realize that restaurants are not all responsible," she said. "That as consumers, we have a responsibility to make responsible, healthy choices.'

All the fast-food restaurants have nutritional information, however, most restaurants don't have the information readily available for customers.

Canter said customers need to ask. for the information and start paying attention to what is in the foods they

She recommends customers investigate the fast-food restaurant they frequent once a week to get nutritional information and figure out what the healthiest choices are in that particular restaurant.

This, among other things, was taught to the participants of the Ability Games Saturday as they experienced some simulated obstacles of being handicapped.

Often the biggest handicap for the handicapped is the way the other people treat them," said Marsha Goodwin, student member of Students for Handicap Concerns.

"People need to have an understanding of what it feels like to overcome obstacles everyday. We don't need sympathy, but an understanding of our problems. Just because it may take a disabled person longer doesn't mean that they're less intelligent. These games help people understand

Three teams competed in each game for time. The winning team was the one that finished each event in the least amount of time.

The wheelchair race was set up with an obstacle course. The barriers were taped on the floor, and if a wheel went over the tape, the participant had to start the course again.

"I really didn't know what to expect when I came to the games, but they were a lot of fun," said Jeff Bates, senior in agriculture journaldifficult as I thought it would be, but I wouldn't want to do it everyday on campus.

Another game - Charades - was used to demonstrate the difficulties of communicating without using your voice.

Obstacles were demonstrated by blindfolding team participants and having one of their teammates verbally guide them in a relay race while they dribbled a ball between two

"I didn't think the basketball game was as hard as the wheelchair race, but you really needed your guide," said Vicki Taylor, junior in psychology.

The word scramble was an event to show what it's like for a dyslexic

ism. "The wheelchair race wasn't as to read. The teams were timed on how fast they could unscramble a

> The adaptive spoon relay was an event designed to show how hard it is for an arthritic person to eat using a spoon. The spoons were placed on a stick so that it was at a 90-degree angle to the stick. The stick was then strapped to the participant's arm. The spoon device was used to dip beads one-by-one from a cup in a timed relay race. The cup, placed on the nondominant arm, could not be tilted and fingers could not be used.

"Overall, I think these games are really good," Robben said. "People don't understand and don't see the disabled as people. These games help to understand their limitations and to be more aware of their feelings and to be more sensitive.'

The games were presented by Students for Handicap Concerns.

Kindred Assertive Positive Prideful Attitudes sponsored a Strategies of Success seminar Saturday at Junction City High

Members of KAPPA are Junction City High School students concerned about their future. Some of the group's objectives are career advancement, improved study skills, community service and grade point average improvement, said Deidra Franklin, teacher at the high school and sponsor of KAPPA.

Members must have at least a 2.0 GPA with the desire to improve, Franklin said.

This is the first year for the group, Franklin said. It started when four girls came to her with the idea and asked her to sponsor the group. They wanted a sorority, but it isn't allowed at the high school level.

KAPPA decided to hold a seminar titled "Strategies of Success," said Stephanie Wiggins, high school junior and president of the group.

"This is supposed to be a learning experience," she said.

The group is for anyone who wants to attend, whether junior high or high school age.

Rosemarie Deering, assistant professor in secondary education, and three of her students came as representatives of the Teachers of

"Everyone can benefit from having a mentor," Deering said. The seminar consisted of several workshops taught by professional women, Franklin said. The seminar's purpose was to inform students about what the future will hold and to discuss possible career objectives. Tamara Gray, high school freshman, attended the "General Medicine" workshop, and said it was very informational. The workshop provided information about how to get into college and also dealt with teenage

This is the first year for the seminar, Franklin said. It had been postponed in February because the president moved, but that was the only setback.

The feedback from the public and students has been positive, Franklin said. She added that teachers participating in the seminar have received as much knowledge as they have given.

The turnout wasn't as large as expected, but next year's seminar in the fall will hopefully be larger, Wiggins said.

FENIX honors non-traditional students

New chapter of national society, Pinnacle recognizes needs, successes of students

MELISSA SMITH Collegian Reporter

Fifteen scholarships and several Distinguished Service Awards were given out by FENIX at an honors reception for non-traditional students. The annual spring awards recep-tion was held in the Union at 2 p.m.

Non-traditional students are defined as those who are married, single parents, over 25-years-old or who have been out of school for five years or more, said Marlene Sedillos, graduate assistant with FENIX.

Suzanne Knorr, director of FE-NIX, said her group is an adult student program that helps meet the different needs of non-traditional students so they can succeed academically.

There are 5,254 non-traditional students at K-State, she said.

Of the 15 scholarships that were said, four were based on leadership and were open to both graduate and undergraduate students.

open only to undergraduates, she her door was always open to them,

Each scholarship was for $500, Knorr said, and the funds were allocated by the Student Senate from the Educational Opportunity Fund.

FENIX also presented 12 Distinguished Service Awards. These awards were given to outstanding faculty, staff and students nominated by the non-traditional students, she said.

Non-traditional students face a lot of obstacles in getting their education, and the recipients of the awards went out of their way to help them overcome the obstacles by showing sensitivity to their special needs.

Knorr said the award for an organization was given to the Student Governing Association's 1990 EOF Committee for its responsiveness to the needs of non-traditional students in allocating money for 15 $500 scholarships to FENIX. In addition, FENIX presented a awarded at the reception, Sedillos Lifetime Achievement award to Evelyn Hausmann, associate professor in adult and continuing education, because she was always willing to work The other 11 were need-based and with the non-traditional students, and

An induction ceremony was also held during the reception for Pinnacle, a national honor society for nontraditional students, Knorr said. About 25 students were inducted.

The K-State chapter of Pinnacle started in April 1990, she said, and was originally a senior honorary, but K-State has been nominating both juniors and seniors.

Seniors are often too busy to participate because of job interviews, she

Taxi Triathlon Sunday and donated more than $1,500 to Multiple The temperature at race time was 45 degrees and the sky was overcast, but Steve Palmer, junior in pre-med, said that these were ideal conditions for a triathlon

Triathletes were arriving almost two hours before race time in order to inspect the course and get a good warm-up.

Brian Eilert, chairman of the triathlon, said the triathletes like to arrive early because preparation at the transition area is critical.

"It takes some preparation before the race because the triathletes has to make a change of clothes when coming out of the pool in order to ride their bike," he said.

The first part of the race is the 700-yard swim in the Natatorium. "The racers are assigned a number according to their personal swim time," said Debbie Christie, volunteer and instructor of physical education and leisure studies. "The racers are started every 20 seconds and they complete 28 lengths in the pool, which is equivalent to 700 yards," Christie said. The swim is conducted in two pools; the first pool has six lanes and the second pool has eight lanes. "When I swam last year in the course, racers entered the transitional area to drop off their bikes and finish the triathlon with a 3.1-mile run.

After completing the 14-mile bike

"I actually felt better than I thought I was going to feel," said Katie Williams of Barton County Community College. "The cool temperatures made it ideal for competition." The conditions were cold, though, for the 89 volunteers.

"There were 110 volunteers signed up to help," said Garett Riner, co-chairman of the triathlon. "We planned on about 80 or 90 volunteers to show up on the day of the race. We were happy with their attendance.' After the race was completed, the triathletes assembled at Nautilus in Aggieville where the race results were announced.

The men's winner was Steve Tilford of Topeka with a time of

"This was my first triathlon," Tilford said. "I am a professional cyclist, but I wanted to try my luck in a triathlon.

The women's overall winner went to Williams with a time of 1:22:50.

She said the Taxi Triathlon is a nice beginning to her summer, during which she said she plans to complete 8-10 triathlons.

In the female team division, the first-place winners were Anke Langenbach, Kathy Raaf and Lynne Flood with a time of 1:27:44.

In the men's team division, first place went to Steve Palmer, senior in pre-med; Gary Bond of Manhattan; and Eric Heddinger, Manhattan High School student.

Local music scene provides talent slew

Monday, April 15, 1991

ERIC MELIN Collegian Reviewer

Manhattan has a quickly growing local music scene with a slew of talent right here in town that demands attention.

Saturday and Sunday were especially good for live bands, with Roach Factory, a band made up of K-State students and Manhattan residents, was scheduled to play a benefit for the agriculture college at Rusty's Outback in Aggieville.

Unfortunately, the show was canceled due to rain. Tonight, however, you can catch their unique brand of original rock at

Definitely the most manic show of the weekend goes to a band that has taken the local scene by force. Tuber has gained a loyal following by playing at various parties, due mostly to the fact that most bars here won't let them in the door. Friday night they did just Sunfest '91 on Sunday featured five bands all day for $5 at The Spot in Aggieville. It was a good showcase for local talent. Things started off early in the day with the newest of the bands, Harlot.

Together for about five months, guitarist Doug Minner describes Harlot as a "mainstream metal" band. Like most of the bands that played, they are primarily a cover band. Their covers range from Poison to Guns 'n' Roses. All four members of Harlot are K-State students, and they're sure to play more in the future.

Armed & Dangerous was next, as the schedule was inevitably pushed back. They hail from Ogden and they've been together for about a year. Classic rock and long jams seemed to be their specialty, and they have the rare quality of being competent enough to do justice to Jimi Hendrix covers.

Impressive vocal harmonies helped Be Here Now, another Manhattan band. Their covers were mostly from the classic rock catalog, too. Although they did standard covers like "Born to be Wild" and "Louie, Louie," they were at their best doing semiobscure Beatles songs.

Headlining Sunfest '91 was Dr. Zeus. This power trio from Manhattan has been playing together for about nine months, and have come up with many originals.

"Pride (Before the Fall)" is straightforward metal, while songs like "Spin Cycle Blues" are funkier, showing off the talents of bassist Brian Brooks.

Guitarist Andy Crow described their attitude on music.

We're not content with just playing whatever song Warrant put out this week," he said.

Hopefully, the public will pay more attention to some of the great rock n' roll right here in

Computers

"What brought about the TSI report is, we feared we were not going to bring about the EDUCOM report, Rawson said.

The TSI report did, however, examine one funding issue - that of the service recovery system imposed by the state for determining funding for offices like CTA.

The service recovery system is a means of allocating money to CTA based on an assessment of the cost of services provided to CTA's users at the University.

Service recovery funding is often increased by the state on a minimal percentage basis. Yet, from these minimal increases, CTA must fund such things as classified salaries, which increase on a higher percentage basis than the service recovery funding, according to the TSI report.

John Streeter, associate director of administrative user services, said this means a budget that is increasing linearly, like CTA's, is being used to finance geometrically increasing expenditures.

When anything like that happens in a linear budget, you can kiss it goodbye," Streeter said.

The money to finance the salary increases may come from funds in the CTA budget that would have been spent on equipment, he said.

In addition to funding constraints placed upon the CTA budget, the office is confronted with the impact of rapidly changing technology. For instance, today's personal computers are equivalent in computing power to a 1970 mainframe computer.

A practice that the TSI report criticizes is the continued use of software for administrative computing designed by CTA.

One example cited by the report is the Student Information Systems, used by the registrar's office to manage student records. Development of SIS began in 1977 and was completed in 1982, and has been constantly changing since that time. Designing software in-house used to be commonplace, but is now impractical, according the administrative committee response.

Streeter said this is because outside software writers can produce a greater volume of up-to-date software faster, leaving CTA personnel the job of maintaining the software.

'That's why maintenance is so important," he said. "The world doesn't stop changing, so the software can't stop changing.

Changing technology and continued underfunding have made the historical imperatives governing computing at the University "no longer operative," in the words of the

Those changes include the impact of personal computers. Some academic departments need not use the University's mainframe for their computing. Maintainance of the mainframe has been a historical mission of CTA.

The TSI report also criticizes CTA for not providing the amount of support desired by personal computer

The scenario it suggests for the review is a team effort among those who make computing policy and those in CTA who must implement it. This, too, would be a change. An adminstrator who spoke on condition of anonymity, said, following the EDUCOM report's recommendations about administrative computing, the administration went about implementing the recommendations with little outside imput. For instance, no contingency plans were developed in case the Financial Aid Management System could not be running in time.

Now that some problems have arisen in the administrative side of computing, the administration has taken a greater interest in the status of computing at K-State, in the opinion of this and another administrator, who also spoke on condition of anonymity.

The TSI report is focused more on administrative computing than academic computing, Gallagher said. The report states that in many cases academic departments have their own in-house specialists to manage their systems, fragmenting the resources available to computing

The TSI report calls for a single office to guide implementation of computing policy campus-wide. In the report, the new Office of Information Technology would be placed in a position that appears to be subordinate to the Council of Deans.

One of the administrators pointed out that this would not give a strong enough voice to the person who is to be an advocate of improved computing at the University.

The administrative committee response calls for placing the person in charge of the proposed Office of Information Technology on the vice presidential level. Gallagher said this would probably not happen because President Jon Wefald has cut down the number of vice presidents since he took office.

Whatever the specific outcomes of the Executive Computing Council review, one thing is certain, according to the administrative committee report, "The issues involved are emotional and will affect departments and individuals throughout the campus for years to come."

Moore said 95 percent of the donors have a strong idea where they want their money to go. It's not very successful to get the donors to change their intentions, he said. Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt has set out to challenge those intentions.

"I've got two main goals, and that's to change the philosophy of alumns of where they should be giving and/or a change in philosophy of our state legislature about taxation and appropriate responsibility to higher education," he said.

Getting the state to contribute more money while they are discussing cutting funds forces the University to search out funding elsewhere. Private contributions are fast becoming that source.

Contributions to the campaign can be made in various forms. Cash gifts, endowments, physical gifts -such as buildings, land gifts and estate gifts - are all different types of contributions.

The Foundation has a staff that handles these options and works with the donors to secure the best possible benefit to both the donor and the University.

"People aren't looking to give away their money; we have to provide opportunities for them to give away their money. The more opportunities we provide, the better off we are and the better off they feel," Loub

Bill Bradley gives speach in 87th Landon Lecture

JIM STRUBER Staff Reporter

U.S. Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., presented the 87th Landon Lecture Monday morning in the McCain Auditorium.

About 900 K-State students, faculty, administration, lecture patrons and Manhattan residents attended the 50-minute

President Jon Wefald gave the audience a brief biographical sketch of Bradley's academic, professional athletic and political career accomplishments.

Wefald ended the introduction by mentioning K-State students' academic accomplishments during the past five years.

"K-State has become the student scholar capitol of America," he said. Bradley opened the lecture with pleasantries about Alfred Landon, Nancy Landon Kassebaum and the state of Kansas.

"I think the Landon Lecture at Kansas State University is an appropriate place to examine the new circumstances America faces in the world," Bradley said. "So what can we say about this world? First, we no longer stand unchallenged economically nor only opposite the Soviet Union."

He said we spent a lot of our productivity during the Cold War protecting ourselves against a military threat with the Soviet Union. The containment of Soviet expansion was a success, but the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait caused many perceptions to change.

"A dictator who invades another country risks the collective condemnation of the nations of the world and the quick destruction of his army," he said. "Yet, it may also signal the dawning of an age when even the most skilled collective security cannot prevent the violence that lies ahead."

He said the world is still not at peace, because there is still violence in many parts of the world such as South Africa, Northern Ireland, Kashmir and many areas of the Soviet Union.

"The Cold War froze everything into a bipolar world," he said. "Its thaw opens the cracks and the crevices of old societies and releases the toxins of ethnic, racial and religious hatreds."

He said the United States still has a role in ethnic, racial and religious conflicts, but international law should provide the basis for action when one country invades another.

"Our military force can rarely end job discrimination, religious fanaticism, or hateful attitudes and stereotypes.'

He then discussed domestic problems the United States must resolve.

'We can't lead by example if individuals refuse to take responsibility for their own actions or government bureaucrats remain unaccountable for results," he said. "We can't lead by example if we fail to see that crime often causes poverty and destroys the interracial bonds of civil society.'

The final portion of Bradley's lecture focused on U.S. relations with Mexico.

"When large groups of people move from one place to another, things happen," he said. "One of the most dramatic economic migrations in the world is occurring along the 2,000-mile border between the United States and Mexico.'

He said the current political and economic changes brought about by President Carlos Salinas of Mexico make a free trade agreement possible, although there is still opposition in Congress because many don't see or identify the dynamic changes.

He said he supported the negotiations started in February between the United States, Canada and Mexico on a North American free trade zone.

"I believe Congress should support a maximum effort to complete the negotiations successfully for a free zone area," he Bradley lectured for 30 minutes, and offered to answer questions from the audience for the remaining 20 minutes.

Bradley answered a question about the benefits of the trade agreement with

He said the agreement would provide an additional 115,000 jobs for the U.S. economy after the Mexican economy improves and grows stronger. The benefits of the agreement, however, will take some time.

"It will take 10-13 years before you have a fully affected free-trade agreement," he

Another question concerned additional trade agreements with Mexico's neighbors in Central and South America.

'The best type of trade agreement is a multi-lateral agreement where all the nations benefit from reduced tariffs and regulations," he said.

After Bradley was finished with the question and answer period, Wefald presented him a shirt with "K-State Debate Team -#1" on it.

"I think the lecture was very sincere," Wefald said. "Bradley was very forthright about the issues he discussed."

Center awaits Finney's OK

Kansas Legislature passes funding to centralize plant science department

SHANNAN SEELY Agriculture Reporter

The Kansas Legislature approved funding for the next stage towards completion of the Plant Sciences Center. The proposal now awaits the governor's signature.

"The main thing is funding, funding, funding," said Walter Woods. dean of the College of Agriculture. The completed Plant Sciences Center will bring together the plant science departments into a more central location. The center will enable K-State to be comparable with other plant science departments in the amount of space per faculty member, said Gerry Posler, head of the agronomy department.

Phase I of the Plant Sciences Center, occupied in 1981, was completed last December.

The state legislature has funded part of the construction of the greenhouses, Woods said. The completed greenhouses meet the needs of the departments of agronomy, horticulture, plant pathology, forestry and "The total project (Phase II), if successfully completed — office, lab, greenhouse — is a little less than a $27 million project," he said.

About $13.4 million will be funded in the federal government's next fiscal year's budget. The federal government's fiscal year begins in

The funding was first planned as a 50/50 fund-sharing arrangement with the state and federal

Woods said the state legislators expect K-State to help raise $5 million of the $13.5 million.

Phase II will be additional east and west wings of Throckmorton Hall for classrooms, offices and laboratories. Posler said Phase II will give the agronomy department considerable research space. "For our own department, it will expand our research capabilities,' Posler said. "We'll be more competitive for getting grants. You need the facilities and equipment to attract grant money in many cases." Forestry and horticulture will move into the new wings, along with the research units of erosion, wind erosion and wheat genetics. 'Having the horticulture department in close proximity to the agronomy people will also be beneficial," Posler said. The Plant Sciences Center will help departments with common interests to interact, Posler said.

Zoning, public transportation hot topics in Land Use Plan adoption

LORI STAUFFER Staff Reporter

Public transportation and zoning criteria discussions moved the Land Use Plan closer to adoption when the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board smoothed out details Monday night.

One statement in the plan addressed energy concerns, including convenient, safe and energyefficient access throughout the

Ray Weisenburger, planning board member, said the statement may be encouraging implementation of a public transit system, especially in areas where there are high numbers of apartments.

Roger Nauerth, planning board member, said he did not think, however, that a bussing system would be used.

"I really hardly believe people are going to use it," Nauerth said. "I don't think students are going to stand around waiting a half an hour to 45 minutes for the bus to take them back to their apartment. I just don't think that is going to happen.'

Weisenburger said there are two apartment complexes, Park Place Apartments and Brittnay Ridge Estates, that provide bussing to and from the University.

"I think those are provided because of student demand," he said. "I think they would take the bus if the transportation was provided to

Manhattan has previously had a mass transit system, but it was dropped when personal automobiles became a more popular form of transportation, said Bernd Foerster, Citizens Advisory Committee

"It was abandoned. We didn't care about energy at the time," Foerster said. "It was cheap."

Colleen Roblyer, chairwoman of the planning board, said the city should look into the possibility of re-implementing the transit system in accordance with the Land Use

Zoning criteria was again a hot topic for the planning board. Weisenburger said he hoped the board had gained back some of the residents' support with the rezoning of the areas around Aggieville and east of the campus to medium-density.

The original draft of the new Land Use Plan had designated the area as high-density. High-density refers to areas that allow apartment complexes, as opposed to lowdensity, which is for single-family residences or medium-density for multiple-family residences.

Agriculture college raises friendly funds

Challenge given by Essential Edge Campaign met through planned gifts, good corporate relationships Agriculture is on track, however, dents recognize the importance of prise the college's agenda.

MIKE VENSO Collegian Reporter

The College of Agriculture has taken on the challenge of the Essential Edge Campaign with a common practice.

"Fund raising begins with friend raising first," said Walter Woods, dean of the College of Agriculture. No other college on campus has a better chance of raising friends considering the history of the College of Agriculture and the constituency base within the state, he said.

The college was the first established when K-State was founded in 1862 as a land-grant university, and in those 125 years, the college has built a large alumni base.

Within the state, agriculture is the primary resource and many Kansas farmers and ranchers are K-State graduates.

Gary Hellebust, KSU Foundation development officer for agriculture, said he sees those assets as major additions to the college's success.

"We have a very large consti-tuency of planned gifts," Hellebust said. "Folks from the western twothirds of Kansas are making gifts of appreciated land. A lot of the work done 20 years ago is starting to come forward, because plans were laid down 20 years ago for those estate

The college has also benefited from its relationship with corporations. It has received an extruding machine from Wenger Manufacturing in Sabetha and an enormous collection of wheat germ plasm from the Pioneer Seed Co., Hellebust said.

'We've got industry on one hand and old-time farm families on the other, and it's really helped," Helleb-

With many pieces of the fundraising puzzle on its side, the College of Agriculture has set its sights on six projects totaling $12 million.

raising 87 percent of its goal already, which is the highest percentage of any campaign project. But that hasn't slowed the college's efforts.

"It's our intention to exceed the goal - absolutely," Woods said. Exceeding the goal probably won't come before next fall when the campus campaign begins, Woods said. He said he sees that as an additional source of support for the college's programs.

'We certainly expect to give the faculty and staff an opportunity to participate in the Essestial Edge Campaign, and I do believe they will participate," Woods said.

But, he said, the agriculture student population need not worry about checking its wallets and purses, at least until after graduation.

"I see the students primarily helping facilitate the Telefund-type of involvement rather than targeting the students for significant giving at this time," Woods said.

"My goal is to see, later on, stugiving to the University and to the college, and when their resources become a little greater, they make this an annual and on-going commitment on their part." John Perrier, annual contributor and volunteer project chairman for the college, said he sees the campaign as a catalyst for future giving. 'We probably won't raise as much as in this campaign," Perrier said. "But, after the campaign is over, I think (the college) will raise more money than prior to when the campaign started. Giving like this is kind of a habit."

Woods said he believes the Essential Edge has become an essential part of keeping the college alive and

"It is my belief that if the College of Agriculture is going to continue to have the quality of programs that people expect it to have, developmental activities — like the Essential Edge Campaign — must become ar everyday part of our thinking."

Aquino says positive thinking answer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) - President Corazon Aquino believes she has found at least a partial answer to her nation's problems: positive thinking.

In that spirit, Aquino on Monday issued Proclamation 712 declaring this week as "positive thinking week."

"Positive thinking brings one closer to the ideals of truth, beauty and happiness," she said.

Aquino, who has survived at least seven military uprisings during her five years in office, is battling a 21-year-old Communist rebellion and a worsening economic crisis.

Congress urged to lift research ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — A scientist described for Congress Monday the nation's first fetus-to-fetus transplant, but said future operations are jeopardized by the administration's ban against federal support of research using electively aborted tissue.

Robert Slotnick, an obstetrician and geneticist at the University of California at Davis, said it won't be known for weeks whether the surgery last May, involving the transplantation of tissue from an aborted fetus, saved a child born in November from a fatal Slotnick recounted for lawmakers the still unpublished experiment in which tissue from a fetus aborted in an ectopic, or tubal, pregnancy was transplanted into a fetus with a rare disease called Hurler syndrome. The parents had two other children who died from the disease.

The privately financed work Slotnick did, as it turned out, would not have violated the federal financing moratorium because the tissue came from a medically necessary abortion in a woman who had a dangerous tubal pregnancy. The ban applies to use of fetuses from elective abortions.

Tabloid publishes name of victim

PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) - A supermarket tabloid published a photo and the name of the victim in the alleged assault at the Kennedy estate Monday despite a Florida law prohibiting the disclosure of rape victims' identities.

Also Monday, the results of forensics tests were turned over to police, who said they have identified new witnesses.

The Globe, headquartered in nearby Boca Raton, printed a photo of the woman who says she was sexually attacked at the Kennedy estate, along with a detailed story about her background.

It was apparently the first time the woman's name had appeared in a U.S. publication, though it has been published in England. Under state law, publishing or broadcasting a rape victim's PONCA CITY, Okla. (AP) - Fire officials said Monday that two children died and a man was seriously burned in a house fire that apparently began with either a match or a lighter.

Stephen Jones, 25, was in critical but stable condition Monday in Baptist Medical Center, where he was being treated for burns over 19.5 percent of his body.

Dana Prescott, the mother of the two children, was not injured in the fire. Baldridge said police had to repeatedly restrain her efforts to re-enter the home to try to reach her children.

Baldridge said the fire began in the bed in that room, and the cause would be listed as misuse of smoking materials. Investigators believe one of the children was playing with either a match or a lighter, he said.

Copeland's lawyers file appeal

CHILLICOTHE, Mo. (AP) - Lawyers for Ray Copeland, who was convicted of killing five transients in a cattle-buying scheme, have filed a more than 100-page appeal for a new trial.

Barbara Schenkenberg, one of Copeland's court-appointed attorneys, alleged Monday that Judge E. Richard Webber committed 240 errors before and during the two-week trial.

The errors included removing Livingston County prosecutor Doug Roberts from the case in January after Roberts had agreed to a plea agreement, Schenkenberg said. She also said Webber should have removed himself from the case as requested in a defense motion filed in December. Copeland, 76, was convicted on five counts of first-degree murder last month, and a jury recommended he be sentenced to death. Webber has not yet set a formal sentencing date.

A jury in the trial of Copeland's wife, Faye Copeland, recommended in November that she be executed for her part in the murders. She will be sentenced by Webber April 27.

Benton County Circuit Judge Tom Keith ordered Billy Joe Price, 18, and David L. Moore, 19, both of Gravette, Ark., held without bond. He set another hearing for April 25.

The two men are accused in the death early Sunday of David Thurman, 21, a reserve police officer from Pineville, a community of about 500 in McDonald County.

Moore is charged with capital murder and assault of a law officer. Price is charged with second-degree murder.

Bush charged with mixing in talks

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Civil rights advocates charged on Monday that the Bush administration has tried to sabotage their negotiations with business leaders toward a compromise civil rights bill because it wants to keep the question of job quotas alive as a political issue.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater acknowledged that administration officials contacted executives of some major corporations who were nearing agreement with civil rights advocates and pressed them to stick with Bush's version of the Fitzwater cited calls to officials at AT&T and American Express, two companies whose officials have taken the lead in talks with civil rights organizations. "We let them know that there are other business interests

they didn't represent," Fitzwater

Civil rights advocates who support a stronger Democratic-sponsored version of the civil rights bill have been holding talks with executives and attorneys for companies that compose the Business Roundtable, a group of 200 major corporations, since last December.

Talks reached an intensive phase last week, and sources said there was substantial agreement on a number of points, including some that could put to rest the administration's charge the bill would encourage the use of racial quotas in hiring and

But the civil rights leaders complained that White House Chief of Staff John Sununu and counsel Boyden Gray, alarmed that a negotiated compromise would undercut White House opposition to the Democratic bill, began calling business executives to block further progress.

"The White House is attempting once again to scuttle good faith attempts by the business and civil rights communities to reach common ground on the civil rights act," said Ralph Neas, executive director of the Leadership Conference on Civil

Two veteran civil rights leaders, Vernon Jordan Jr. and William Coleman, met with Sununu and Gray at the White House on Friday and asked that they stop discouraging business from negotiating.

Bush vetoed the bill last year, arguing that it would prompt employers to use quotas in hiring and promotions. Republicans played on antiquotas sentiment successfully in several 1990 elections, including the North Carolina Senate and California governor's races, and it was seen as a potentially powerful issue for Republicans in 1992.

The bill is intended to reverse a series of Supreme Court decisions that made it more difficult for minorities to sue for hiring and job discrimination. The White House-backed version would not go as far as the Democratic version, and it would impose a limit on the amount of money that could be collected in damages in discrimination suits.

Sources close to the negotiations said the question of limiting damages is the major remaining obstacle to agreement in the talks, and that compromise seemed possible there too.

Among the issues resolved last week was agreement in principle on legal language setting a standard for employers to defend job practices that have an unintended discriminatory effect.

Agriculture reaps Kansas farmers at unexpected rate

Accidents cause 30 percent more deaths

BETH GAINES

Collegian Reporter

Kansas farmers run a higher risk of being killed in an accident than their urban counterparts.

Scott Frey, associate professor of anthropology and social work, completed a study that revealed Kansas farmers are killed at a rate 30 percent higher than the expected number of Frey said in Kansas, more than 500 farmers died in accidents between 1983 and 1989.

"This reinforces the fact that agriculture is the most dangerous of all industries, second only to mining," Frey said.

Three high-risk areas for farmers include falling objects, machinery accidents and road accidents that do not include machinery.

Frey said he is concerned that the federal government is spending little to correct the dangers of farming.

"Compared to the mining industry, which spends almost $200 per worker, the government is only spending 30 cents per farmer," he

Frey said one reason for inadequate government spending for farmers is no federal agency has a mandate to deal with agriculture and rural health and safety issues.

"The general public has not been concerned," Frey said. "The farm population itself has not demanded an agency. Farm organizations have not addressed the problem to the government, and there is a lack of academic research.

Delbert Ekart, director of safety for Kansas Farm Bureau, said the agency continually works to make the agriculture industry safer. Ekart said he believed the number of deaths Frey reported was too high and probably included non-farm accidents in rural areas.

"Farm Bureau has various programs to help make the farm a safer place, including farm family safety seminars, seminars for Emergency Medical Service personnel, and poison and fire seminars," Ekart said.

Ekart said farm accident deaths happen because of the time it takes emergency personnel to arrive at the accident site.

"It only takes a few minutes to get to the Farm Bureau building if we have an accident," he said. "It takes 20 or 30 minutes to get to a farmer in Randall. Immediate action can make a life-or-death difference.

Army reserve units to arrive in Kansas

By the Associated Press

WICHITA — The first two U.S. Army Reserve units to return to Kansas from Operation Desert Storm are scheduled to arrive late Tuesday at Fort Riley, officials

An 89th U.S. Army Reserve Command spokeswoman said Monday the two firefighting units are the 475th Engineer Platoon based in El Dorado and the 467th Engineer Platoon from Garden

The units have about 45 soldiers. They were alerted for duty Nov. 7 and were among 2,100 reservists from the 89th's Kansas-Nebraska region called to active

A welcome home parade for the El Dorado unit is scheduled

In Washington, D.C., Defense Secretary Dick Cheney rejected congressional charges Monday that politics played a role in his proposal to close 43 U.S. military bases and scale back 28 other installations.

An eight-member, independent panel has until July 1 to decide whether to approve or amend Cheney's list before forwarding it to President Bush and Congress.

Drugs, America intertwined completely

ne of the more interesting revelations about Nancy Reagan in the new Kitty Kelley book is that Reagan once smoked marijuana (e.g. smoke, pot, rasta weed) at a party. This amuses me to no small end. I have this great image of Nancy loaded off of her ass in the East Room of the White House listening to Bob Marley over and over again.

It appears, however, that Nancy's doper days took place in that strange era known as the 1960s. Daddy and Mommy were both at a party, and one of the other partygoers had chemical substances. Nancy, in order to be cool and fit in, took a puff as the joint passed

In the long run, Nancy's little experiment with narcotics didn't cause her too much harm. She didn't go schizophrenic, sleep with Jerry Garcia or call everyone "Dude." In fact, she went on to become probably the bitchiest first lady in American history. Though there were some problems picking out china patterns (Nancy was "groovin" on the colors), everything worked out OK in the end.

Or did it? Nancy seemed to forget the above story and spent her years at the White House lecturing on the evils of drugs to any one who would listen. Millions did. Sud-denly, the biggest problem in America was no longer the economy, the homeless or even the Russians. It was drugs, "scrounge of a

So as the 1980s progressed, the politicians of this country learned a valuable lesson. No one cared anymore about things like taxes. Everyone cared about drugs. You could have stood up and yelled that Ronald Reagan was an anti-Christ demon from hell who deserved to die, and no one would have paid attention to you. Admit that you smoked dope one time in your life, however, and every TV station in America wanted you for its special expose show on drugs

So politicians, in order for everyone to like them and contribute heavily to their reelection campaigns, began to get tough on

"Mandatory drug testing," they cried. "The death penalty for those who deal drugs," they Suddenly, people weren't innocent until proven guilty anymore. It was assumed that you were using drugs, that your co-workers were getting high and that even the president was using drugs. Ron passed his drug test. Nancy, as far as I know, never took one.

Some protested that both civil and human rights were being violated by illegal search and seizure methods. Others showed that drug tests were highly inaccurate, that cold tablets and poppy seeds often showed up as illegal substances in the screening process. No one cared. The truth wasn't as important as getting on television.

A new president came into office. Drugs were a concern of his administration, also. He appointed a drug czar to keep the public's mind on drugs and off of things like people going hungry. Why worry about that when "thar's drugs in them thar hills?"

It was a success. Surveys showed drug abuse among the whole of the American population dropping. Even if these surveys cosisted of just asking people if they used drugs, it was still a success. Manuel Noriega was brought to justice. The fact that we supported him for years and helped him sell drugs isn't that important.

Then there was a great war, and for a while, the drug problem disappeared from the TV screen. We no longer hated drug dealers and users. We hated Iraqis.

But the war has ended, and the media is back on the same old road. A new drug czar has been appointed and has promised to bring an end to the drug problem. TV shows are going back out on the street looking for drug deals. More and more companies are implementing drug-testing policies. The Supreme Court rules that coerced confessions are admittable in court. Every day, a little more of our personal freedom disappears.

Even for you, the college student. Virginia's Gov. Douglas Wilder has proposed mandatory drug testing of all college students. For years, we've felt secure in our little ivy-covered campus from the whims of society. College has always been a place to experiment - to screw up and basically learn about all aspects of life.

No more. Why are we any different from the rest of the world? We to should have to live in a world where doing your own thing is prohibited. A world where every mistake you make haunts you for the rest of your life. A world where due process of law is denied, and police can beat confessions out of you. A world where your future is dependent on getting enough piss in a little cup.

ould I pass a drug test? Yes. Would I take one? No. I've done it twice in my life already. Once to work at a packing plant and once to work as a forklift driver. Both times I felt cheapened and sick. I also dribbled on my Does that doom me to a life of menial labor and trailer-park dwelling? The way things are going, yes. But at least I'll live without constantly looking over my shoulder to see if anyone's watching me.

Senate Biases, agendas lead to nonrepresentation

Personal biases and agendas must be left out of Student Senate meetings, or students cannot be fairly represented.

Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt announced Thursday that last year's Senate Finance Committee may have engaged in questionable activities. The committee had allocated funds to groups above their requested amounts so there would be no money with which to fund UFM's request.

Many senators say the committee's actions were not illegal according to the letter of the Senate constitution, but perhaps the pigeon-holing of money could be seen as unethical.

Those same senators say it was committee chairman Barry Beck's personal distaste toward UFM that precluded the finance listen to their constituents. Stucommittee's recommendation to not fund the organization.

enact the will of the students. If the students don't want to fund a group, then the committee should make that recommendation.

Hiding available funds from other senators and from the students of K-State is wrong. It is unacceptable.

Wednesday, a committee consisting of former and current senators, administrative representatives and student representatives will attempt to sort out allegations dating back to last year's Senate Finance Committee. The committee will then make recommendations to ensure history does not repeat

Another perspective

Research has become a meal ticket on college campuses. Professors slaving over projects with the hope of tenure can tell anyone that.

Universities struggling to bolster their faculty's academic reputation in hopes of landing government grants would concur. Research may be the answer to balance out less cost-efficient university activities like teaching, for instance.

But some institutions may have overcharged their expense account, and the federal government is getting a little tired of footing the bill.

Last week, the Department of Health and Human Services initiated audits of 12 institutions for misuse of government research grants. At the same time, Congress has asked its General Accounting Office to begin checking into select medical school grants.

Alleged violations border on the absurd. Antique toilets, yacht depreciation and retirement parties have all supposedly shown up on government research ledgers at one time or another.

The colleges in question are hardly shady operations. There is not a diploma mill or matchbook cover correspondence school in the lot. The schools being investigated are the leaders in American education: Harvard, Dartmouth, Yale and Stanford to name only a few.

Government agencies that request research from a college generally agree to cover direct costs of the research: materials, equipment and sometimes salaries. Often the government allows an account for indirect expenses such as facility upkeep. That's where the potential for abuse arises.

Maybe as the giants of the education and research world fall at the hands of investigations, schools will see that research is not the answer to educational and financial woes. Perhaps the educational community will refocus itself on a less controversial goal — like teaching.

Even if schools remain in the corrupt rat race for research dollars, they have taught students a couple of vital lessons: that the system can be exploited, but that sometimes the bad guy gets caught.

From Manhattan to Chicago, student feels culture shock

aving tried and enjoyed being a Chicago tourist last semester, this semester I thought I'd make a valiant attempt at being a Chicago native. Since I'll be moving there, I figured I needed the practice.

Now some people, upon meeting me, said it would be no problem - not really a major change after Manhattan. This was when I thought I'd better start clarifying Manhattan with the word Kansas. Then people admitted that it would be quite a switch and asked if I had been on one of those "Beef, real food for real people" commercials.

How, exactly, does one go about becoming Chicago native? By staying with a few. I stayed with one person living in a university residence hall, one in an apartment and visited several more in apartments. I discovered I have a lot to learn. I also discovered that, if I'm moving in September, I have a lot to earn. As in moola, dinero, cash, dollars, bread, etc. Chicago is big-time expensive. I wince here every month as I write my $165 check for rent. After looking in Chicago, I found an awesome place for $500, and I count myself lucky. All of a sudden, facing tuition more than 15 times higher than K-State's, a 300-percent increase in rent doesn't seem too bad.

So what do Chicago natives do on the weekends? They go to bars, and they sleep. No problem there. Manhattan's a big party town, right? I can keep up. Sure. The people I was with decided at 1 a.m. that we should ditch the party we were attending and head out. Our first stop was called 940, and after a significant drive and a parking hunt, we thought we were set. But no, the bar closed at 2 a.m. (They were surprised. Bars don't close at 2 a.m. in Chicago.) So we closed it down and made another selection.

Esoteria. I asume that's a combination of Hysteria and Esoteric, and the bar is aptly named. For the first time, I really felt like a kid from Kansas. There were women in there wearing outfits smaller than my bathing suit. The men wore leather. Everyone wore black.

No one smiled. Apparently partying is serious business in Chicago. One wall was made up entirely of broken TV sets, and one of the dance floors was in a cage. Looming over the other dance floor were monster heads with flashing lights coming out of their mouths. I had to get a hold of myself to keep my jaw from dropping and my eyes from popping out. It wasn't exactly Snookie's.

We stayed until 3:30 a.m. (We left early.) In an hour and a half, I never heard a song I recognized. Not one. The only band name I remember was called something like "My Life as a Stone Island Crab." I only remember it because one of the guys we were with requested one of their songs. When they played it, he thought he'd dance, so he did. We thought we'd all dance, so we wandered to the dance floor after him.

We just danced. No partners, not even a big group circle. We just danced around like you might do in the privacy of your own home on a wild day. Everyone on the floor was dancing in a private little world, so we ran into each other a lot. I only saw one person dancing with a partner. It was a napkin. I have no idea why this man was dancing with a napkin, but he was. He appeared to be enjoying himself. He was doing sort of a bullfighter thing. For all I know, this is the next dance craze, and Madonna has a song in the works called "Napkin." Then again, maybe he was just

So, this is the life of a Chicago native. One thing's for certain, you get more free drinks being a tourist. Esoteria doesn't seem to be as concerned as Mother's is about bringing in female customers. But if you're willing to eat in strange, hole-like places, you can eat some mighty cheap, mighty weird food. For example, you can get a burrito the size of your head in Lincoln Park for $2. You can watch the little man fry it up, wondering what he's putting in it, and then watch strange people go by as you chow. If you eat there more than once, the little man will call you friend. But you have to be careful. Another friend took us for what he defined as cheap food, and it ended up being $6 sandwiches. That's the difference between a yuppie and a yugssie (young urban grad school student).

To round out our experience, we spent an evening in the suburbs, where a teeny little house - that in Manhattan would house seven college students, some cheap furniture and a dog - sells there for a cool hundredplus thousand and is furnished like one of the big houses out past Westloop. We ate in a restaurant where cheesecake was $3.50, and then played darts in a bar where at one point, the bartender wandered out and carded us at random, in spite of the fact that we were all drinking Coke. (The indulgences of the night before had taken their toll.)

What else do Chicago natives do? They shop in grocery stores that they walk to, they take the "el" during the day, and they regularly walk by pitiful looking poeple looking for a handout. Their friends have to call up to their apartments before they can get in the door, and some apartments have a TV channel you can turn to and watch your friend come in the door. They jog in parks (only during the day), and they pay big bucks to park, don't know how well this former Manhattanite is going to adjust to the bright lights every night while I try to sleep and the gray haze while I try to breathe. Change is good, and adjustment builds character. I'm not real sure, however, I'll be going back to that bar. Then again, maybe I will. I'll try not to forget my napkin.

Homeless topic of conference

Gibbons says America should look for internal victories

CINDY BRIGGS

Collegian Reporter

A speaker at a homelessness conference said it is time for America to look after the American apocalypse poverty, violence, racism and homelessness.

Jacque Gibbons, president of Manhattan Emergency Shelter Inc., said he along with other staff of MESI calculated the money spent within three seconds of war with Iraq would run MESI for an entire year.

"America is looking outward for victories and placing her resources behind that effort today," Gibbons said. "It is time America started looking inward again.'

Manhattan City Commissioner Roger Maughmer welcomed representatives from emergency shelters across the state to the first Kansas conference on Homelessness at the Holidome Monday and this morning.

The conference brought together staff members of emergency shelters to discuss ways of receiving state and federal aid, said Kathy Rankin, executive director of MESI and member of the Housing Advisory Committee for Kansas.

She said the conference was provided through a grant from Wichita Greyhound Charities, an organization associated with Wichita Greyhound Park.

"The main point of the conference is funding and how to run programs more efficiently, as well as learning new ideas to help clientele," she said. Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan and guest speaker at the conference, said because Kansas is considered rural, it loses federal grants to larger cities thought to have a larger percentage of homeless people.

'Kansas is considered rural but also a very caring site as the heartland of America," she said. "We need to have our story told.

Oleen, who sponsored legislation creating the Kansas Office of Housing, said she felt there should be more from corporations for the homeless.

Diane Otis, representing Wichita Greyhound Charities, agreed. Wichita Greyhound Charities receives 1 percent from the profit of the greyhound track. In turn, the organization gives the money back to the state of Kansas through charitable grants.

In 1989, $662,000 was given back to the state and $750,000 is anticipated in 1991, Otis said.

In order to receive a grant from Wichita Greyhound Charities, Otis said the program must be a non-profit and tax exempt organization. She said they fund only special projects, Otis said they received 392 requests for grants last year.

72 funded. She said 40 of the organizations funded were in the homeless and needy category, of which one was MESI.

Of concern among those attending the conference was an article in Sunday's Topeka Capital-Journal, which reported that the U.S. Census Bureau claimed 228,621 homeless were counted in one night across America. Several attending the conference said they felt the numbers were far from accurate.

Oleen said she was aware of the Census Bureau's count and said there are steps being taken to fix it.

'We felt there were numbers not shown at the federal level," she said. "Thousand of petitions have been sent saying they want recounts."

The rest of the day was spent in workshops to help organizations run their shelters.

Rankin said she hopes the conference will become an annual event,

Task forces formed to look at state woes

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - Gov. Joan Finney said Monday she would welcome a little unconventional thinking from six state task forces that will be formed to examine the state's problems.

She said the project is an effort to involve the Kansas Board of Regents schools in the formation of a public agenda.

The governor also dismissed criticism from Senate Republican leaders who said she was living in a "dream world" during the 1991 legislative session that adjourned early Sunday.

"Our universities have been tapped only intermittently in the solution of practical state problems," Finney said during a Statehouse news conference when she announced the formation of the task forces.

"Our hope is to apply these substantial institutional resources to achieve the economic and social changes needed to move Kansas forward in a visionary manner,"

She said the program will tap the faculties of the state's six regents universities for the task forces, calling for an uninhibited

"The welcome mat will be laid down for unconventional thinking," Finney said.

Manhattan, Kansas 66506

The 1992 All-University Open House Coordinating Council is taking applications for student coordinators. These will be the individuals who will help make the All-University Open House Program on Saturday, April 4, 1992, a great success. The following volunteer positions are open:

COORDINATOR: This individual will provide supervision and leadership to the committee chairpersons who are listed below. Strong organizational skills and public relations interests are requirements. For more information, contact last year's coordinator, Martha Kropf, at 539-7606.

ASSISTANT COORDINATOR: This individual will assist the coordinator in providing supervision and leadership to the committee chairpersons who are listed below. Strong organizational skills and public relations interests are requirements. For more information, contact last year's assistant coordinator, Tresa Walters, at 537-9075.

MEDIA CHAIRPERSON: This person is responsible for the coordination of the entire public relations program, which includes TV and radio interviews, high school visitations, and community contacts. This individual will work closely with University Relations. Suggested skills include long term planning and organizational abilities, and excellent communication skills. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Britt Owen, at 539-7606.

STUDENT LIFE EXHIBITS CHAIRPERSON: This person is responsible for coordinating the student organizations' and university departments' table displays in the K-State Union. This person will have the opportunity to work directly with student organization representatives and much of the staff of the K-State Union. This position requires excellent organizational and communication skills. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Mary Copple, at 539-2859.

ENTERTAINMENT CHAIRPERSON: This position involves working with elementary, junior and senior high school music groups, as well as area entertainment groups, who will be invited to the campus to entertain throughout Saturday of Open House. The individual in this position should possess excellent organizational and communication skills, as well as the ability to fulfill long term planning. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Phyllis McDaniel, at 539-8751.

SPECIAL PROJECTS CHAIRPERSON: The assignment for this position includes developing new ideas, special activities, and other promotional activities for the weekend of Open House. This position requires excellent communication skills, organizational abilities, and creativity in planning. For more information contact last year's chairperson, Melissa Schock, at 539-7606.

If you are interested in helping when K-State organizes the 13th annual All-University Open House on April 4, 1992, applications are available in 122 Anderson Hall, Office of the Vice President for Institutional Advancement. Completed applications must be turned in no later than Monday, April 29, 1991. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact one of the students listed, or Pat Bosco, Associate Vice President for Institutional Advancement, 122 Anderson Hall, 532-6237.

Golfer Graham adjusting to life at K-State

ERIC BROWN

Sports Reporter

Transferring from a community college to a four-year school can be a difficult step for an athlete. Given just two years to contribute, the competitor cannot afford the time to gradually adjust like a freshman.

For transfer Bill Graham, however, there was very little adjustment needed. What little learning about K-State there was to do could be accomplished with a look at the family scrapbooks.

"My grandfather was head football coach here in the 1950s and was an All-American football player," Graham said. "My grandparents live here, as well as aunts and uncles, so there was a strong pull to come here.'

Although he grew up in Danville, Ill., the youngest Graham has always followed the Wildcats. He was born in Topeka and spent the first six years of his life in Kansas. Yet, his family tree puts a heavy burden on his shoulders.

"K-State, being in the Big Eight, has a lot of prestige involved," Graham said. "So I was just excited and honored to play here. I think it's neat to be a third-generation athlete at K-State.'

Graham was a standout golfer at both Danville Area Community College and Danville High School. He lead the junior college on his way to earning all-region and National Junior College Athletic Association All-America honors.

In high school, he was a fouryear letter winner and team most valuable player for three years.

His background and family ties to K-State really made his scholarship meaningful to him. Yet, as he explains, his happiness is limited to the fact that he left Kansas in his early childhood. But his purple loyalty lived on through family stories and news reports.

"Actually, I was so young, I don't remember a lot of the activities involved," Graham said. "I just loved K-State basketball and the other athletics.

The end of his community college career added even more thrill to his Manhattan arrival.

"I was so excited because coming off my last year at junior college, I played really well," he said. "That made coming in here easier because I felt like I was going to continue to play well."

After his arrival, his inevitable adjustment period did arrive, and he is just now finding himself on the course again. A new program, coach and new surroundings began to set in.

His scores weren't quite up to par, and he was unhappy with his game. However, he weathered the stormy weather and is now reaping the benefits.

"First semester was probably my most frustrating season of golf ever," he said. "Even now, I'm not playing as well as I can, but my scores are getting lower, and I'm starting to really contribute.

"I just kept realizing that I had the talent. I didn't try to change anything. I kept the same lifestyle and kept plugging away."

As the Big Eight season-finale approaches, Graham and the other players are gaining more and more confidence. The team has stepped up from lower-division finishes to the role of challenger.

"I've never been on a team with this much talent," Graham said. "So I keep getting more and more excited.

"I'm hitting better than I've hit since I got here. The next two weeks before Big Eight should help me solidify my game."
The Big Eight meet will allow the Wildcats an opportunity to break their image of a lowerdivision regular occupant. Fifthranked Oklahoma State sits atop the conference, followed by Oklahoma. From there on down, it appears to be up for grabs.

Graham is mentally ready for the Big Eight, and his long wait is just about to end.

"I'm very excited," Graham said. 'I just can't wait to play in the Big Eight meet. It's been my dream for a long time, and now it's time to go out and do it."

Basketball squad shrinks, grows on same exciting day

DAVID SVOBODA Sports Editor

When does two minus two equal two? Now, silly.

That's the mathematical equation used by those involved with the K-State men's basketball program Monday, as a pair of junior college players signed national letters-ofintent, and a pair of current 'Cats announced their pending departures. The additions, and subtractions, leave the number of scholarships K-State has left to give at two.

The signees are Aaron Collier, a 6-foot-6 power forward from State Fair Community College in Sedalia, Mo., and Gaylon Nickerson, a 6-3 shooting guard from Butler County Community College in El Dorado.

The two current Wildcats who have notified K-State coach Dana Altman that they will not be returning to the University in the fall are sophomore guards Patrick Sams and Marlon Shadd.

Collier was the leading scorer in each of the last two seasons for State Fair, and was first-team All-Region 16 in each of those years. He was named a second-team juco All-American following the 1990-91

"Aaron is very strong and quick to the ball," Altman said. "He's got a great combination in the fact that he's a powerful player with very good hands.

Collier, who averaged 23.4 points and 11.8 rebounds a game last season, is the latest in a line of State Fair products to wear the purple and white. Joe Wright and Will Scott preceeded Collier in Manhattan.

His rebounding skills are what impressed Collier's juco coach, Bill Barton, the most.

'Aaron's just an excellent rebounder," Barton said. "If he gets his hand on the ball, he won't lose it. He runs the floor well and can shoot it from 15 feet and in. He's a very solid individual and a great competitor."

Collier is a native of Kansas City, Mo., and played high school ball at Northeast High.

Nickerson averaged 20.2 points and six rebounds a contest for Butler in 1990-91 after spending his freshman campaign at Wichita State.

Nickerson's signing was reported by several members of the news media across the state Monday, though K-State sports information director Kenny Mossman said his office would not issue a release officially confirming the signing until Altman returned with the paperwork.

Altman was on his way home from Arkansas, where Nickerson's mother makes her home, late Monday night and was unavailable for comment on the signing of the Butler County All-American.

Collier and Nickerson join 6-4 swingman Vincent Jackson and 6-6 swingman Trasel Rone as K-State's spring signees. During the early signing period, K-State obtained signatures from 6-1 guard Brian Henson and 6-8 forward George Hill.

All four spring signees are juco products, while both fall signees are from the high school ranks.

Altman said the decisions of Sams and Shadd to depart were brought about by a desire to play closer to home, both are from Florida, and a desire to get more playing time. "Patrick and Marlon basically made a decision to return home. I think Marlon wants to go to a junior college in Florida, and Pat is still looking at some schools but hasn't made any decisions," Altman said. "Both young men are good players and solid people.

'They're interested in more playing time, and I certainly respect that desire. I'm disappointed that it didn't work out for them at K-State, but I wish them nothing but the best."

Sams was on the floor in 21 of K-State's 28 games last season, averaging 7.1 minutes, 2.6 points and 1.1 rebounds an outing. He played in 39 games over his two-year career as a Wildcat.

Shadd saw action in 17 games last year, and averaged 5.9 minutes, 1.9 points and 0.9 rebounds a game. He sat out his freshman season to satisfy NCAA academic requirements.

Doubles woes neπers

The third time's the charm, right? Coach Steve Bietau and the tennis team were counting on the truth of that adage as the unit carried a 4-2 lead into doubles action against Nebraska Monday.

In its past two outings, the squad had battled to 3-3 ties in singles against Colorado and Iowa State. But on both occasions, it was swept in doubles to fall to identical 6-3 scores. The Wildcats hoped to see the streak of poor luck end after taking their 4-2 advantage.

But for the third meet in a row, the squad was blanked in doubles to fall to 1-5 in the Big Eight.

Bietau found enough encouraging points in the 5-4 loss, however, to call the outing one of his team's best

"This was our best singles performance of the year and was possibly our best overall performance," Bietau said. "This is a team that beat us 7-2 last year, and they had everyone back this season.'

After seeing her four-meet winning streak stopped in Ames, No. 1 singles player Michele Riniker took revenge by beating NU's Ildiko Guba 1-6, 7-6 (8-6), 6-2. Earlier in the week, Guba claimed a 6-3, 6-1 win over Susanne Pollman, the No. 1 player from ISU who defeated Riniker Sunday. Riniker withstood four match points in the the second set of her match with Guba to force the decisive third.

No. 2 singles player Suzanne Sim beat NU's Ann Flannery 6-4, 6-2. At the No. 4 position, Thresa Burcham got by Rachel Collins 7-5, 6-4 for her second straight win and improved her conference mark to 3-2. In No. 3 singles, Neili Wilcox lost her threemeet winning streak at the hands of Nancy Tyggum 6-1, 3-6, 6-2.

Angie Gover picked up her fourth singles win in a row at No. 5 by downing Tina Coutretsis 7-6 (7-5), 6-1. Gover is now 4-1 in the conference and 12-6 on the year.

The play of their doubles teams, however, failed to carry the 4-2 leading Wildcats to their second Big Eight win. Riniker and Burcham continued their skid after winning three matches in a row together. The tandem followed back-to-back losses to Colorado and Iowa State with a 6-1, 6-2 loss to Collins and Tyggum. Sim and Wilcox fell to Guba and Flannery 7-5, 6-4. Gover and Tracy Parker were beaten by Coutretsis and Heidi Junius 6-3, 6-2.

Spring practice begins

Quarterback battle shapes up; team picks its leaders

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

Spring practices began Saturday for the football team, which looks to improve on last year's 5-6 record, the best showing for a Wildcat squad since 1982

The squad has seven fewer practice days to work with due to NCAA regulations, which reduced the length of spring seasons. The campaign will close with the annual spring game on May 4. Coach Bill Snyder listed the team's primary objectives of the spring season: "We want to continue to improve fundamentally, to build on a positive attitude and on an even greater level of selfexpectation. We hope to develop a solid and competitive two-deep on both sides of the ball and greatly improve in all facets of our kicking game."

The team selected player representatives serve as a liason to the players at each position during the spring. Chosen were Joe Boone, linebacker; Russ Campbell, tight end; Rogerick Green, defensive back; Jody Kilian, defensive line; Curtis Madden, running back; Quentin Neujahr, offensive line; William Price, defensive back; and Michael Smith, wide receiver.

****** With the loss of Carl Straw, the second-leading passer in school history, competition is wide open for the quarterback spot for next season. Listed in the top spot on the depth chart for the spring is fifthyear senior Paul Watson. Returning to battle Watson for the position are sophomore Jason Smargiasso and senior Matt Garber. neither of whom has seen much action.

Watson has passed for more than 1,600 yards and eight touchdowns in substantial playing time both as a replacement to Straw and as a starter. Watson and Straw battled closely throughout their careers, but Snyder said he doesn't think competition at the quarterback spot should cause second guessing.

"If there's ever been a quarterback controversy, it's in someone else's mind," Snyder said. "We're very fortunate that the quarterbacks we have now have been in the program since its inception. It takes a long time for a quarterback to develop in a system, and all three of these guys have been in the program long enough to really compete." ******

Snyder commented on the quality of this year's recruiting class, which was nearly complete as of late last week.

'You just never know when you're recruiting how things will turn out," Snyder said. "Last year's recruiting class is just now getting to the point where we can see its strengths and weaknesses.

"On paper, which is about all its worth, we have put together a good recruiting class this year," he said. 'Some highlights of the class are that they are a quality group of people, and are an excellent group academically.

The group of 22 incoming players listed in the early signing period, which includes three junior college players, have a cumulative grade point average of 2.9

The early signing class includes five offensive linemen, three defensive linemen, three defensive backs, three wide receivers, two quarterbacks, two linebackers and one tight end.

"I think we recruited very well at offensive line. We want to be as strong as we can be up front," Snyder said. "Offensively, overall we did very well. Defensively, I wasn't as happy. I didn't think we recruited the kind of depth we needed on defense and didn't get as many defensive linemen as we wanted."

AUGUSTA, Ga. - The new Masters champion is a do-it-yourself kit in a tiny, tidy, tightly wrapped package.

For Ian Woosnam, there are no teachers, no sports psychologists, none of the golfing gurus who have become so popular in recent years. "I like to work it out for meself," periment that culminated in his first major-tournament triumph may prompt him to spend a bit more time playing in America.

Not a lot more, mind you, just a bit. He has no intention of making a habit

Woosnam, who has played only a handful of American events in recent years, came to this country four weeks ago to prepare for the Masters.

"The time I spent in the U.S., obviously it done me good," he said.

And, with that in mind, he may revise a schedule that currently calls for only two more appearances in America this year, in the U.S. Open and the PGA.

The Masters victory changed his priorities, and that could change his playing schedule.

"This meant everything to me," Woosnam said. His agent, John Simpson, said it also could mean as much about $5.5 million in endorsements and other contracts for the son of a Welsh farmer.

reign at Notre Dame Phelps resigns after long

By the Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. - Six weeks after ending one of his worst seasons at Notre Dame, Digger Phelps ended his college coaching career. The flamboyant Phelps ended months of speculation Monday when he announced his departure from Notre Dame after 20 years of coaching the Irish to some memorable victories but never to a national championship. "For the last two decades it's never been a job," Phelps said at a news conference on campus. "Every day, even with the ups and downs, was like Christmas Day, where you opened up the present you wanted most.

Last season was anything but a present. The Irish, hit by a rash of injuries, fell to 12-20. It was Phelps' worst season since Notre Dame went 6-20 in 1971-72, his first with the Phelps, who led Notre Dame to 14 NCAA tournament appearances but reached the Final Four only in 1978, offered no regrets and gave no indication that the pressures of a losing season drove him to step down.

"It's time to move into the next decade," said the 49-year-old Phelps, adding that he won't take another Division I coaching job but was leaving open his NBA options.

The search for a successor has not officially begun, said associate athletic director Roger Valdeserri, but it's expected that Xavier's Pete Gillen, a former assistant under Phelps, will become a leading candidate. Seton Hall coach P.J. Carlesimo and Duke's Mike Krzyzewski already have said they are not interested.

"If there is any interest in Pete Gillen, I'm sure Notre Dame will use the proper channels and contact me first," Xavier athletic director Jeff Fogelson said. "We are planning for next season with Pete Gillen as our basketball coach.

Phelps, who had a 393-197 record at Notre Dame and a 419-200 head coaching record including one season at Fordham, said his immediate plans are to spend more time on his hobby, painting.

Phelps leaves with more wins and losses than any other Irish basketball

In 1990-91, the Irish opened with two victories but then dropped seven in a row. Hobbled with injuries, Notre Dame took on a schedule that included 11 games with ranked teams, seven against Top 10 teams. As the losses mounted, Phelps was regularly booed at home games.

"It was tough breaks, one right after another," guard Tim Singleton said as the season drew to a close.

In Phelps' first season, Notre Dame suffered its most humiliating loss, 94-29 to Indiana. But he quickly revived the program and two seasons later, in 1974, Notre Dame broke UCLA's 88-game NCAA record winning streak with a 71-70 victory.

The victory over the Bruins cemented Phelps' relationship with fans, whom he gave other moments of high drama.

Xymox adds wrinkles to traditional Cure sound in latest album

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reviewer

Xymox is the cure for the Cure. The album "Phoenix" is reminiscent of certain stereotypical Cure sounds and blended nicely with Xymox's own talent as a group - no hints of disintegration or reintegration here. The first song on the album explains the title slightly better than perhaps a group fascination with X's. "Phoenix of My Heart/Wild Thing" sets the standard for the international new-wave flavor of the album.

The remix of "Wild Thing," which ends the first song, is a shockingly mellow version of a tune that has riotous possibilities in other versions. Ronny Moorings wails and moans out these familiar lyrics with little passion. His indifference is ironic, but considering the myriad remakes of "Wild Thing," Moorings' version and attitude are creative.

Moorings' voice is unmistakably that of Robert Smith as he lingers over the consonants of erotic words in the second song, "At The End Of The Day."

"I've wanted to kiss you/ I've wanted to hold you/ Closer to my heart," Moorings groans in Smith style. He wrote the song himself, so we can't blame such striking similarity on a remake.

As much as this second song sounds like the Cure, the rest of the album does not continuously resemble only that. Xymox becomes very experimental, using an aboriginal instrument in the third song, "The Shore Down Under.'

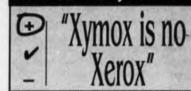

This sound, a low-pitched hum, is combined with ocean sounds to introduce the song, filter through it and complete it. Xymox cannot be credited with the beauty of the sea sounds of course, but the innovation of combining this with the aboriginal Xymox goes on with more diver-sity. "Mark the Days" is a folky, light and melodic song.

"Believe Me Sometimes" has a melancholy piano introduction to a jazzy tune expressed in the moaning and wailing of female vocalist Anka

"Wonderland" follows as the closest dance tune. The song carries intriguing harmonies. The other dance rhythm we hear on the album is a dark new-wave beat, which evokes images of a black, smoky club full of hairspray and leather. Both of these dance songs, as well as "Written In The Stars," rely on funky tinsounding sythesized drums.

Further experiments in vocals include the ominous male voices in chorus following the solo soprano in the song "Crossing the Water." This song is mostly instrumental and experimental. Xymox seems to be trying to capture nature in music.

Finally, the last song on the album, "Smile Like Heaven," closes the work with the same unassuming air of the first song. The last song has a blues tint in some strange way and the wailing guitars communicate a melancholy mood without the extreme depression of the Cure.

Xymox succeeds in creating their own album within what at first appears to be the Cure revisited. Their innovation wins out over an old sound. Xymox is easy to appreciate music piece is quite a tribute to an because they sound familiar.

ZooParents helps raise money for Friends of the Sunset Zoo

North American animals more popular than exotics

BETH PALMER

Collegian Reporter Add a wild one to your family. This is possible through the Sunset ZooParents program by adopting an animal for a cost ranging from $10 to $250. Angela Baier, marketing/development director of Sunset Zoo, said any animal at the zoo may be adopted, but there are different prices for each. 'North American animals are the most popular," she said. "That has surprised me. I thought it would be the exotics.' The most popular animal to adopt seems to be the golden eagle, which may have to do with the recent surge of patriotism, Baier said. 'The most unusual adoption we've had is a giant hissing cockroach," she said.

Many animals are adopted by people who wish to be zoo-parents themselves, but there are also adoptions given as gifts.

'When we started, I anticipated them being more as gifts," Baier said, "but I'd say it's about equal. There are a lot of funny gifts, such as pigs, for dieting friends."

Groups and organizations have started pooling their money and adopting the animals as mascots. Acacia Fraternity adopted an Arctic Fox as their mascot, and the local elementary schools have turned adopting animals into school projects.

Norman and Renee Spurlock of Manhattan adopt animals every year for their five grandchildren.

"When they come to town they race right out to see them," Renee Spurlock said. "They think it's

Once someone becomes a zooparent, they receive an official adoption certificate, a free one-time pass to visit the adopted animal, an invitation to the annual "Family Reunion," a Mother's or Father's Day card, and their name on the recognition plate at the zoo's adoption

Adoptions are annual, and everyone can renew at the end of the year. Once the adoption expires, a letter and brochure are sent out asking the parent to renew

"I've had a lot of people who get a new animal every year they renew," Baier said.

The ZooParents organization is a support program, which contributes the money raised to Friends of Sunset Zoo. The program has been at the zoo for several years under the name "Adopt An Animal" and then changed to the current program last November after KQLA suggested they put together a radio package for the program.

It has since become a corporate sponsored program after being a volunteer program for the first several years. KQLA, Vista Drive-In and the First National Bank have two-year contracts as corporate sponsors with a right to renew at the end of the term.

Baier said the zoo has more than quadrupled the number of zooparents since the kick-off of the new program in November.

"We've had a lot of comments from parents that were in the older program, and they like the new benefits and the lower price," Baier

All of the money donated through ZooParents goes into new projects for the zoo, which FOSZ coordinates. If the zoo needs anything above the general operating budget the city sets, Baier said, then the zoo requests money from FOSZ.

Pam Newman, president of FOSZ, said the program helps promote the zoo and the zoo staff in ways the city can't.

Currently, several thousand dollars are being used to put a plaza around a new exhibit of snow leopards. Contributions to the zoo also include education programs, library development, staff educational seminars, the ZooMobile and development of new exhibits.

Comedy gives love, hate in simple, bright design

Quick emotion changes show fickleness of human nature

JENNIFER HOFFMAN

Collegian Reporter

Shakespeare shows the irrationality of life in his play "A Midsummer Night's Dream." Spell or no spell, people can change their emotions in the blink of an eye.

"This is a strange comedy that we are having lots of fun with, while also trying to make it clear and have some sort of reason," said Lewis Shelton, associate professor of speech and director of the play.

"It deals with emotions in some respects because it shows how close love and hate relate to one another,' he said. "Even though these two things are separate emotional qualities, they can be underlying just below the surface in the same person."

The play opens with the marriage of the Duke of Athens to the Queen of the Amazons. The ironic thing is that he has just defeated her in a war.

Throughout the entire play, there is a contrast between the world of the court and the world of the woods. The court shows authority, especially when a woman is forced to marry a man. When the Queen and her lover escape to the woods, love

"The play does end in celebration, but it takes the fairies to make everything right rather than the voice of reason and authority," Shelton said.

'We've done some doubling in the play," he said. "They did doubling back in Shakespeare's time."

The characters that will be doubling are the Duke of the Athens with Oberon, and the Queen of the Amazons with the Queen of the Fairies.

"Both of my characters are men at power, so it's hard to come up with subtle differences," said James Smith, senior in theater, who is playing the Duke of Athens and Oberon. Despite the costumes, which make it easy to distinguish them on stage, they aren't very different."

Meili Cade, sophomore in English, said, "I understand Shakespeare a lot better since I've been in this show. I took a Shakespeare class, but with this, I get his sense of humor, which can only be seen acted out. That's how Shakespeare is written to be acted out."

The play will be showing at 8 p.m. April 18-20 and 24-27 in Nichols Theatre. Tickets are available now at the McCain Box Office.

Summer programs spring into motion in Manhattan

CANDY MCNICKLE Collegian Reporter

As the school year winds down, Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department spring and summer activities are just beginning. Jim Colley, recreation superintendent for the City of Manhattan, said March marks the end of the parks and recreation winter program. The programs pick up again in May, which is the start of the various activities offered for the spring and summer program.

"Currently, 860 kids ranging in age from eight to 16 are involved with our soccer program held at Anneberg Park, which is our largest single program," he said.

Helping with the soccer program is Doug Sisk, senior in leisure studies. He is serving an internship with the department.

"I work under the soccer supervisor, Sue Hageman, and I'm basically her shadow," Sisk said. "I knew about the internship from previous years. I applied, and they put me where they could use me. Summer activities consist of many different programs for all ages. Included are Arts in the Park, a puppet theater, Disney summer movies, a children's theater, softball, baseball, T-ball, tennis, soccer and various camps.

"Our Arts in the Park program is 16 years old," Colley said. "This summer we're offering more lighter music in addition to some country and western. We hope to provide a diverse selection to appeal to the community.'

The department offers a chance for K-State students to become involved in areas of personal interests. Colley encourages them to list their interests when applying to better aid in placement.

"I started as a volunteer as a fall basketball instructor, and then, eventually, got a paid position for the next two years," said Robert Barth, senior in leisure studies.

"My experience with the department helped to develop my communication and teaching skills, and I became real good at entertaining teen-agers," Barth said.

In some cases, positions with the department can lead to possible employment for students involved with the programs.

"By doing my internship with Manhattan Parks and Recreation, I've gotten a jump on other stu-dents in my major," Sisk said.

"K-State has a good parks and recreation program. Once I complete the Certified Leisure Professional test, I will be certified.'

Backstage crew paints colorful picture to breath life into play after working on set since Christmas break

JENNIFER HOFFMAN

Collegian Reporter

Colors of the rainbow, a sky of blue and pillars of gray and turquoise bring out the beauty and hatred in life. The person behind the scenes has to be able to understand these things and create them with a brush.

Mary Ann Lewis, theater instructor, is one of those special people. She has been working on the set of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" since Christmas break.

"I read the script several times and met with the director and the other designers to decide what to do," Lewis said. "The director wants a certain concept of the show to be portrayed."

Lewis designed the set herself and is painting it herself. She first made a model to show to the director to make sure it was what he wanted.

"It's easy to paint this set, because I know what I want since I designed it," Lewis said. "When you copy someone else's set, it takes longer to

Sports events, crude oil embargoes remain

By the Associated Press

LUXEMBOURG - The European Community agreed Monday to end sanctions on imports of iron, steel and gold coins from South Africa, the last remaining bans imposed by the trading bloc on Pretoria's white-led government.

The EC, however, will continue to observe the U.N. bans on sports events with South Africa and U.N. embargoes on arms and crude oil from the country.

The foreign ministers of the 12 Western European nations said President F.W. de Klerk should be rewarded for his efforts to end the country's policy of racial international relations." segregation.

Reorganization affects funding of Architecture

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

The Essential Edge Campaign has yet to hit the College of Architecture and Design full force, and the reason can be found in one word reorganization.

The problem was when they offered to cancel the college," said David Weaver, KSU Foundation development officer for the college.

We have a new dean who had been there a year when the college was threatened. It diverted all the attention to reorganization," he said. College of Architecture and Design Dean Lane Marshall said he couldn't agree more.

"Reorganization has done both hurt and helped architecture," he said.

"I think that touched the heartstring of most of our alums. However, our $3-million proposals we had out stopped; they came to an absolute standstill. All of those companies said, 'Why should we give money, you guys might not even be there.'

"It's taken some real effort on my part and the part of the president to convince them, and some of those people are still a little bit skeptical."

Weaver echoed the same thoughts and said, "We got stalled out. We couldn't ask for $1 million with any

"No one had any energy left after reorganization, it kind of wiped a year out of our lives in terms of forward momentum," Marshall said.

The forward momentum has taken a giant leap ahead in recent months, ferred futures campaign, which is $3 million plus $7 million by the year 2000," Marshall said. "We're not going to stop when the Essential Edge portion is met, if we ever get there. We are finding its not easy to raise $3

"We are falling on the heels of KU's Campaign Kansas. We're going to the same group of people, like the architecture community in Kansas City, and they've already been there."

When asked if the efforts in Kansas City have been successful, he said, "No, we haven't been successful, it's just not a good time to be trying to find money out there in the corporate world."

Another problem is the cultivation of alumni. Historically, architects don't have a tremendous amount of wealth and that, coupled with a tight

STACY HILBURN Collegian Reporter

Veterinary medicine students focusing on agricultural practices work closely with Mark Spire, professor of clinical services and head of the agricultural practices department.

'K-State is blessed in that 25-35 students each year want to specialize in agriculture," Spire said.

"These students in their senior years have more opportunities than those in any other section in the hospital," he said. K-State is known for its cow and calf management, feed lot medicine, data management and statistical analysis capabilities. In the Food Animal Production Medicine Program, the students along with Spire, 13 practitioners, a biostatistician, and a computer programmer, learn information management.

They work with food animal producers to monitor and, if possible, help with production efficiency.

Included in food animals are beef and dairy cattle, swine, chickens, sheep, camels, llamas, and more. "Producers are working in a livestock business that's very volatile. We try to make them competitive producers," Spire said. John Galland, clinical biostatisti-cian in agricultural practices, said it is more than just improving profit and production. "We have a responsibility to society, to the welfare of the animals, a wholesome food supply, and environmental protection," Galland said.

The people involved with the program work with cooperating producers and veterinarians primarily in the K-State practice area which consists of Riley and surrounding counties.

After information is gathered, it is analyzed and documented. Galland said a lot of the time the producers are not aware that prob-

'When we tell them of the existing problem, they may not be convinced. We may even take a portable computer out to the field to show graphic examples of how their production has changed over time," he said.
"The students learn all the necessary techniques because they will need these themselves someday," Galland said.

Spire consults producers outside of working with the students.

"There are about 600 calls a year from producers wanting management," he said. "If the consultation can't be done over the phone, we actually go out to the farm or commit to a long-term consultation, which is three to five years.

"The majority of the cases are in the local practice area, but have been as far away as North Dakota,

The Kansas Board of Regents will get a firsthand opportunity today and Thursday to understand what is hap-

'They come to K-State every other year," he said. "They'll meet with faculty and student leadership as well as conduct their normal business

Fairman said he is looking forward to the meeting at K-State because there are three new regents who may never have been to the campus. "This will be an excellent opportunity for them to get a feel for what we are all about," he said. Fairman said the Manhattan meeting will help K-State because the students and faculty will be able to air their concerns about equipment and other needs.

"They can get a clear feeling why we request certain things," he said.

Provost James Coffman echoed the sentiment.

'The more they know on a firsthand basis, the better the relationship," Coffman said.

Fairman said the regents will tour the campus, including the Chemistry/Biochemistry building, Farrell Library, and the site of the Throckmorton addition.

Reorganization among Kansas Board of Regents institutions may become a reality within the coming

"There has definitely been a high degree of interest in this project from faculty, administrators and students," said Provost James Coffman.

The Council of Chief Academic Officers, a group that advises the regents, appointed a task force to review the missions of the regents and its seven institutions.

A mission is a statement of purpose, which defines an institution's role within the state and the regents.

The task force will present its recommendation for a system-wide mission to the board in June. The regents will in turn draft a final systemwide statement by fall or early winter and give it to the seven schools.

The institutions will then draft new missions following the guidelines set by the task force.

"There is no question we are on a mandate from the state Legislature to examine thoroughly the issue of duplication," said Martine Hammond-Paludan, director of academic affairs for the regents and member of the task force.

With the recent lack of adequate funds for higher education, the Legislature is looking for ways to consolidate to save money, she said. Since late February, the task force has been compiling and evaluating current and projected demographic and economic information. The information includes numbers of students graduating from high school and what parts of the economy will have a large influence in the next five to 10 years.

Coffman listed some of the important areas on which the task force will

'What are the enrollments of the institutions, and how should enrollment be viewed in terms of priority and budgeting?" he said. "What is required to serve the needs of the state, and what is unnecessary duplication?"

Coffman said one of the first steps is to decide criteria for necessary and unnecessary duplication.

Duplication can occur both within departments or colleges of an institution and between two institutions, Hammond-Paludan said.

Allies destroy mines in gulf

ABOARD THE USS TRIPOLI OFF KUWAIT (AP) - Allied ships and helicopters have destroyed 735 mines sown by Iraq in the northern Persian Gulf, but possibly hundreds more remain a hazard to navigation.

"They're ready to do what they're designed to do," said Capt. David Vail, commander of U.S. mine removal efforts in the gulf. "Mines do not surrender."

Vail commands the operation from the USS Tripoli, an amphibious assault ship that itself hit a mine Feb. 18 and spent weeks undergoing repairs.

Iraqi commanders told the allies in cease-fire talks that they spread mines across 650 square miles of water in a north-south arc off Kuwait, Vail said. He declined to estimate how many mines were left.

Another senior officer aboard the Tripoli speculated that 500 mines are still to be found. But he stressed that was only a guess and asked not to be quoted by name.

Vail is cautious about Iraq's information on the mines.

Former employee awarded damages

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - A former Dillard Department Stores Inc. employee has been awarded $32,000 in damages by a federal jury, which found that her employment evaluation had been forged.

Nancy Griddine of Kansas City sued the store, alleging she was fired because of race discrimination.

The jury, however, found in favor of the company on the discrimination allegation.

Griddine, who worked at the company's Ward Parkway store from November 1986 until July 1988 was awarded $7,000 in actual damages and $25,000 in punitive damages.

Griddine was told in November 1987 that she needed to improve her sales performance, according to court documents.

Evidence indicated that an April evaluation report, on which her firing was based, was a forgery completed by cutting and pasting. The company did not contest the evidence of forgery.

She was fired, purportedly for poor sales, in July 1988, the documents said.

Finney concerned about strikes

TOPEKA (AP) - Gov. Joan Finney expressed concern Tuesday about the inability of freight railroads and their unions to settle a three-year contract dispute.

Finney said she has discussed a rail strike, which appeared imminent as the midnight Tuesday deadline approached, with members of the state's congressional delegation. The nation's 235,000 freight workers were ready to walk off their jobs early Wednesday.

The governor noted that nearly 9,000 Kansans work for railroads and that the rail system is vital to agriculture and other industries.

"The railroads and Kansans who work on them are both vital parts of our economy," Finney said. "A rail strike could have significant adverse impacts on the Kansas economy. We cannot afford bad news for the Kansas economy."

Judge to reconsider extension

TOPEKA (AP) - A federal judge said Tuesday that he plans to review an order he issued last week, which gave the state more time to change some prison conditions, because of protests from dozens of inmates.

U.S. District Judge Richard Rogers of Topeka said his office is receiving between 20 and 30 letters a day from inmates on the order, which he issued April 8. That order modified the terms of an order Rogers issued in April 1989 requiring the state to improve prison conditions by July 1.

The state Department of Corrections sought the latest order in part because it needed more time to complete a new maximumsecurity prison outside El Dorado. The department also wanted to consolidate programs for female inmates at the Topeka Correctional Facility. Rogers had made his order tentative to allow for a response from prisoners and gave them until April 23 to respond.

"We're receiving a great amount of prisoner mail," Rogers said in an interview. "They do not seem to like the tentative order. We'll look at it, look at the order again."

Largest ever restitution awarded

TOPEKA (AP) - U.S. District Court Judge Dale Saffels has ordered a former Hawaii and California businessman to pay $61 million in what is believed to be the largest criminal restitution order in history.

Franklin Winkler was ordered to pay the restitution to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. for damages that led to the collapse of two Kansas City financial institutions.

The criminal payment, however, is to be concurrent with a 1987 order that Winkler and others pay $61 million in a civil judgment. The criminal restitution is not money Winkler will have to pay in addition to the civil judgment.

Saffels on Monday also ordered Winkler to serve five years in prison and pay a $10,000 criminal fine.

Winkler, 49, formerly of Palm Springs, was the last of 12 defendants to be sentenced in the case.

Winkler pleaded guilty to conspiracy to commit fraud involving several transactions that led to the collapse of two institutions based in Kansas City, Kan.

FORT RILEY — Inside a hangar at Fort Riley's Marshall Airfield Tuesday evening Julian Romero waited for his son, Tony.

"He's with the 74th Explosive Ordnance Detachment and he's been gone since October," Julian Romero said. "We drove from Durango, Colo. to meet him tonight."

Julian Romero waited alongside his wife, his daughter and Tony's wife and two children, one of which was a newborn.

"He was born in January," said Holly Romero, pointing to the baby in the stroller. "Tony hasn't seen

"Oh yes," Holly Romero said. Her daughter nodded her head in agreement, but kept silent with her fingers in her mouth.

When the 295 soldiers finally began marching into the hangar, the band played a march song and the more than 1,500 people who had gathered to meet the soldiers cheered and clapped.

Julian Romero raised a camera to his eye looking for his son.

Soldier after soldier, both men and women, walked in with suntanned faces and bleary eyes. Some smiled, some cried, some just had the look of a soldier on a

FORT RILEY - About 295 soldiers from Fort Riley, the U.S. Army Reserves and Army National Guard returned to Marshall Airfield here, two hours ahead of schedule Tuesday.

At least 1,500 relatives, friends and soldiers were in Building 832, hangar No. 1, for the celebration

The units returning based at Fort Riley were the 937th Engineer Group, 74th Ordnance Detachment and the 82nd Medical Detachment.

The other units returning with the Fort Riley troops were 24th Medical Detachment, a Nebraska Army National Guard unit from Lincoln, Neb., the 89th Army Reserve command's 467th Engineer platoon from Garden City and the 475 Engineering platoon from El Dorado.

Forty minutes before the troops' arrival, relatives and friends of the soldiers were filling the bleachers, and many children were running around.

Signs, banners, ribbons and flags decorated the interior of the building. Above the podium, situated to the left of the reserved seating for the troops, was a large American flag. On either side of the podium were the 50 state flags.

Jeremy Kennedy, St. Johns Mili-tary School pep band and 7th grade student, said his parents were in Dhahran, Saudi Arabia. The band was playing many tunes including "Tequila," "At the Hop" and "Louie, Louie" for the celebration.

Thirty minutes before the soldiers were to enter the hangar, Rebekah Greenwalt was sitting in the bleachers on the south side of the hangar with six members of her family. They had traveled from Lincoln, Neb., with her niece, Heather, and were waiting for Sgt. Donald Davids, 24th Medical Detachment to return. Twelve large balloons with all the holidays from Thanksgiving to Easter were tied to the bleacher next to her.

These balloons just represent everything he has missed," Greenwalt said. "He went over there on his

At 10:15 p.m., when the soldiers were expected to enter the hangar for the celebration, several people started to crowd the large hangar door on the west side. The military officials closed the large hangar

Trish Eldien, freshman in psychology at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, said she was waiting for her brother, Ty, a lieutenant in the 24th.

"Been here for about an hour," Eldien said. "We will stay here in a motel for a couple days to attend more ceremonies.

At 10:40, 25 minutes late, soldiers started to gather at a small door, adjacent to the large door. The crowd of family members started to cheer and wave their flags as they entered the door. The soldiers were trying to stand at attention near their seats. Some of the soldiers, however, hugged family members and wives as they entered the hangar.

When the soldiers had taken their seats, the chaplain said a brief prayer for the crowd at the podium. Three military officials addressed the audience for 12 minutes.

Maj. Gen. Haught of 89th Army Reserve Command in Wichita, opened the ceremony.

"We knew you could do the job," Haught said. "There was no question in our minds.'

Haught left the podium and Maj. Gen. Heng, adjutant general of Nebraska, stepped up to the podium. "This is just the tip of the iceberg," Heng said. "Tonight is your night, savor it." Col. Gary LaGrange, Fort Riley installation commander, said the troops were heroes and asked everyone to bow their heads in silence for the 18 soldiers from Fort Riley who might be perfectly good reasons can happen in that period of time. for things to go awry, but still no excuses, even when our intentions are good.

"God bless you all," LaGrange said. "You are now free to find your loved ones.'

After being dismissed the sol-diers quickly left with their friends and relatives, but Cpl. Marc Pierik and Spc. David Camacho of the 937th Engineer Group were standing near the podium waiting for the bus to take them to the barracks.

It's something that's happened to me. In my column of the Feb. 13 issue of the Collegian, I announced my intention to quit smoking. I'd been smoking heavily for about a year when I saw a movie (a few days before the appearance of that column) which showed a man on an iron lung, and it scared me to death.

"I can't end up like that," I decided, unsure of the actual likelihood of a smoker ending up on an iron lung. Mainly, I acknowledged that smoking heavily will almost certainly cause

This remains the case, of course. But I didn't end up kicking the habit.

I went 18 days cold turkey. The first week or so was hell; my concentration was shot, but at the end of a week I was relieved by the money I was saving and refreshed by the return of my sense of smell. Eighteen days may

> For one thing, in addition to the money I saved and my returning sense of smell, the absence of the cigarette seemed to take the place of the "dynamic presence" I had once fancied the cigarette gave me. In effect, when I started smoking it was in part because some of my role models were smokers, and the cigarette seemed to me to be a visible part of something in their personas that I liked.

> It sounds insignificant, but I think it was Andrew McCarthy in "St. Elmo's Fire" that first made smoking look appealing to me. I saw the movie in high school, and although I didn't smoke heavily until years later, McCarthy's portrayal of a disillusioned, chain-smoking writer really stuck with me. Other artists (real writers) who smoked merely reinforced the stereotype in my mind, so that when I started smoking it seemed like a natural thing for an aspiring artist to do. But for the short time I managed to exist the cigarette's inevitable absence seemed to draw as much attention ("dynamic pre-sence") as the inevitable cigarette itself had. Despite it, it didn't seem better or worse at the time, only different.

Although I saved some money those 18 days, and although long-lost senses returned, I did experience a certain loss. It was a personality thing. Like it or not, we all attach our personalities to some of the things around us. I discovered that smoking had, in fact, become a part of my visualization of myself, and it stayed in my head even when I tried to quit for health reasons.

And I'm addicted. No doubt about it. If I go for half-a-day without smoking at least a couple of cigarettes, I experience headaches. It started out as an "artistic" thing; something it seemed artists did. But as easily as I took it up, it was able to become a physical part of me. It's become natural, something I can do automatically and unthinkingly, something that seems to calm me but really wears me out. I love it because it seems to help me through the day, because it keeps something in my hands. But I hate it because it's a crutch that (once again) I can't seem to live without. I'm dependent upon it, and I guess I don't re-

Childish political games govern Student Senate

Money, politicians, corruption, shifting of blame, denial of blame, trade-offs, slight-ofhand tricks, illegalities, ethical questions and hypocritical actions. K-State politics lack none of these.

K-Staters should be proud they have the opportunity to try their hands in all the slimy, we support you? back-alley politics they want before moving into the real world on the other side of the ivy-covered walls, where consequences and responsibilities often come into play.

Contrary to common belief, K-State students do not financially support political groups. Or do they? No one can really be sure.

This discrepancy surfaced as Student Senate (a political group?) denied financial support to Southwind because it is political. But Southwind denies political actions or tendencies. Even its federal tax forms designate them as a non-political

In reality, the K-State students financially support Student Senate and Associated Students of Kansas - both political organizations. Yet, Student Senate has denied any student funding to Southwind, because it fears Southwind does not represent the sentiments of the student body.

It seems Student Senate is deciding which forms of speech are free on this campus. Who really decides the stance of ASK on issues they take to Topeka? Don't kid yourselves, because it is not you or associated ducks of Disney. It is they - Student Senate, Todd Heitschmidt and their SGA buddies, who decide. And don't political.

After hearing for so long about the desire this University has for diversity, equality and respect among members of the campus community, it seems odd to us that one group of individuals continues to be singled out for humiliation and degradation.

We're referring to the portrayal of women in Playboy and Penthouse magazines, which are sold at the K-State Union Bookstore. It seems strange that two publications that portray women primarily as mere sexual objects should be sold in a building built and operated by student funds and one that represents the student body and faculty to all who visit K-State.

We're not for censorship. We are, however, for a Union that reflects a belief that women should be respected and their value goes beyond that of centerfold pin-ups.

Until these magazines are removed, we see little reason to financially or vocally support the Union in its decision to represent women in such a light.

Just letting off steam

In response to John Boyer's letter to the editor criticizing both the coverage of the Jalapeno Fest and the event itself, I would like to clear up a few things.

First of all, drinking and driving were never mentioned in the article. Designated drivers were provided and utilized. Personally, a vanload of friends and myself were driven home by a girl who had consumed one beer in five hours. Sorry to disappoint you, Boyer, but she was sober. For all your expertise in journalism, you have overlooked the

Inaccurate article causes confusion

The article titled, "Employment workshops aid international students," on page 12 of the Monday, April 8 Collegian contains several inaccuracies regarding practical training eligibility and the application process. ### Pair of recruits could make weekend visit

DAVID SVOBODA

Sports Editor The K-State basketball recruiting puzzle lacks just two pieces, and those pieces may soon be in hand.

Coach Dana Altman said Tuesday that "two young men are coming in for visits this weekend," and the Topeka Capital-Journal reported in its Tuesday editions that two or perhaps three players would be in Manhattan over the weekend.

According to the Capital-Journal report, the two players who will be making visits - as confirmed by their junior college coaches - are Charles Outlaw and Dennis Miller.

Outlaw is a 6-foot-8 forward from South Plains (Texas) College, who averaged 14.1 points, 11.2 rebounds and 3.8 blocked shots last season.

He has also visited Oklahoma State and Houston, South Plains coach Ron Mayberry said.

Miller is a 5-11 point guard from Kankakee (Ill.) juco, where he was a third-team All-American after averaging 12 points and six assists for a team that went 33-3 and was ranked second in the final juco poll.

He has also visited Iowa State and has been asked to visit Alabama and Bradley, Kankakee coach Denny Lehnus told the Capital-Journal.

The third player who might be making a visit, according to the report, is Kevin Watkins, a 6-2 guard from Garden City Community College who averaged 15.7 points and three assists last season.

In addition to the visits by Outlaw,

Miller and possibly Watkins, the Wichita Eagle was expected to report in this morning's edition that J.R. Rider, a 6-5 swingman who was signed originally by K-State out of high school before going on to Allen County Community College and later Antelope Valley (Calif.) Community College, will be making his decision regarding his future public at a news conference at 2 p.m. today.

Rider is expected to announce his intent to attend UNLV.

Visits by Outlaw and Miller - and their possible eventual signings — would help Altman along the way toward filling a pair of needs he identified Tuesday.

"We'd like to get another rebounder, and we'd still like to get another point-type guard," he said in between recruiting calls in his office in Ahearn Field House.

The coach said that there were still several outstanding players left unsigned, and cautioned against calling any players signed from here on out less-than-talented.

"One of the reasons a lot of kids haven't signed is that they're playing in all-star games," he said. "There are different cases, but last season I don't think anyone would have called Val Barnes less-than-talented for not signing in the first few days. Here's a guy who was the Big 10 newcomer of the year."

Altman said that he was pleased with the overall recruiting effort thus far, and credited assistants Jim Kerwin, Ken Turner, Greg Grensing and Dan O'Dowd for their work in helping the Wildcats secure the four players signed thus far during the spring period.

"Things have fallen into place," he said. "In the late period, we've been extremely happy with how things have gone. Jim, Ken, Greg ... those three guys did a hell of a job. And Dan here in the office coordinating everything with Greg was a big help.

Altman said the Wildcats' reliance on junior college players to fill scholarships was a part of his plan to bring the top players available to K-State.

"These young men were the best players that were available, and that's the way it's come about," he said. "I think in our three freshmen and two sophomores that we have a very solid base to begin with."

Two of the three freshmen Altman spoke of were signed during the early period. They are Brian Henson, a 6-1 point guard from McPherson, and 6-8 forward George Hill of Fairhope,

And while University of Kansas signee Greg Gurley has gotten a great deal of ink as the top prep player in the state, Altman feels Henson is being unjustly forgotten.

Those people forget that the state coaches association listed Brian Henson as Mr. Basketball in the state of Kansas," Altman said. "You add Gaylon Nickerson to that - and Gaylon was Mr. Basketball two years ago - and we've got two of the last three Mr. Basketballs in the state on our roster for next season."

Altman said any further analysis of this recruiting class would be

"You really don't want to analyze until you've got them here and have had a chance to see how they blend," he said. "It's really not a question of what they can do, but what they will

"How they'll come together and mesh we won't know until October, November and December.'

What Altman does know is that he's confident that the signings and the return of some redshirts to the fold will make things much more competitive come this fall.

'We missed a year of recruiting last year," he said. "Lon (former coach Kruger) didn't sign anybody early, and we got after it late. As a result, we just weren't deep enough to be competitive in practice.

"Next year's group will be talented and much deeper. And you have to have depth to be successful."

Altman's recruiting efforts won't be graded until some time down the road, but if he can get two more signatures soon, one puzzle will be complete. It'll then be a matter of getting the pieces in the right places.

"It's not going to be pretty early," Altman said of next season. "There's a possibility we'll have eight new players in the program, and only four who played last year.

"It will be a whole new show, but I think that's what we needed.'

When Coach Dana Altman, his assistants and his players survey the floor in 1991-92, they'll see a cast of characters quite different than last season. Altman has added four juco products this spring to a recruiting class of two high school products signed in the fall.

Is juco reliance very smart? Other than Richmond, has strategy really paid off?

Dan Wicker

Sports Reporter

With the signing of two basketball recruits in Gaylon Nickerson and Aaron Collier, K-State has done something that it has survived on maybe one too many times in the K-State basketball has long relied on the talents possessed by the many junior college teams in Kansas and the surrounding states.

Although the many juco transfers have added much to the long rich tradition of K-State basketball, a basketball program can be made stronger with signees that will have four years of elgibility instead of only a short two-year span.

If you would glance through a K-State media guide looking past, of course, Steve Henson, all the K-State lineups are dotted with junior college transfers.

Now there is Mitch Richmond, who went on to all-star fame in the NBA, but others who were supposed to be phenomenal, such as Norris Coleman, are no longer even heard about.

Richmond is one of the few juco transfers at K-State to make a serious impact in the national basketball ranks. Most of the professional basketball players to wear purple ran the hollowed halls of Ahearn Field House and Bramlage Coliseum for four glorious years.

As much as I hate to use the Kansas Jayhawks as an example, they are a good one. After suffering through a tough recruiting season as the result of probation, Kansas has made an immediate impact with large freshman recruiting classes.

With the experience of seniors Mark Randall, Mike Maddox and Terry Brown, Kansas was able to give the freshman class the experience they needed, which will only benefit in its upcoming seasons. Rumors surrounding Kansas have been that they have landed some of the most highly-recruited high school players in the nation for next

K-State relied on junior college transfers Jean Derouillere, Jeff Wires and Keith Amerson. All of them were excellent athletes, but inexperienced in the ranks of Big Eight basketball.

Derouillere was the only player returning who had been a starter from the 1989-90 squad. Their inconsistency and lack of experience led to season full of disappointments. If all three of these players would have had four years in Division I basketball, there is no telling what could have happened.

K-State did ink two high school recruits in the early signing period, but with the four remaining scholarships, four junior college players were snatched up.

Both Patrick Sams and Marlon Shadd will not return for next year's squad, which will open up two more scholarships. Hopefully, K-State could land some quality high school players that could remind us of the four years of Ed Nealy, Rolando Blackman and Henson.

The Wildcats do have a couple of high school blue-chippers in their sights, according to K-State coach Dana Altman. Maybe those can become a reality and make history with K-State basketball.

Some young players might just be exactly what Wildcat basketball needs to increase the all-time lead in conference victories and NCAA appearances. And now is the perfect time, following a low-point in the program when fans might be a little on the down side and looking for a savior.

Fritz set to return to work on track Kansas Relavs

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

Steve Fritz feels confident, but that's where it stops. From there, the rest remains up to his body and how it responds.

This weekend, Fritz will participate in the 66th Annual Kansas Relays in Lawrence.

"I've been doing a lot of conditioning," Fritz said. "(Assistant K-State track coach Cliff) Rovelto has been working me on different events on different days and trying to get my body used to the grind of a decathlon."

It's that grind that Fritz has become synonymous with in track circles. Following last summer's competition, Fritz was ranked ninth in the nation and among the top 50 decathletes in the world by Track and Field

For the other college decathletes competing, it should be a relief Fritz isn't competing against them. During his tenure at K-State, he was a twotime Big Eight champion and twotime NCAA All-American award winner in the decathlon.

Now the 6-foot-4, 190-pounder, from the tiny central-Kansas town of Gypsum has the unenviable task of trying to get himself back into the ranks of a top-flight decathlete. "I've been working hard every day since basketball got over with," Fritz said. "I'm getting back into track shape. I should be able to do pretty good this weekend." The decathlon involves 10 events: the 100-meter dash, long jump, shot put, high jump, 400-meter, 110-meter hurdles, discus, pole

Fritz said his time spent away from the track might hinder him a little this weekend.

Fritz spent last winter as a reserve guard on the Wildcat basketball team, the sport he originally came to K-State for.

Coming from Hutchinson Community College, Fritz arrived at the wrong time to be a guard on the K-State basketball team. As a member of the 1988-89 hoop troop, he wound up spending most of his time on the pine, playing behind Steve Henson and others. And that's when his track career took off. He emerged as the Big Eight's decathlon champion and repeated the following year.

This year, Fritz is sponsored by Visa International and will be making his first decathlon appearance since a dual last August between the United States and Canada.

But now it's April, and the KU Relays loom just 36 hours away.

"I'm positive that I'll be in good enough shape," Fritz said. "I've been running quite a bit in the past few days, and coach has made sure of

Rocket, Patriots discuss contract

Draft approaches for star flanker

By the Associated Press

The New England Patriots talked contract with Raghib "Rocket" Ismail Tuesday while continuing to suggest they might deal the first pick in the NFL draft for the right price.

Sam Jankovich, the Patriots' new president, met with Ed Abram, the agent for Ismail who is reportedly seeking a $3-million-a-year contract. Ismail reportedly has been offered $6 million in two years to sign with the CFL's Toronto Argonauts.

"We're making a little progress," Jankovich said. "I feel very good about where we are and where we're going. We're continuing to make every effort to sign him.

The suspense conceivably could continue right up to the time commissioner Paul Tagliabue opens the draft at noon EDT Sunday.

The Patriots and Abram remain apart on a deal for Ismail, the first high-profile player handled by the agent and his "Team Rocket." The $3-million average deal he is seeking would be far beyond the $11.6 million in six years that Jeff George got last year from Indianapolis.

One agent who represents more than 50 NFL players said Tuesday that Abram would be making a mistake if he allows Ismail to sign with the Argonauts.

"In the long term, going to Canada would be a mistake, even if you get a little less money here," the agent said. "What are you going to tell the players you want next year? That you took your first major client to what is basically a minor league?'

Jankovich said the Patriots were exploring several options; including a trade, taking Ismail even if he's not signed, or taking another player with the first choice, probably Notre Dame cornerback Todd Lyght.

"You never say never," he said. While Jankovich didn't identify teams, sources said New England has talked with Atlanta, which has two first-round draft choices.

Darwin, hot hitting too much for Royals

By the Associated Press BOSTON - Danny Darwin led a day of firsts for the Boston Red Sox.

Darwin earned his first American League victory in five years, Tom Brunansky, Wade Boggs and Mike Marshall hit their first homers and Jeff Reardon got his first 1991 save Tuesday in the Red Sox' 5-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Along the way, the Red Sox also got their first runs after a 22-inning drought that began with consecutive shutout losses to Cleveland.

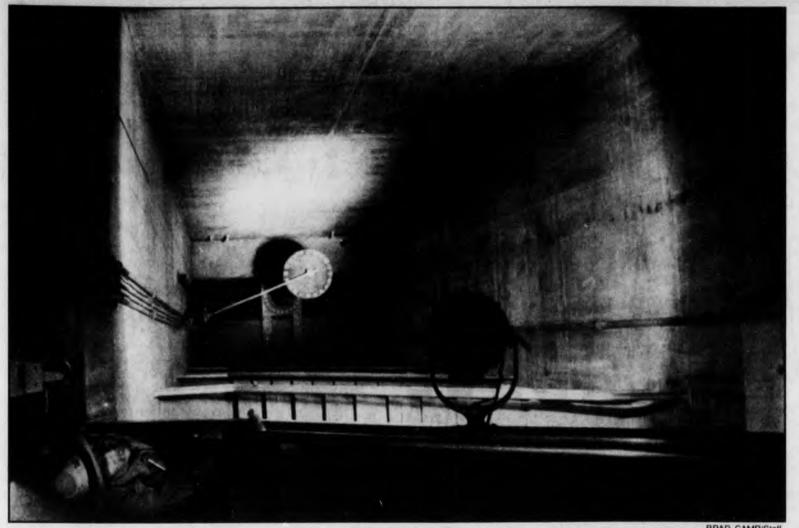

Embarrassed in lasting less than two innings against Cleveland last Thursday, Darwin was determined to turn boos to cheers. He did by allowing five hits, striking out seven and walking one in 7 2-3 innings.

"I felt I let everybody down the other day and I wanted everybody to know that wasn't the real Danny Darwin," said the 35-yearold right-hander, who signed as a free agent for $11.8 million over four years. "I worked on the side and I think that paid off," said Darwin. "I was determined not to give them anything good to hit, especially the left-handed power hitters with the wind blowing out to right. I jammed them with my fastball and tried to make them chase my pitches. Darwin allowed a pair of two-out singles by George Brett and Danny Tartabull in the first and a two-out walk to Kurt Stillwell in the second before he retired 16 batters in order. Mike Macfarlane broke the streak with a leadoff single off the left-field wall in the eighth and came home on Stillwell's two-run homer. Darwin retired the next two batters.

Narrow dark stairs, the smell of mildew and the sound of pounding waves give the Tuttle Creek Reservoir control tower a gothic atmosphere as you descend down below the lake's surface.

The control tower at Tuttle Creek Reservoir is actually 73 feet deep, but people can only walk 35 feet down to the top of the gates that let the water go through to the tubes.

"The contol tower was built to control the water flow from the dam," said Paul Weidhaas, park

"We usually keep the lake at 1,075 feet above sea level," he said. "But it usually depends on the rainfall.'

The lake is raised about four feet in the spring for crappie spawning, let down in the summer, brought back up around October when the birds come around and then let down in December to avoid ice damage, said Greg Wurst, park

The tower has four gates the water goes through and in case one breaks, there is an emergency gate that can be put upstream from the malfunctioning gate.

Construction of the tower itself began in the early 1950s, but was stopped due to area residence controversy. It was finally completed in

From the base of the tower to the top is 200 feet, which is about 20 stories high.

The walls of the tower consist of four-feet-thick reinforced concrete. The gates are each 10-by-20 feet, weigh 15 tons, made of half inch stainless steel plates and hydraulically operated.

Every five years, the gates are opened to 25,000 cubic feet, which lets out 175,000 gallons of water per second, Wurst said.

The gates have a capacity of opening up to 40,000 cubic feet, but this has never been done, he said.

The Corp of Engineers, Wild Life and Parks, and the Kansas Water Resource Board have an annual coordinating meeting to determine where the water level should be for the year, Wurst said.

'We decide where the level should be weather permitting throughout the year," Weidhaas

"We exercise all four gates on a quarterly basis by lifting them up and down 20 feet," Weidhaas said.

"Students have told me they would rather do it this way than to pay a user fee and not get anything back but their time," Brown said. "It's conceivable that five years down the road, buying computers could be required for the whole college.

"Its going to be tough. The realities of the future are that we've got to have extra funding to do things we want to do. You can't ask the state to fund all of the things we need to do.

The second program is an interinstitutional species-specific food animal production medicine program called the Food Animal Production Medicine Consortium.

The schools consist of the Universities of California-Davis, Florida, Illinois, Nebraska-Lincoln, Michigan State University, and K-State.

"Students from these schools come to K-State for three to six weeks for a special beef program, unique to K-State. In turn, our students can go to one of the participating schools," Spire said.

The reason for this program is each school has a specialty which the students can get more interest in. "Once graduated, if interested, the students can go into one of these practices. So this program has a lot to offer," Spire said.

Spire also teaches a course on theriogenology.

"This is the first full year the course has been implemented. It is a cooperative learning project. We try to get students to do critical thinking by giving them problems to solve. It is working well," Spire said.

Spire received his master's degree at K-State and has been teaching here since 1976. He has received many honors, including the Walter S. Jones and Evan C. Jones Trust Chair in Food Animal Medicine Endowment.

"Agricultural practice is a high interest that is so great. There are a lot of job opportunities, and upon graduation salaries are higher than any other segment in veterinary medicine. We're training our students because there needs to be the professionals to handle the problems with production," Spire said.

Railroad workers threaten strike

Companies, workers looking for settlement before deadline

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Spokesmen for two rail companies and a union in this large railroad hub were still hoping Tuesday afternoon that a potentially devastating strike could be averted by the midnight deadline.

Several unions covering railroad workers have threatened a national strike, an action that could idle 235,000 freight workers nationwide and about 3,000 workers in the Kansas City area.

Negotiations continued Tuesday afternoon, and officials at Kansas City Southern Railroad and Southern Pacific Railroad were pinning their spokesman Jim Johnson said. "There hopes on those talks.

"We are going to wait and see what happens," said Al Mauro, vice president and secretary of Kansas City Southern. "Until we know how it goes, we won't make any statements about our plans."

Kansas City Southern has 2,100 workers, with about 1,720 under union contracts, Mauro said.

Southern Pacific Railroad, which has about 380 union employees in Kansas City, also had not made any firm decisions by Tuesday afternoon.

"We can't formulate a cufe if we don't know what the sickness is,"

are some contingencies to be used, but right now it's business as usual until things change.

Spokesman for Union Pacific and Burlington Northern railroads said their railroads would shut down if the strike is called.

"If there is a strike, we will have to shut down," said Roger Campbell, a spokesman for Burlington Northern in Fort Worth, Texas. "There's still a possibility of reaching an agreement. But we will close the doors if the undecided several days ago to close if the strike is called. He said the company doesn't have enough people in management who could run the Union Pacific has about 1,280 workers contract employees in the Kansas City area. Burlington Northern figures for Kansas City workers were not available.

Robert Martin, general chairman for the United Transportation Union in Kansas City, said the union also hopes for a settlement, but doubts it will happen.

"The railroads have not intended Union Pacific spokesman Mark to negotiate a mutual settlement Davis said Monday the railroad had since July 1988," Martin said.

Earth Day chance to inform, educate about environment

ERIN BURKE

Collegian Reporter

Earth Day is a time to inform and educate all people about environmental issues.

Earth Day in Manhattan is April 22 at City Park, but several activities are being planned this week to promote environmental awareness, said Paul Davidson, president of Southwind and junior in arts and sciences.

The Manhattan Earth Day is sponsored by several groups including Students United To Save A Vulnerable Environment, Southwind and Manhattan High School Environmental Club, said Jonathan Morris, president of SAVE and junior in math.

Walter Adams, assistant professor in anthropology and social work will be speaking about environmentalism in Guatemala at 7:30 tonight in K-State Union Room 208. This program is joint effort as part of Hispanic Awareness Month, Morris said.

SAVE is sponsoring an alternative transportation day event at noon Thursday in the Union Courtyard. A wacky bike contest and a shabby shoes contest are two of the three contests planned. The other is an alternative mode of transportation like wheel barrow and piggy-back races, Morris Representatives from Pathfinder in Aggieville will have a booth with bikes on display, Morris said. This will make people aware of other ways to get to campus besides cars.

Prizes such as coupons for food, books, haircuts and sweatshirts donated by Aggieville merchants are a few of the things being awarded for the contests.

Cesar Chavez, founder of United Farm Workers, will be speaking at 1:30 p.m. Friday in Forum

Chavez travels around the nation speaking about the injustices to hispanic migrant workers. He encourages the boycotting of grapes because chemicals sprayed on grape fields often affect children and the workers themselves causing illness or death.

Chavez also speaks of the unlivable conditions provided for the workers and families. This also ties in with Hispanic Awareness Month, Morris said.

The offical Earth Day festivities will kick-off at 1 p.m. Monday and run until 5:00 p.m in City

There will be 15 to 20 community organizations making presentations, Morris said. Some of the booths that will be on display deal with subjects like hazardous waste disposal and organic food production.

A kiddie corner will be set up to inform children about today's environmental issues, Morris said.

Several live bands will be playing throughout the day, Morris said. Everything from Truck Stop Love, a local band, to folk musicians will contribute to the entertainment.

Earth Day has been celebrated every year since the first Earth Day, April 22, 1970. Last year, the event received national publicity because of its 20th anniversary, Morris said.

Klingler begins his 3rd stint as mayor; new city commissioners take office

DAN SCOTT

Staff Reporter

Gene Klingler became Tuesday the second person to serve as the mayor of Manhattan three times.

Also at Tuesday night's Manhattan City Commission meeting, the city said goodbye to outgoing commissioners and welcomed those newly elected.

New commissioners Helen Cooper and Edith Stunkel were sworn in and seated in the commission. They will take the positions vacated by David Fiser and former mayor Richard Hayter, who ended a four-year stint with the commission.

Fiser had served the commission for the last four months in the unexpired term of Kent Glasscock, who won election in November to the his first term on the Kansas House of Representatives.

Commissioner Roger Maughmer was also sworn in. He earned a fourvote count in the election on April 2.

Klingler served as mayor from 1982 to 1983 and again from 1987 to 1988. In doing so, he is the first person to serve three times since Russell Reitz did it in the 1970s and early

In his first action as mayor, Klingler outlined areas he deems important to the community.

He said the quick completion of the airport is a project he will continue to push. He warned against asking Manhattan residents to pay for more of the project than they already

"It's imperative not to use extra money gained from real estate and property taxes," he said. "I propose we use the money from the hotel-bed tax to pay the city's portion."

Klingler welcomed a partnership between the city and K-State. He said he would like to see K-State find famous artists, singers, composers spend several weeks at the University.

"Let's do some dreaming," Klingler said. "I would like to see those people spend two to three weeks at K-State to become a part of the academic atmosphere.'

In economic development, he said Manhattan has not lost many businesses to other Kansas cities but has lost some to out-of-state cities. To correct this, Klingler said the city must try to develop businesses from within Manhattan and attempt to keep and expand the present ones.

It was suggested the city, K-State and the Chamber of Commerce enter into a project to build a hotel convention center in Manhattan. Klingler said the center would enable the community to grow.

In the new commission's first night, three applications for funding were approved.

An application for a 1991 Com-year term by receiving the largest and authors that would be willing to munity Development Block Grant was passed by a 5-0 vote.

> The application requests $47,500 in CDBG funds to make improvements along a 500-feet stretch of Pottawatomie Avenue, said Karen Davis, assistant director of community development.

> The Manhattan Emergency Shelter and the Manhattan Crisis Center requested emergency shelter grant funds, Davis said.

> MES has asked for $35,200 to renovate a bathroom, add air conditioning and put a new furnace in its

The Crisis Center is asking for over $19,000 to have asbestos removed from the basement of its building. The application also requests the money for adding insulation and painting the exterior of the building, Davis said.

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Poorer incomes and living conditions are more to blame for the higher cancer rates among blacks than genetic factors, according to a National Cancer Institute report on Tuesday.

In a study published in the NCI Journal, experts adjusted statistical data to compare cancer rates by race with education, income and population density. What they found, said statistician John Horm, is that race played less of a role in overall cancer risk than did the other factors.

races only, showed that blacks had a 6 to 10 percent greater overall cancer risk than whites, and up to a 22 percent greater risk for specific types of malignant disease, such as lung cancer.

The new study used data from three cities, San Francisco, Detroit and Atlanta, and correlated cancer incidence with data from the 1980 census. It measured for overall cancer risk and for seven specific types of cancer.

After adjusting the cancer incidence data for socio-economic status, the study found that the rates for whites went up, both for overall Earlier studies, comparing the cancer risk and for three of the spe-

Meanwhile, the rates went down for blacks, except for cervical, stomach and prostate cancers.

When correlating the findings for education levels, the study found that the highest overall cancer rates were among whites with less than a high school education living in an area of medium population density. There, the rate for whites was 402.9 per 100,000, compared to a black rate of 401.1.

Using income for the correlation, the study found that the highest overall cancer rates were among whites earning less than $15,000 a year and living in high density population areas, which Horm said would typically mean inner-city poverty sites.

Political strikes face ban from Moscow lawmakers

By the Associated Press

MOSCOW - Lawmakers on Tuesday gave preliminary approval to a ban on political strikes, despite objections from opponents that the move represents a retreat from democracy and from workers who call it unconstitutional.

While legislators met behind closed doors in the Kremlin, thousands of striking miners and transportation workers rallied in the Ukraine to demand the resignation of President Mikhail Gorbachev, who arrived Tuesday in Japan for a fourday visit.

Georgia's new president urged his republic's 5.3 million people to disobey the national government. And leaders of the six-week-old strike by "Every Soviet citizen has the right to freely express his views, and that includes the right to strike," Viktor Osovsky, a leader of the miners in the Donetsk region of the Ukraine, said in a telephone interview.

"Of course, they can send in the army, but violence is always answered with violence.'

Lawmakers approved a first reading of the anti-strike bill. The second and final reading of the bill is expected next week, when the 542-member legislature will take up Gorbachev's package of what they termed "anti-crisis measures" to rescue the economy, the official Tass news agency reported.

In an emotional appeal on April 9, Gorbachev warned the country was heading toward economic collapse and proposed a moratorium on all strikes, rallies and demonstrations.

He also suggested a package of economic measures, including selling off small state-run businesses. speeding up the establishment of stock and commodity exchanges, and making the ruble a freely convertible international currency.

Detectives ask Kennedy family about delay

By the Associated Press

PALM BEACH, Fla. - Police said Tuesday they want to know why detectives were unable to talk to the Kennedy family soon after an alleged sexual assault at their beachfront

Also Tuesday, NBC-TV identified the alleged victim by name and showed her photograph on the "NBC Nightly News.'

Detectives made "a number of visits," including one soon after they first received the rape report about 2 p.m. on March 30, police spokesman

Craig Gunkel said. Each time, they were told members of the Kennedy family weren't

"The detective bureau did go up to the Kennedy mansion a short time after we got the report of the alleged sexual battery," Gunkel said. "The police department is looking into why residents of the Kennedy home did not make themselves available to police detectives at that time."

Gunkel wouldn't confirm or deny any Kennedys were there.

"We did speak to someone at the address but I'm not going to elaborate," he said, noting it was not a member of the Kennedy family.

A 29-year-old woman claimed she was raped by William Kennedy Smith, the nephew of Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., on the grounds of the estate. Smith, 30, a Georgetown University medical student, denied he assaulted the woman. No one has been charged.

Members of the Kennedy family left that weekend without talking to police. Palm Beach detectives went to the Washington area the following week to interview family members and obtain blood and hair samples from Smith, who refused to be interviewed.

Attorney Mark Schnapp was not in his office Tuesday afternoon to discuss when his client might be made available

Jack Freese, a state attorney's spokesman, would not comment Tuesday on whether the difficulty in interviewing the Kennedys was considered an obstruction of justice.

Police were studying the results of forensic lab tests received Monday on specimens taken from the woman and from Smith. Police Chief Joseph Terlizzese

said Tuesday he has not seen the results and they won't be made public immediately.

The chief confirmed there were new witnesses in the case, but wouldn't say how they came to police attention. He said investigators were trying to avoid extensive comment on the case, but promised that all details eventually will be made public.

"Everybody in the world who wants to read about it can," Terliz-

NBC noted on the air that the alleged victim "is well known in Palm Beach County" and that disclosing her identity should help make viewers more well informed.

In a statement, NBC News President Michael Gartner said:

"Rarely is rape a national story, so rarely does NBC News have to confront this difficult issue. But we believe that in this case, as in all news events, the more we tell our viewers, the better informed they will be in making up their own minds about the issues involved.' It is the practice of daily newspapers in the United States not to identify sexual assault victims.

NC-17 movie rating established in wake of controversial films

ERIC MELIN

Collegian Reviewer

Due to the large number of nonpornographic movies rated X by the Motion Picture Association of America last year, a new rating was established for movies.

The NC-17 rating caused quite a controversy, and "The Cook, The Thief, His Wife & Her Lover" was one of the many films that started the fuss.

Rather than taking the dooming X rating, Mirimax films chose to release the movie unrated. Due to the "explicit" nature of "The Cook, The Thief, His Wife & Her Lover," no one under 18 will be admitted this week at the K-State Union. Don't let that cloud your judgment, though. This film is far from being pornographic.

British director Peter Greenaway brings to the screen a beautifully filmed, yet fairly twisted story centering around an elegant London restaurant.

Greenaway shocks you right from the beginning with the opening scene. The thief who owns the restaurant beats up, strips and deficates on one of his employees and then goes in for his daily verbal bashing of everyone else in the restaurant.

His wife, while taking endless amounts of abuse, strikes up a purely sexual relationship with a stranger who frequents the restaurant. The cook lets the couple go into the kitchen, hiding them from her husband who dines just outside. When he discovers the deception, the story takes an even deeper turn into black comedy, exploring the central themes of food, murder

The first 20 minutes or so are slightly confusing, as the thief dominates almost all the dialogue onscreen. His seemingly endless monologue is a one-man show filled with dark humor as he intimidates everyone in his presence.

Greenaway uses lots of slow, long shots to stress the hugeness of the restaurant. When the camera trucks sideways, the characters roll back and forth, each move precise. In these days of fast-cut MTV-style filming, it's refreshing to see people experimenting with other possibilities. Especially when it's as meticulously crafted as this movie is.

Much like last summer's overhyped "Dick Tracy," "The Cook, The Thief, His Wife & Her Lover" uses colors with high contrast. So much, in fact, that characters' outfits change colors when they enter another room.

Each room, along with having its own color, has its own theme. This adds to the overall sleek style of the movie and provides a sharp contrast to the thief's vile actions.

Ultimately, Greenaway has created a very satisfying movie. It's a good thing the NC-17 rating has now been established because films like this are a far cry from cheaply made, plotless porno flicks. The nudity is never done in a tasteless fashion, and it never gets gratuitous or graphic.

"The Cook, The Thief, His Wife & Her Lover" will be showing at 7 p.m. today, Thursday and Friday in Forum Hall and at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Little Theatre. Admission is $1.75 with a student ID.

Wefalds to have May reception

President unable to attend graduation, plans gathering on his south lawn

PAULA BERGLUND

Collegian Reporter

The president is having a party. This year, President Jon Wefald and his wife, Ruth Ann, will be the hosts of a commencement reception.

'We want to extend our hospitality to the graduates and their families, said Bob Kruh, vice provost. The reception is planned from noon to 1:30 p.m. May 18 on the south lawn of the president's house.

"Our idea, in giving the reception, is to give graduates the opportunity to visit with the president," Kruh

During the reception, the president and Provost James Coffman will be available to meet and take photographs with the graduates, family and friends.

Kruh said, "We feel a sense of community at K-State. We think it is important to keep the ties that are

The reception is the only opportunity for graduates to see the president the day of commencement. Due to the conflict with the graduation schedule and the reception schedule, the president will not be attending any graduation exercises May 18. May 17, the president and provost will attend the graduate school and veterinary medicine exercises.

Graduates were invited to the commencement reception in a fourpage mailing of commencement instructions they received last month. A section of the front page gives details of the reception.

"Commencement receptions may have been given in the past, but this is the first time for President Wefald to host a reception," Kruh said.

"We hope to be the host of similar commencement receptions in the future," said Chuck Reagan, executive

Innovative artists break new ground

REBECCA SACK

Collegian Reviewer

Howard Levy and Fran Bellucci Johnson are two artists who succeed by overcoming the obstacles to free expression. The works of these innovators are on display at the MFA Exhibit in the K-State Union Gallery.

Levy's work focuses on Native American themes, lavatories and landscapes inspired by bus trips.

The landscapes Levy describes in his work are the result of his consideration of space and detail. These two seemingly irreconcilable ideas are brought together in Levy's work. He explains the intricacies of the land without diminishing the vastness. This Levy accomplishes mainly through the emotive sense of the colors he chooses and by using bulky frames to alter the viewer's perception of a scene.

Levy also claims for his work that each painting is also an object and should be viewed as such. This notion is clearly understood in his work "A Religious Fresco With Stone Carvings." The actual fresco is accompanied by a drawing of it, showing us the design and origin of the creation, which can now be easily seen as more than a painting - an object as well.

Another of his landscapes that conveys this sense is "A Composite Landscape.'

This is a blend of blocks of different scenes. Plains, tree leaves, waterfalls and rocks combine with one very deep blue rectangle, a piece of cloth with a pattern of the same blues and greens in the nature scenes, and a photograph of trees in a yard. Once again the details expose the beauty without diminishing the space and Levy succeeds with this painting as an object.

Johnson's work of a different genre accomplishes her own goals with as much success as Levy. Her idea of expression is the sort that transforms perceptions, breaking old conceptions of the world into new

Johnson derives her inspiration from travel and expresses the world she understands using landscapes and designs and colors on porcelain sculptures. Johnson somehow transforms the abstract reality of perceptions and ideas into a concrete, threedimensional clay piece.

Johnson's work includes a series of black-and-white pottery with shapes of vessels and shapes on vessels. The works contain both the overt designs of the pieces, as well as the more intricate and emotive schemes that decorate and define the is full of light colors and more oddly shaped sculptures. The shapes of these pieces seem to indicate the pictures we see within them.

Johnson shows us bridges, roads, water, land and vegetation in sculptures which are not actually shaped like any of these. Herein lies the genius of her work. Johnson's art transcends the boundaries of the medium she chooses. Her pottery becomes sculpture and drawing without doing injustice to any of these forms.

KCC hears debate on power companies' merger proposal

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA — An expert in public utility finances testified Tuesday that the cost of the proposed merger between the Kansas Power and Light Co. and the Kansas Gas and Electric would not be paid by the John McClellan began testifying late Tuesday before the Kansas Corporation Commission as the hearing on the proposed merger entered its fifth day.

McClellan, a partner in the accounting firm of Deloitte and Touche of Minneapolis, said the KPL plan to take over the Wichita utility would allow it to recover the acquisition costs during a 27-year

Earlier Tuesday, Steve Kitchen, KPL chief financial officer, told the KCC that if the two utilities merge, the electric and gas rates would be stabilized. He said the merger would not mean rates would never be higher than they presently are, however. Kitchen also said the economic projections made by utility officials on the merger are not foolproof, but are subject to weather, regulatory and economic uncertainties.

"That's the nature of the business," Kitchen said. "However, our track record is very good."

He also said KPL financial advisers support the merger with the Wichita utility. The Chemical Bank, based in New York City, has offered to loan KPL $600 million for the merger, although it the would be parceled out to a syndicate of regional and interstate banks, he said.

Kitchen said officials are certain merging the two utilities would result in savings for both stockholders and customers.

"If we believe we'd not be able to generate savings, we would not be here today," Kitchen said.

Between the two of them, KPL and KG&E deliver electricity to some 550,000 customers in Kansas, and to several rural electric cooperatives.

Mandela faces charges

By the Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Winnie Mandela, testifying Tuesday in her trial for the first time, said she was hundreds of miles away when four youths were allegedly abducted and beaten at her home.

Mandela said she left her Soweto home for two nights in late December 1988, when the crimes allegedly occurred, to meet with people in the town of Brandfort about setting up a soup kitchen.

The wife of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela gave brief, flat answers to her lawyer during three hours of questioning.

'I was so outraged at such false and serious allegations," she said of the charges against her.

Mandela, Xoliswa Falati and John Morgan each face eight counts of kidnap and assault. Prosecutors charge the three abducted four young in December 1988 and beat them at Mandela's Soweto house. The state says the four were abducted because it was believed they were homosexuals or police spies.

Mandela and her co-defendants say they are innocent. Mandela and Falati have both said they wanted to protect the four young men from sexual abuse at the church home.

One of the four young men, Stompie Seipei, was later killed. Mandela's former bodyguard, Jerry Richardson, was convicted of the

In her testimony, Mandela said Falati came to her in December 1988 and said a boy at the Methodist Church home had been sexually abused by the white minister. The Methodist Church and the judge in the Richardson case since have cleared the minister of wrongdoing. Mandela said that in late Decem-youth to a doctor, who said he had not been raped but needed psychological attention. Mandela said she then left for Brandfort.

The government sent Mandela to Brandfort, a town in the Orange Free State, for nine years beginning in 1977 for her anti-apartheid activity. There, she started social welfare projects for poor blacks.

Mandela said she returned to Brandfort in 1988 after friends said the projects had collapsed. She said she held meetings to discuss ways to revive a soup kitchen, a medical center and other work.

On returning to Soweto, Mandela said Falati told her she had brought four youths to the Mandela home without permission while she was

"I didn't attach any significance to anything else she (Falati) said," Mandela added.

ow you can afford to dream in color.

If you thought that finding a color Macintosh* system you could afford was just a dream, then the new, affordable Macintosh LC is a dream come true.

The Macintosh LC is rich in color. Unlike many computers that can display only 16 colors at once, the Macintosh LC expands your palette to 256 colors. It also comes with a microphone and new sound-input technology that lets you personalize your work by adding voice or other sounds.

Like every Macintosh computer, the LC is easy to set up and easy to master. And it runs thousands of available applications that all work in the same, consistent way-so once you've learned one program, you're well on your way to learning them all. The Macintosh LC even lets you share information with someone who uses a different type of computer—thanks to the versatile Apple* SuperDrive, which can read from and write to Macintosh, MS-DOS, OS/2, and Apple II floppy disks.

Take a look at the Macintosh LC and see what it gives you. Then pinch yourself.

It's better than a dream-it's a Macintosh.

Pet owners asked to be aware

Humane Society tackles overpopulation because their surgery is more extensive.

VICKI KNIGHT Collegian Reporter

The American Humane Association estimates that 3.9 to 5.9 million dogs and 3.4 to 5.4 million cats are put to death annually.

Candy Layton, assistant professor in small animal surgery, said veterinarians are concerned with how the profession should respond to pet overpopulation.

Several strategies are being considered, one of which is education. On this note, April has been named national prevent-a-litter month.

Shelters range in philosophies, Layton said.

The goal of some shelters is to place all animals. However, in reality, placements cannot keep pace and shelters are overcrowded, which make them breeding grounds for diseases. If an animal has a medical problem because of overcrowding, shelters ask prospective owners to take on that burden, Layton said.

So many times animals have to be put to sleep, she said.

Veterinarians believe neutering of pets is the ultimate solution to the problem, Layton said.

low risk of surgery and anesthesia do Layton said. make neutering a non-perfect solution, but it is the best there is right now, Layton said.

Because of the mess and behavior problems, many people neuter their female dogs and cats, Layton said.

Glenda Young, a Manhattan resident, said she got her dog neutered because the mess was such a hassle.

Young also said she wanted to take her dog out for walks and was having trouble keeping male dogs away. There are many misconceptions about neutering, Layton said. Many people place human values on animals and assume it would be better psychologically and emotionally for an animal to have a litter, she said. There is no evidence to suggest that is true.

Other misconceptions include the beliefs that hunting dogs are less effective if neutered, and one should wait until the female goes through the first heat cycle before neutering,

You can reduce more than 200 times the instance of mammary disease if the neutering is done before the first heat cycle," she said.

If one waits until two to three years after the dog has gone through heat cycles, research shows the neutering has no effect on preventing the development of mammary tumors.

Layton said 50 percent of mammary tumors are malignant, and the tumors are thought to be related to a hormonal influence.

Cats aren't as clear cut in the correlations between tumors and neutering, but cats are faced with different problems because of the roving lifespans, Layton said.

"An average lifespan in most tomcats that haven't been neutered is four to six years," she said.

After neutering, most animals re-cover very quickly, Layton said. Males take from 10 to 14 days to recover, while females take a bit longer

Changes in estrogen in females and a quieter, less roaming lifestyle in males may contribute to weight gain, she said. Owners need to realize slowing down is a natural progression of animals as they age, and that weight gain most often comes from overfeeding.

Another area of education is irresponsible ownership, Layton said. As animals grow, owners don't know what to do with them.

Many times, dogs get taken to a shelter because of behavior problems, when actually the owner chose not to manage those problems, she Layton said there is a particular problem in Manhattan, especially in spring when the students leave. She said military personnel also contribute to the problem.

Japanese wooed by Soviet leader's visit

By the Associated Press

TOKYO - Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev devoted his first day in Japan Tuesday to chipping away at the mutual animosity that has kept Tokyo from sharing its immense wealth with its impoverished neighbor.

Briefly leaving behind eco-nomic and political woes to become the first Soviet leader to travel to Japan, Gorbachev set out to woo the Japanese as he has done with Americans and Europeans.

He spent the day meeting with Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu, cheerfully chatting with Emperor Akihito and shaking hands with Tokyo residents.

"It is time to do everything so that our peoples .. will never again drift into the disaster of enmity," Gorbachev said at a nationally televised court banquet Tuesday

"On the threshold of a new century and millennium, we must take from the past only that which brings us together and enriches both sides."

He was referring to the huge task of healing the wounds left from World War II, when the Soviets seized four islands off Japan's northern coast and tens of thousands of Japanese prisoners of war died in Siberian camps. In his banquet toast, Gorbachev offered condolences to the families of the Japanese prisoners.

Interfraternity Council installs executives

Group plans to improve scholarship, new alcohol policy, community image-building

SUZANNE BROWN Collegian Reporter

Responsibility was handed on to seven men Monday night as they were installed as the new executive officers of Interfraternity Council.

The officers are as follows: Dennis O'Keefe, president; Jeff Shields, internal vice-president; Doug Labbe, external vice-president; Ed Enyeart, director of rush activities; Andy Capps, editor; Todd Gentry, secretary; and Steve Ingram, scholarship

The men were elected April 1 by chapter presidents of the 25 fraternities on campus. In the two weeks prior to their installation, they became familiar with their new responsibilities.

One of the first things we plan to do is conduct a survey within the Manhattan community, especially those Manhattan residents who live near fraternities, as well as the students, faculty and administrators of K-State," said O'Keefe, junior in journalism and mass communications.

"We want to get their opinions on the fraternity system. Then, next year, we will come back and see what improvement has been made," O'Keefe said.

One of the major responsibilities of the council will be to educate chapters if the new alcohol policy is passed, O'Keefe said.

"This will be a year of progress, image-building and a strong year of communications. The education of the chapters will be a big responsibility if the new alcohol policy passes," O'Keefe said.

We will be brainstorming a lot in the beginning and working on community-based activities and utilizing resources of leadership," O'Keefe said. The position of scholarship director is new and was created to promote scholarship among fraternities. The greek system has recently come under fire, with date rape and alcoholism, and I don't know if the creation of this office can improve scholarship in the fraternities, but we're going to give it a try. It, in turn, could possibly improve the image of the greek system," said Ingram, junior in accounting.

"One of my main intentions is to create a roundtable of scholarship chairmen of the individual chapters at the beginning of next semester." Ingram said.

This will give them the opportunity to share ideas and even though each house has its own policies, maybe we can set up some standards among houses. I hope this can meet about once a month throughout my term," he said. "We want to create a better communication network among the scholarship chairmen."

Ingram also said he would like to also create better relationships within better publicize the awards given to individual chapters for scholarship and the achievements of the system.

"My job as IFC editor is basically public relations work. I will work mostly with producing publications," said Capps, sophomore in journalism and mass communications.

"I will help the director of rush activities to produce publications for prospective students. I will also work with Jenifer Scheibler, the Panhellenic public relations director, to produce the Greek Newsletter.'

Through the newsletter, Capps said he hopes to educate people not only within the greek system, but the campus and Manhattan community.

Capps said, "We represent a small number of people, but we're powerful enough and are involved enough that our image should and can be improved."

"It's all real new to me now, but right now, I'm going to be really concerned with the public's awareness of the greek system, because I feel we have a lot to offer a community such as Manhattan," Capps said.

The officer terms will continue until the spring of 1992.

Program shows new directions to single parents

VICKI KNIGHT

Collegian Reporter

According to a population survey in 1989, there are 16 million displaced homemakers and 6 million single parents in the United States.

As the numbers increase, so does the need for programs to assist them.

New Directions is a human service and adult education program for single parents and homemakers.

The program has been at K-State for 10 years. Shirley Marshall, program director, said New Directions originally tended to address the needs of the rural woman, but as the times have changed, the services provided are now focused on a variety of Marshall said she took over as program director in July to reorganize New Directions. The first thing she did was to find out what was available in the community, so she could determine the community's needs and other services with which she could network.

When a client first seeks help from New Directions, information is taken to identify individual needs. Marshall said everyone has different needs, so an individual approach helps the client find a hanced confidence in their own abilities and financial assistance, Marshall said.

Many times the program just matches up resources already in the community with clients. Most of the time, however, New Directions works with the client in many areas.

The program's approach has three functional components: Information and Referral, Guidance and Supportive Services and Training Workshops.

Sheryl DeMond, a volunteer for New Directions, is one of the people who present monthly personal development workshops. DeMond said she became interested in New Directions because it contributes to the community.

The Clovia 4-H House volunteers babysitting services for New Directions workshops and special events, Marshall said.

Marshall said many clients need to take a more aggressive approach when looking for a job in a competitive job market like Manhattan. To help them prepare, clients are helped with resumes and given mock interviews before diving into the job search.

Marshall said this type of work is part of her personality.

"I have always championed the underdog, it is a part of me," she said. "Professionally, that translates into working with the disadskills that lead to better jobs, en- vantaged and populations at risk."

Senior citizen suicides are something few people consider, but their numbers are increasing.

Causes of senior citizen suicides vary, but the majority are caused by depression, said Shirley Wickman, field specialist for Community Service for Aging.

The agency isn't designed to cope directly with depression or suicidal threats, Wickman said.

"We aren't mental health people we're here to listen," she said. Senior citizens often feel like they lose control of their life as they grow older, Wickman said. Economic problems, the loss of a spouse or dependence on other people can trigger the depression that may lead to

"Not all depression is suicidal, but suicide has to do with depression," she said.

As people grow older, they tend to reflect on the bad things in their life, such as difficult family relationships, Wickman said.

Marvin Kaiser, dean of arts and sciences and former head of the department of sociology, anthropology and social work, said elderly men are place, he said. Such an abrupt transition isn't always experienced by women. Men are used to being in control, and when independence is lost, depression often sets in.

Unmarried men are in a graver state-of-mind because of excessive loneliness and disparity, Wickman

Another problem is boredom and having little to do with friends, Wickman said. It makes the senior citizen feel like they have nothing for which

A lack of social skills for men and women both is a cause for loneliness. They don't make an effort to get out, Wickman said.

Many suicides are unreported, so an exact number can't be placed, Wickman said. Passive suicides when the person doesn't take prescribed medication, doesn't eat or drink - are suicides whether intentional or not. Those are rarely counted in suicide statistics.

If a senior citizen has suicidal signs, the agency may recommend them to an institution. In cases of actual threats, the agency calls the police, who then are able to commit the person to a hospital.

The agency aids senior citizens by helping them collect social security and other benefits that otherwise get tied up in red tape, Wickman said. They also provide other services such as a meal plan for the elderly.

Jewish activists settle in occupied Arab

By the Associated Press

REVAVA, Occupied West Bank Jewish activists planted a new settlement on occupied Arab land Tuesday in a show of defiance toward Washington that outraged Israeli moderates and leftists.

Coming 72 hours before Secretary of State James Baker III's latest Mideast visit, the move also provoked signs of unease among senior officials in the right-wing government.

Led by the Labor Party, all the leftof-center factions proposed motions of no confidence in Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's government, which promotes Jewish settlement of the West Bank. Parliament will debate them next week.

"It's like planting a bomb aboard (Baker's) plane in order to blow up his mission, and I would like to know who gave the order to plant this bomb," said Yossi Sarid, a left-wing lawmaker.

Baker, who is scheduled to arrive Thursday night on his third visit in six weeks, wants Israel to trade land for peace and considers settlements an obstacle.

In Washington, Baker declined to comment, saying he wanted to move the peace process forward and did not want to engage in a debate through the news media a few hours before his trip.

But White House spokesman Mar-

"Settlements are an obstacle to peace and their continuation does not contribute to the development of a peace process which we have all been working toward," he said.

The settlers moved 14 mobile homes during the night from northern Israel to a boulder-strewn hilltop 11 miles southwest of Nablus, the West Bank's largest city. By midday, five families of religious Jews had moved in.

Military officials said they got no advance notice of the settlers' arrival. They later banned a scheduled march by Jewish nationalists through the West Bank Thursday, saying the lin Fitzwater criticized the army could not spare troops to protect them.

> Health Minister Ehud Olmert, who is close to Shamir, implicitly criticized the latest settlement, saying: 'There is something about the way they have moved out there that raises questions."

The new settlement, called Revava, is one of more than 130 in the West Bank. They house some 85,000 Jews among 1 million Palestinians.

Settlement leaders said Revava's land was purchased legally from Arabs and would eventually house up to 1,000 families.

Harvey says nation needs purple pride

Commentary starts telephones ringing

LORI STAUFFER Staff Reporter

A Paul Harvey commentary Tuesday started the telephones ringing in Kansas when he named K-State the student scholar capital of America among public universities and commended the University's debate team for winning the national championship.

"I have friends in Texas and Chicago that called me to tell me they heard it," said Susan Stanfield, director of debate and head coach. "I was really surprised that it made national radio.

President Jon Wefald said he, too, was surprised by the attention the commentary gave K-State.

"In my five years here, I can't remember anything that has given K-State national recognition like this," he said. "We have received a ton of calls at various offices at K-State from graduates just bursting with pride.

Bruce Steinbrock, sports director at KSAL radio in Salina, said he fielded about 20 calls from K-State graduates wanting a copy of the tape or wanting the station to run the commentary again.

"Some of the general comments were that they were happy to hear a kind word about K-State," Steinbrock said.

In Harvey's commentary, he scolded America for celebrating athletes over scholars. He said it was disappointing that the University of come out and prove it.'

Kansas Jayhawks' loss at the NCAA basketball championship received more attention than the K-State debate team taking the national championship in Bellingham, Wash.

Wefald said he felt that view hit a

During the past five years, Harvey said, K-State has had five Rhodes Scholars, eight Trumans, two Mar-shalls, nine Fulbrights, three Mellons, three Goldwaters, five Phi Beta Kappas, 11 Rotary Internationals, one Javits and one Tilden-Snow.

"Harvard and Yale and Princeton cannot boast more per capita certificated superiority in national competition among public universities, six such scholarships just this year," Harvey said. "No other public university even comes close to matching that degree of academic recognition.

Wefald said he challenges other univeristies to prove Harvey's statement wrong.

"Eighty-five percent of our student body is from Kansas. We don't have the national body that Harvard and Stanford have," he said. "It is refreshing that a university in the heartland, a rural state, is winning the most prestigious scholarships, and we do it for about $6,500. If they think they've done better, let them

Committee says Senate's action toward UFM OK

CHRISSY VENDEL

Staff Reporter

Wednesday night, a committee decided the Student Senate Finance Committee committed no improprieties last year when they proposed not to fund UFM.

The committee was formed by Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt because of concerns surrounding the disclosures Heitschmidt made at last Thursday's Senate meeting.

Committee members were selected to form a body representative of K-State.

After interviewing members of last year's finance committee regarding allocations, specifically UFM allocations, it was decided recommendations would be made to Senate to improve communication.

Heather Riley, arts and sciences senator, said recommendations would help alleviate misunderstanding in the future.

Recommendations include the placement of an administrative or faculty representative on the finance committee, improved functional duties for Senate liaisons and reaffirmation that all committee meetings are open.

Bill Feyerharm, associate dean of arts and sciences, said everything should be open to the public. There were requests, however, that Wednesday's committee meeting be closed to the press.

Riley, the committee's mediator, said her concern was some people from last year's finance committee might feel inhibited when questioned if someone was writing every word down.

Pete Marsh, Senate chairman and member of last year's finance committee, said he was concerned about misrepresentation of the

"My objection still stands very high," he said. "I consider this an internal investigation that should be closed."

Marsh said he has been quoted in the past, and some things were taken out of context or words were left out.

Feyerharm said public scrutiny is part of being a public official.

Don't run public office if you're not going to talk publicly," Feyerharm said.

After discussing the recommendations; the committee also wanted to reaffirm that finance committees should be critical of organizations requesting funding.

War clouds U.N.'s p

DAVID FRESE Staff Reporter

The future of the United Nations is War is somewhat over. Although the security council vote President Bush called on the U.N. to approve his actions in the gulf, many U.N. supporters have begun to think the body has become a puppet of U.S.

Jim Olson, the Executive Director for the United Nations Association of the United States of America, stopped in Manhattan Tuesday and Wednesday during a 10-day tour through the Midwest. He took a morning coffee break in the Ramada Inn and spoke to the Collegian about the U.N.'s present and future role.

"Most of the people involved out here are peace and social justice activists, and they have supported the U.N. because they view it mostly as a peace organization," Olson said.

"They were disturbed that the United Nations was used for the war. They thought it was a puppet during the war — that the United States used the security council. Some have gone uncertain now that the Persian Gulf as far as to say the U.S. bought off the

Those same, grass-roots supporters are wondering if the gulf war has been good or bad to the United Nations, Olson said.

They're wondering if the image has been tarnished," he said.

On the other hand, Olson said, with the United Nations getting a lot of headline space of late, more people wondering just what it is the United Nations does. And with that interest comes more U.N. supporters. "This is an interesting time," he said. "The role of the United Nations is a very volatile issue right now. People's attitudes about the United Nations change from day to day."

Those attitudes include politicians and legislators, Olson said. In fact, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., recently authored a bill that would have sense of support, Olson said. In Braof funding for the United Nations.

"She did that out of a very sincere concern that the leadership in the United Nations was inadequate and the budget was being mishandled," he said. "But if you want to fix an organization, you don't pull out its funding. You stay and try to change it trom the inside.'

Funding of the United Nations is not a very sexy issue, Olson said. And it's up to people at the citizen level to let their legislators know they support the United Nations.

'Most members of Congress sit there and think there's no political damage in chipping away at the funding for the United Nations," Olson said. "But it's enormously important for members of Congress to know that there's constituency out here for the United Nations."

On other issues, such as the environment, there's more of a clear-cut eliminated the United States' share zil next year, the United Nations is sponsoring a world conference on the environment.

"I have been in this line of work for 12 years, and I have never seen this much public interest in any U.N. event as I have in this environmental conference," he said. "It's just tremendous."

Olson said he hopes interest in the conference will be as high at the governmental level. Presently, it is unknown whether our own president will attend the summit.

"We have a very ambitious agenda," Olson said. "There are two treaties — one on biodiversity, and one on global climate change. We're hoping that many heads of state will attend.'

The global community starts in Manhattan as well as Nairobi, he said. Through the UNA-USA, Manhattan residents can help effect positive social change.

Allies continue to help refugees near Turkey

ISIKVEREN, Turkey - U.S. special forces helicoptered into northern Iraq on Wednesday to begin scouting sites for Western-supervised camps. But hunger, disease and cold took an ever-mounting toll of lives at the sprawling camps along the Turkish

About 800,000 of Iraq's 4 million Kurds have fled to Turkey and its border, and nearly 1.5 million others have sought safety in Iran and along its frontier, according to the latest estimates.

The Iraqi News Agency quoted Iraq's foreign minister, Ahmed Hussein Khuddayer al-Sammaraei, as saying it was unnecessary for allied troops to protect the refugees because Iraq had agreed to cooperate with U.N. relief efforts for the Kurds.

But U.S. officials said they didn't expect Iraq to interfere with the foreign troops. If Baghdad wants U.N. permission to sell nearly $1 billion in oil to buy emergency food and other supplies, it will have to cooperate with the Kurdish relief, the officials said.

Even as helicopter-born troops crossed Iraq's northern frontier for the first time, U.S. forces completed their withdrawal from all of southern Iraq except a narrow zone bordering Kuwait. The remaining 18,000 troops will protect and feed refugees until effective alternatives are found, the U.S. military said.

At the sprawling Isikveren settlement on the mountainous Turkish border, thousands of refugees burst into applause as a column of about 30 U.S. special forces arrived carrying an American flag.

The soldiers grinned and slapped hands with the refugees.

Diversity may be factor in college's fund raising

Expansiveness, loss of dean delay arts and sciences' $16-million goal

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

Diversity is a goal of the University, and diversity may be a factor in the College of Arts and Sciences' fund-raising abilities.

The expansiveness of the college and the removal of former dean, Tom Isenhour, have likely been two holdups keeping the college to just 46 percent of its goal so far.

"Part of the problem is the loss of the dean. That's been a setback, definitely," said Betty Johnson, KSU Foundation development officer for arts and sciences. "The other part is the size of the college. You have 24 departments, and their needs and wants are all different. Their cultivation of alumni is all at different stages

Rusty Andrews, assistant director of the Essential Edge Campaign, said, "The dean plays the role of bringing all this diversity together, which is a tough role to fill. But at the same time, you have all this opportunity for individual departments to excel on their own.

That role is now in a holding pattern. Marvin Kaiser is interim dean while the college conducts a national search for a permanent dean. Alumni tend to be hesitant to contribute when colleges are in a state of

"You need identified and permanent leadership in place to be the most successful in fund raising," Andrews said. "The fact is that permanency helps generate a feeling of security and the attachment of alumni."

Judith Zivanovic, arts and sciences associate dean, continues to handle most of the college's fundraising activities. "We're just getting going, and we're getting better at what we do," Zivanovic said.

Additionally, the college has been hampered by a lack of constituent wealth. Kaiser said the positions filled by arts and sciences graduates often do not offer salaries permitting large contributions.

"Honestly, people do not make a lot of money," Kaiser said. "These are not high-paying professions. Our people love what they do, but it's not where the money is. That makes fund raising more difficult." Amidst all the difficulties, however, the college is working on some opportunities that may prove to be Within the college, the chemistry and theater departments are trying to name both the Chemistry-Biochemistry Building and Nichols Theatre, Johnson said.

When a donor funds about half of the building costs, the building is named after the donor. This is known as a lead gift and often draws attention to the project, and other donors begin contributing.

"When you get down close, people want to help you and put you over the final goal," Zivanovic said.

With such a large college and the largest alumni base, the swamped Foundation staff has its hands full trying to cultivate contributions. The college has been equally busy with trying to find a new dean before the campaign gets too much further

Until then, Kaiser said he is content with the dean search and playing a small role with the Essential Edge

"I wouldn't trade that role for the world. I'm very proud to be a part of this effort," Kaiser said. "The campaign is the first major step toward adequate funding. We hope it won't

Lawmakers support end to rail strike

WASHINGTON (AP) - Kansas lawmakers said Wednesday that Congress must approve legislation quickly to end a national rail strike because a long disruption of freight service will hurt agriculture and other industries in their state.

The American people can't afford to have Congress go on strike, too, in the face of a national emergency," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said in a speech on the chamber floor. "The rail industry has now shut down, and we will very soon see the shutdown of the American economy if we don't act now."

"Now is the time for decisions," said Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Kan., member of a House committee writing the strike-ending

Both Dole and Slattery said they expected lawmakers to fashion the strike legislation around recommendations of a presidential emergency board, which issued a report in January for resolving major issues in the dispute between labor and railroads.

Dole said agriculture would be hit hard by a lengthy rail strike. Slattery said it was important that Congress do nothing in the strike legislation to hurt efforts in Kansas to find short-line companies to take over rail lines proposed for abandonment.

The issue of rail abandonments is important in Kansas because the Santa Fe Railway is considering the abandonment of about 700 miles of track in Kansas.

Due to a reporter's error, the Collegian incorrectly reported Earth Day festivities in Manhattan will begin April 22. National Earth Day is April 22, but festivities in Manhattan will begin April 21.

In the same story, Students Acting to Save a Vulnerable Environment was incorrectly listed as Students United to Save a Vulnerable Environment. The Collegian regrets both mistakes.

ABOVE: Third-year architecture students, Carl Rogers and Dan Miller, work on their drawings in the Architecture Design Studio in Seaton Hall Wednesday afternoon. The students have made their small spot in studio much like a second home by posting news clippings and pictures. RIGHT: Architecture students have design studio for almost four hours, three times a week, but they spend more time in studio in the evenings and at night.

Sleepless nights

Class projects dominate 3rd-year architecture students' time

JENNIFER HOFFMAN Collegian Reporter

As a crushed piece of paper is hurled through the air, Ken Gregg, junior in architecture, cursed because he realized he had to start the long night ahead of him. "I'm staying tonight 'til I get something good," Gregg said. "Don't say that," said Carl Rogers, junior in architecture. "I've got to have something good to show tomorrow," Gregg said.

Gregg, Rogers and Dan Miller, junior in architecture, are three of the 90 architecture students in their third year of long days and short, sleepless

"It's rise and shine at 8 a.m. every day except Friday — then we have to get up at 7 a.m.," Miller said. "The three of us practically live with one another. I see Carl in the morning, eat breakfast and go to class with him. We pick up with Ken in class."

Even though the three have a few different classes, they see each other every day of the week.

"The only time we don't is when we are eating and sleeping," Rogers

And that time is short.

'It's really hard to figure how many hours we spend on a project because there are so many. It's easier to say how many hours we sleep," Miller said. "I'd say we average five hours a night."

"But sometimes, especially at the end of a project, we can stay up all night," Rogers said.

Those are the crunchers," Gregg

The three said they admitted they use one of their classes to take a re-

Lowe helped Miller during the desk critique, offering advice and suggestions that might make his design better. He also let Miller explain his ideas and the reasoning behind them. At the end of the critique Miller went off to work on the changes.

"Are you ready to take the 20th crack at my model?" Rogers said as the instructor rounded the corner to

The two ventured to the model table to get the full understanding of the model's concept. Rogers explained it to him and then listened intently as Lowe gave him advice.

Ken Gregg, junior in architecture, works on a design trying to get as much done as he could before the instructor came around to his table to critique it. Students in the studio have their projects critiqed twice a week.

Gregg pulled out his first model from a pile of trash trace paper. On the top "shot down in flames" was written in red ink.

The instructor mentioned positive and negative aspects of the design, emphasizing the positive and offering suggestions of ways Gregg could build on them.

Hispanic activist to speak at Union

ANNE TATUM Collegian Reporter

Cesar Chavez wants to ban

Chavez, president and founder of United Farm Workers, will speak at 1:30 p.m. Friday in Forum Hall on the dangers of fresh California table grapes and his work as an activist.

Cesar Chavez represents civil disobedience to promote non-violent social change and to fight for human rights," said Ian Bautista, HALO president and sophomore in Spanish and political science. "He is to the liberation of migrant farm workers what Ghandi was to the Indian revolution and what Martin Luther King Jr. was to the civil rights movement.'

Chavez will be the keynote speaker for Hispanic Awareness Month. His visit is sponsored by Hispanic-American Leadership Organization.

Bautista said Chavez is a hispanic hero. As a young man, Chavez was a migrant farm worker before he led UFW into a battle that won historic recognition of farm workers' rights. He's been waging a non-violent war against pesticides since 1965, just three years after UFW was founded

"I wanted to bring Cesar here to speak at K-State since I heard him speak at the annual hispanic conference in Chicago last October," said Elsa Diaz, junior in industrial engineering and physical science.

Diaz said Chavez will begin his talk by showing a 15-minute videotape called "The Wrath of Grapes."

The tape examines the effects of toxic pesticides in California's San Joaquin Valley. Diaz said the video shows examples of children affected by the toxic pesticides. Some of the children are born without a hand or leg and others develop cancer at an early age.

The farm workers were not the only ones being affected, Diaz said. Community members were seeing Chavez believes corporations and the growers have a responsibility to treat workers fairly and at the same time protect the consumer.

Myth peddlers stoop to garner followers

he past 13 months have been tough ones for the Roman Catholic Church in the United States. Amidst allegations of financial and sexual misconduct, Bruce Ritter, founder of Covenant House in New York, was forced to resign in March last year from his $75 million social service agency. An internal Covenant House probe confirmed that the Rev. Ritter had a 20-year pattern of sexual misconduct with 11 young male residents and 4 male volunteers.

Then, in April 1990, "The Washington Post" reported the Rev. George Stallings, a Roman Catholic priest in Washington, D.C., who broke from the church in 1989 to form an independent African-American church, had a two-year homosexual relationship with a man whom he put on the payroll of his former church. There was also some question whether Stallings used money from the collection plate to renovate his home.

Last July, Atlanta Archbishop Eugene Marino, the highest ranking black cleric in the country, resigned allegedly because of "health reasons." However, it was later disclosed that he had been in an intimate relationship with Vicki Long, a female diocesan pastoral worker. A second priest, the Rev. Michael Woods, admitted a sexual relationship with Long as well. The church is now paying child support for a child she said was fathered by yet another priest.

In that same month of July, Archbishop Alpnonsus Penney of St. John's, Newfoundland, resigned after a special inquiry commis-sion charged that he had failed to deal with systematic child abuse among his clergy. Twenty priests, former priests and Catholic lay workers were charged with or convicted of the molestation of altar boys, orphans and wards of the state.

These revelations come at a time when the Catholic Church has expressed highly unpopular views concerning birth control, abortion, marriage within the priesthood, ordination of women and religious dissent.

For example, last year the Vatican told Roman Catholic theologians (and questioning Catholics by extension) that it would not tolerate public dissent from official church

The Vatican asserted that the 850-million member church is by nature and divine inspiration a hierarchical institution that requires obedience to central authority personified by the pope. West German Cardinal Joseph Ratzinger, the church's custodian of orthodoxy said, "Standards of conduct, appropriate to civil society or the workings of a democracy, cannot be purely and simply applied to the church."

It is little wonder then that in a democracy such as ours, the Roman Catholic Church is finding fewer and fewer volunteers for the priesthood. In fact, the U.S. Catholic clergy is aging so rapidly that even a 25 percent increase in yearly ordinations would not be enough to halt the expected 40-year decline in the number of priests, according to a recent study prepared for the U.S. Catholic san Catholic priests fell 20 percent from 1966 to 1985. By 2005, the study predicts, the church will have 40 percent fewer priests than in 1966, with only 12 percent of the priests under age 35, while an estimated 46 percent will be at least 55.

The decline in priests typifies what has been a growing indifference, if not outright rebellion, in the United States within both the Catholic clergy and laity in the 25 years since Vatican II. A rebelliousness that is largely due to the church's inflexibility regarding fundamental problems in the human

Rather than face its inability to effectively address the problems of humanity in the 20th century, the Catholic Church within the last year has begun to revert to a tried-and-true method of keeping the flock within the fold. Enter Cardinal John O'Connor — and the

In March of last year, O'Connor, probably the most prominent Catholic clergyman in the United States today, disclosed to the news media that the rare rite of exorcism had been performed twice in New York in a year.

In an effort to raise parental concern (and church attendance), O'Connor said heavy-metal music spiked with satanic lyrics created an atmosphere conducive to devilworship and demonic possession. He also said the novel, "The Exorcist," was a gruesomely authentic portrayal of demonic possession.

In hopes of further dramatizing the supposed reality of satanic evil in the modern world to a gullible and undiscerning public, Roman Catholic Church officials gave ABC's "20/20" news program permission to film the rite of exorcism last October for a segment broadcast April 5 of this year.

I say "gullible and undiscerning" based upon a Gallup poll taken last June, in which 1,226 adults were asked if they believed in the devil. Fifty-five percent responded "yes." When asked if they believed that people are sometimes possessed by the devil, 49 percent responded "yes."

I watched the televised "exorcism," and it was the biggest piece of B-movie buffoonery to make prime time since they canceled "The Gong Show."

Here is a sampling: The 16-year-old girl (her name is Gina) stops her obviously faked wretching (ever since "The Exorcist" people who are possessed are supposed to spew vomitus in the presence of holy relics and appropriate church officials) and suddenly turns violent. In a low, guttural voice she belches toward the bug-eyed priest, Father James Le-Bar: "Get out of here."

Undaunted, LeBar intones, "In the name of Jesus Christ, I silence Minga (the demon's name — all demons have names of course — how quaint)." Lebar continues, "I command the spirit of evil to leave NOW!" But the menacing voice the girl now speaks in refuses to be silenced: "We don't want to leave ... We want Gina!"

The wacko-meter on the side of my television that I normally keep on hand for Sunday morning religious broadcasts was pegged.

It's not hard to understand why the Catholic Church believes this ploy will work. To contrast an all-good God, you must have an all-evil devil who is the source of one's problems and difficulties in life. And the church has just the thing to remove that evil - exorcism. It's just one more method to sucker people in through the front door (along with their pocketbooks).

gain, as in the resurrection story. what most people fail to realize is that even though the devil was born of the Old Testament, he has predecessors at least as old as the horned sorcerer depicted on cave walls in France 9,000 years ago. The biblical story of Satan as a fallen angel parallels tales from Greek, Egyptian, Hindu and other mythologies. His role as ruler of the underworld can be traced to 500 B.C., when the Gaelic god, Cernunnos, governed the dead.

Unfortunately, the only evil here is the depths to which peddlers of the Jesus myth will stoop to garner a following.

Student Senate needs to change

"Whenever any form of government becomes destructive to these ends (life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness), it is the right of the people to alter or abolish it, and to institute new government ..." The Declaration of Independence.

homas Jefferson wrote those words 215 years ago, but they are as true today as they were then. But the government in question now is our Student Senate.

In my three years at K-State, I have witnessed a series of almost unbelievable abrogations of the public trust by Senate, the body which is supposed to represent our

Two years ago, an athletic fee failed to be approved by the student body in a campuswide referendum by the requisite two-thirds majority. Shortly thereafter, Senate decided it would not only represent the opinion of the students, but it would also decide it. Senate then enacted the defeated fee anyway.

It has recently been revealed that last year's Senate Finance Committee buried funds that would have gone to UFM and dispersed the money to preferred organizations, including Associated Students of Kansas at K-State (ASK, Senate's lobbying organization) and Student Government Association.

Committee members, including some current senators, see nothing wrong in what the committee did. Many, including Student Attorney Dianne Urban, find the action improper. It was reported that this was commmon knowledge in Senate and viewed as usual business.

Senate's leading demagogue, Sean Cash, referred to the incident as a "policy decision," and that such corruption was merely a matter of interpretation.

This year, Senate really outdid itself by refusing the funding of Southwind, an organization that only tries to increase public awareness of environmental and educational Senate claimed Southwind was too political because its activities could be defined as lobbying. The same day, Senate authorized funding for ASK, whose official purpose is lobbying.

Senate cited legal precedents in arguing that the University would be in trouble if it

SURE COMPANY OF THE PROPERTY O

Scott McKinney Junior in Political Science Guest Columnist

funded political organizations. Urban had to set Senate straight at Thursday's Senate meeting and got the body to create a committee to determine which groups were political and which were not.

It is widely believed and has been confirmed by some senators that the decision not to fund Southwind had nothing to do with the fact that it is or is not political. Southwind has been critical of Senate, and it was being punished for its dissent.

These incidents illustrate several characteristics of our Student Senate. First, Senate has little regard for rules that are supposed to govern its behavior. When Senate wants something done, as in the athletic fee, it gets it done regardless of what the rules say.

Second, Senate has little regard for the will of the student body, even when that will is stated in referenda.

Third, Senate makes decisions based on the individual ideologies of the senators. There appears to be little emphasis on looking at the wants of students who have different needs and different views.

These observations take us to the central problem. That problem is the overrepresentation of greeks in senate. Greeks constitute a minority of the student body but constitute a majority in Student Senate. This is largely because the inherent characteristics of greek life build large social networks and, consequently, give greeks a great deal of name recognition. Because students in the residence halls and off campus are inherently at a disadvantage, they are underrepresented. Since the vast majority of non-traditional, minority and multi-cultural students live either in residence halls or off campus, these groups are underrepresented in Senate. The fact that this has been a long term trend leads one to assume that this underrepresentation will continue indefinitely if the system is not

The bottom line is that a predominantly greek Senate is making decisions based on their wants and needs and on the social and political ideology of that small group. If decisions are going to be based on ideology, then that ideology should be representative of the entire student body. The only way to ensure this is to make the legislature representative of the student body.

My proposal to accomplish this would be to make Student Senate represent both colleges and living groups. Under this system, each college would have the same amount of senators as it does now, but within each college the seats would be divided proportion ately by living group. If 30 percent of the College of Arts and Sciences' students were greek, then 30 percent of that college's seats would be held by greeks. Student Senate could institute this change on their own, but since this is unlikely to happen, the administration may have to call a constitutional convention to rewrite Senate's constitution and by-laws. This option may be preferable because a constitutional convention could address all problems within Senate.

In this system, each college and living group would receive proportional power. No one group could monopolize power in Senate, and because the system guarantees represenation to groups that have higher precentages of non-traditional, minority and multicultural students, there would undoubtedly be more diverse ideologies in Senate. This is exactly the medicine Senate needs to counteract the effects of provincial philosophies.

do not assume this proposal would solve all the problems with Student Senate, but it is an essential element of Senate reform. Even if Senate were to make mistakes in the future, as it undoubtedly would, those mistakes would be representative of the student body as a whole. Such a system would make a better legislative body and point out problems in the student body at the same time.

It is time for a change, and if Student Senate will not change itself, then it is the duty of the student body, University organizations and, ultimately, the administration to make that change.

Assistant coach takes new post

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

Sharon Allen, an assistant last winter at K-State under head coach Susan Yow, has been named St. Louis University's first full-time women's basketball coach, Billiken athletic director Debbie Yow said Wednesday.

Allen, 32, inherits a squad returning four starters and seven other players from 1990-91. Steve Cochrane resigned as coach after the 0-26 season. Allen will assume fulltime duties as the head coach July 1.

"I'm really excited to be going to St. Louis," Allen said. "It'll be a big challenge to turn things around next season. Professionally this is a great move for me, but personally I'll miss K-State quite a bit."

Allen admitted that she knew that Susan and Debbie Yow were sisters, but the relationship in no way got her the job.

"I was one of several candidates, and I sold them on my vision of where the program was going to go," Allen said. "Like I said, this is going to be a big challenge to turn a program like this around. I was lucky in that they believed in what I believed.'

One of the more ironic twists for Allen at St. Louis — besides the Yow connection - will take place Jan. 4, when the Billikens take on the Lady Cats in Bramlage Coliseum.

"That'll be kind of difficult," Allen said. "I'll know how this team (K-State) plays and what their strengths be able to do something with that. It'll be a fun game.'

Debbie Yow said she was happy Allen agreed to make the move.

'We are very pleased to have Coach Allen join us at St. Louis University," Debbie Yow said. "She brings with her significant NCAA Division I experience as an outstanding athlete and as a highlyrecommended assistant coach.'

Susan Yow expressed some pleasure and some pain in the announcement of Allen's hiring.
"I'm very excited for Sharon," Susan Yow said. "To go from an assistant coach at Kansas State to a headcoaching position says a lot about this program, but it says even more about Sharon's ability. On one hand I feel very sad to lose someone with her faith, trust and ability, but I realize that she is the perfect person for that job and that challenge."

Allen played four years at East Tennessee State University preceding her 1981 graduation. She received an advanced degree from the same school while serving as a graduate assistant.

Prior to her year at K-State, Allen spent three seasons as an assistant coach at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, where she helped Susan Yow compile a 42-41 mark from 1987-1990. Allen was then hired by K-State last spring, when Yow accepted the head-coaching position with the Lady Cats.

Former Lady Cat assistant coach Sharon Allen (right) has taken the head coaching job at St. Louis University. Allen will inherit 11 players, including four starters, from last year's squad that went 0-26. The 32-year-old Allen has been a Division I assistant coach for the last six seasons.

The K-State women's golf team has announced its first signee of the spring signing period, Robin Lewis of Huron, S.D.

The announcement was made by K-State assistant coach Mark Elliott Wednesday, bringing the total of signees to three. Early period signatures came from Jaque Wright of DeSoto, Mo., and Anita Gleason of Lamed.

"The signing of Robin Lewis is another big step for the Wildcat women's golf program," Elliott said. "Robin is a hard-working, dedicated athlete. She should blend in perfectly at Kansas State.

"All three girls all-around athletes that are goal-oriented. They all possess grades of above a 3.6 grade point average. They all originate from small schools, the equivalent of Kansas' 3A or 4A classes. What really impresses us is their goal-oriented natures."

Lewis, a 3.8 student, was third at the South Dakota state tournament last season and was low qualifier for the state tournament as a sophomore. She is a two-time comedalist in conference and regional play and has placed in the top 10 at the state tournament the last three years. "Robin won her conference and regional titles last year as a junior," Elliot said. "Robin should become a super player when she starts spending more time on her golf game. Her natural ability has impressed (head coach) Russ Bunker

The Wildcats have several scholarships still available, but plan on using only one of them for the upcoming season. Elliott said a decision on the final spot should be finalized within the next few days.

Chris Adams, the lone senior on this year's team, will leave behind four returning varsity players.

Straying from the higly-structured confines of Big Eight regular-season play, K-State's baseball team will lock homs with a pair of Missouri Valley opponents, as they play one game today against No. 13 Creighton in Omaha, Neb., followed by a threegame series during the weekend at Illinois State.

After back-to-back, four-game splits with conference opponents Iowa State and Missouri, the 'Cats take a break from league play. Those weekend series were sandwiched around a two-game sweep of Southwest Missouri State, also from the Missouri Valley.

Wildcat coach Mike Clark said he'd just as soon stay within the conference at this point, but that it really didn't make much difference who the

"I think it's important for us now to continue to play good baseball," Clark said. "Who we're playing isn't as important as how we're playing, and that's my main concern."

However, Clark said he was relieved to get away from the conference race to allow wounds to heal.

With the injuries and other problems we've got, maybe it's a good time to play a non-conference team so we can get some people back in the lineup and ready to go," he said.

Clark said that Van Torian would be out for the series while Brad Rippelmeyer and Jeff Ryan should see limited action.

K-State, 26-18 overall and 7-9 in the conference, enters the contest with a 4-1 mark against Missouri Valley opponents, including a 3-2 victory over nationally ranked Wichita State.

The Wildcat starting pitcher will be Dave Christensen, who sports a 4-4 record while allowing 29 hits in 32 innings of work. Offensive power has been provided by Chris Hmielewski, Craig Wilson and Brian Culp, although nine players have a batting average above .300.

The Bluejays offer stiff competition for today's ballgame, which has a 2 p.m. start time.

"Creighton probably has as good of offensive talent as anybody in the nation," Clark said. "They have a tremendous ballclub and a very talented pitching staff - just a very strong

"We're going to have to be prepared to play our best," Clark said. 'We're a lot more concerned about what we're going to do compared with what they're going to do."

Fritz's strong opening day could lead to personal best

From Staff and Wire Reports

After an eight-month layoff from competition, Steve Fritz returned to the track with a bang Wednesday, posting a score of 4,103 points on the first day of decathlon competition at the 66th annual Kansas Relays in Lawrence.

Competing as an independent after having completed his eligibilty for K-State, Fritz set personal records in both the long jump and the 400-meter to take the first-day lead over current K-Stater John Dedrick, who had a one-day total of 3,816 points.

Fritz's previous career best of 7,924 points, set in last year's Big Eight outdoor meet in Norman, Okla., is well within reach for the

Gypsum native. "With a solid day tomorrow (today), he'll be over 8,000 points," said K-State assistant coach Cliff Dedrick's top effort came in the 100-meter dash, which he won with a time of 10.91. He finished second to Fritz in the long jump.

Freshman Jason Meredith was in ninth place in the decathlon with 3,375 points after the first day.

In the women's heptathlon, Wildcat freshman Gwen Wentland and Lisa Fager were seventh and ninth, respectively, after one day of competition.

Both the decathlon and the heptathlon conclude today.

The football team took a break from spring workouts Wednesday following two days of practice in pads. The team returns to the field today and will practice Friday and Saturday as well.

Chris Patterson is practicing at the defensive end position this spring. The junior moves from linebacker, where he was second on the squad in tackles. Patterson recorded 84 stops last season, 37 of which were unassisted.

Patterson, listed at 6-3, 235 last fall, added 30 pounds since he arweight and the play of senior Joe Boone helped make the move possible.

"We're always looking for ways to improve the team with the individual talent we have on hand," Coach Bill Snyder said of position changes.

Patterson, whose combination of speed and strength could provide additional pass rush help for the team, forced three fumbles last season to lead the Wildcats.

Boone, a 6-1, 230 pound senior, fills Patterson's spot on the defensive depth chart. Boone recorded 27 tackles in time off the bench last season.

Redshirts during the fall season who are competing for spots in the lineup received Snyder's commendation prior to spring workouts. He said the effort they put forth during the fall and the off-season was indicative of the group's determination.

"I think the strength of that group of guys is that they are so competitive," Snyder said. "I assure you that they will compete very hard for spots, and that many of them will make an impact next season."

Redshirts from last season include: Scott Black, wide receiver; Barrett Brooks, offensive tackle; Bill Campbell, offensive guard; Omar Coote, wide receiver; Chuck Culver, safety; Blair Detelich, nose guard; Omar Dillard, cornerback; Keith Galindo, safety; and Kelly Greene, defensive lineman.

Other redshirts are: Jim Hmielewski, offensive tackle; Kirby Hocutt, linebacker; Gus Kincaid, quarterback; Wayne Krause, defensive end; Scott Marshall, nose guard; Derrick McBride, cornerback; Jason McIntyre, safety; Nate Neufeld, linebacker; Joey Normand, wide receiver; Jeff Placek, linebacker; Brian Rees, tight end; Eric Rice, safety; Oliver Salmans, fullback; David Squires, center; and Chris Sublette, safety.

Magic, Larry have this in the 1979 NCAA final against

Sports Reporter

I know I'm getting old if I can remember this stuff clearly.

I was sitting on an old matted sofa at a friend's house, watching the latest in sports updates - as if there weren't enough sports channels to catch all of them. As I watched the tube, I saw a highlight of Los Angeles Laker guard Earvin "Magic" Johnson. As he received the inbounds pass from a teammate, he heaved the ball behind him and down court to a streaking teammate, who scored on an easy breakaway dunk. While most of you out there are saying, "So what?", just remember this. Magic made a play similar to Larry Bird and the rest of his teammates from Indiana State.

As time was running out, and the game already salted away by the Spartans, Magic took the ball from the official for an inbounds pass and, while looking toward the crowd, heaved the ball back over his head toward a wide open Greg Kelser for an easy two on a monstrous dunk.

I saw this latest play by Magic and had the stark realization that he and Larry had been in the league for 10-plus years, but I had seen them grow into superstars and turn the league into a superstar show.

Before Bird and Magic arrived in the NBA, there were players like George "Iceman" Gervin, Lloyd "World" B. Free, Bob McAdoo and countless others who could light the cords for more than 20 per night, ev-

After the title game in 1979, Larry and Magic came into the NBA as wide-eyed rookies who had more than a better chance at making their respective teams. Both received their biggest breaks by being drafted by teams with winning traditions.

Bird, in going to the Celtics, made people of his hometown of French Lick, Ind., proud. Here was a hometown Hoosier-state boy who made good on his basketball skills by making it to the big time.

The players in the NBA just scoffed at his sloth-like speed and said he wouldn't last more than five seasons as a bit player. Well, three NBA titles and MVP awards later, Larry the Legend has more than silenced his critics. He's put a cast iron mask over their heads that will keep them quiet for eternity. What could be more frightening than Celtics down by two and Larry the Legend with the ball in the corner getting ready to loft a three-point attempt for the win?

Johnson came from the streets, where the name of the game was showtime. And his spotlight has shown brightly ever since entering the league He was expected to do a lot of the scoring when he first arrived in Tinseltown, but quickly made sure that everybody scored. Johnson always said he liked to give things to people, and passing was just part of his personality. That personality was also a winning one, which transformed the Lakers into a team to beat.

Remember his game — as a rookie no less - against the Philadelphia 76ers in the 1980 finals? He sent the ball through the hoop to the tune of 42 points and played every position. All this while Kareem Abdul-Jabbar sat at home with a sprained ankle.

The no-look passes, the driving layups, baby-skyhooks and the leadership with which he has carried his team to NBA immortality have been his trademarks and his passport to the NBA Hall of Fame in Springfield, been with us since 1979? Wow

Other than the Boston teams of the 1950s and 1960s, no team has so dominated a decade as did the Lakers during the 1980s.

These two demigods have done more than make their reservations for the Hall - they have lifted the game to new heights never before imagined.

But what these two have done is make the rest of the league realize that in order to win, you have to have complete team, with a leader.

Boston was the first to match L.A. in that department, and did it ever make for a rivalry. During the decade of the '80s, the Lakers and Celtics were winners of eight NBA titles, with Los Angeles winning five. Last year was the first year in which niether team was involved in the finals for the first time since 1980.

These two teams have lifted the league, too. They showed that teamwork is the way the game is to be played, and that one gun isn't going to win a title.

These two aging veterans of the hardwood - Johnson being 31 and Bird being 34 — may be on a collision course for a reunion in the finals.

It would be nice to see these two match-up again. It would be a rush of memories that would overwhelm my

Granted, this might be a distant possibility for both teams. Boston must get past the Chicago Bulls, and the Lakers need to get past a whole slew of teams that could easily win

If they should meet, I'd have to go with Larry and the Boys.

As of now, Johnson is one up on Bird in that he has an NCAA title. With Bird winning in this possible matchup, he could look Magic in the face 20 years down the road and say, "Just remember who won the last one, Earvin."

Annual spring dinner planned to celebrate 'Star Trek' birthday

ANNE TATUM

Collegian Reporter

Students in the residence halls will be eating "beam me up bones" and "Dr. McCoy's solar system loaves" for dinner tonight.

Those who live in the residence halls will get a taste of "Star Trek," as they help celebrate its 25th anniversary at their annual spring dinner tonight at Derby, Kramer and Van Zile dining

"The banquet gives students a chance to be excited about special events and about dining services," said Mary Molt, assistant director of housing and dining services.

"Many, many trekkies live in the halls," she said. "We try to do something fun for residents that's also timely."

Molt said she has been planning these thematic spring dinners for about 10 or 15 years. Last year, the theme was tied into Eisenhower's 100th birthday, and the "Wizard of Oz" dinner won first place in its division for residence hall special events in 1989.

Planning for this year's banquet began about six months ago. She said it was a collaborative effort among the dining services' staff and students.

Sharon McKinley, senior in art graphic design, painted some of the murals that will hang on the walls in the dining areas.

"The murals add more to the at-mosphere for dinner," McKinley said. "They're better than just bare walls.

She said the murals have all the 'Star Trek" characters, and one has a painting of the Starship Enterprise.

Besides a different, festive atmosphere, students will be awarded prizes for participation.

The floor with the highest percentage of residents participating will receive a free pizza party from dining services. In order to be counted for participation, the residents need to dress up, she

"Star Trek" sunglasses from the Fit Trek Nutrition Education event, or Spock ears or eyebrows are a few of the character costumes Molt suggested.

Participants can even make their own Tribble and carry it in. Tribbles are the guinea pig-like animals that multiplied rapidly on an episode of "Star Trek."

3rd-year students use stone in Chicago contest entries

JENNIFER HOFFMAN Collegian Reporter

Third-year architecture students are winding down the year with their last project, but it is going to be different from the rest. It will be entered in the Bayer Stone Competition.

"This is the fourth year doing this project," said Susanne Siepl-Coates, associate professor in achitecture. "In the past it's been done by the fourth-year students, but this is the first year it's been done with the third-year students.'

The project, called Chicago Shelter for the Homeless, is an eightweek project with two phases. Phase one focuses on the exterior design of the the building and phase two focuses on construction details and the final presentation.

"The purpose of the contest is to incorporate stone into the finished product," said Dan Miller, junior in architecture. "In order to think of an idea, I research my ideas in magazines and books until a design pops into my head."

The students took a trip to Chicago and studied the sight the building is

"We do a lot of research for each project. It has to be able to incorporate the surroundings," said Carl Rogers, junior in architecture. "I like history, so I try to find something historical in my designs."

Sometimes the students look to other architects to generate an idea. "I like Richard Meier, so I look through a book to try to get inspired by something he's done," Miller

This competition has a jury of six professional architects who were invited from the region. They are from Kansas City, Topeka, Wichita and Lawrence.

This will be the first time the students will be judged by professionals, Siepl-Coates said.

"It's exciting because this gives us an opportunity to hear what a professional says about our work," Miller said. "Sometimes we find ourselves designing for the instructor."

The final project is due 5 p.m., April 26. It counts as a grade and is also submitted to the contest.

"There are about 90 participants, so it will be competitive," Siepl-Coates said. "The contest will take place May 3 in the lobby of McCain Auditorium. The decision will be made at 4:30 p.m. The judges will go through the winners and explain why they were selected and what worked about them."

Prizes donated by Bayer Construction Company will be given away. Two hundred dollars will be given to the person with the excellence in design and three $100 prizes will be given to the distinguished design. The judges may also select honorable mention designs.

SAVE promotes alternative transportation forms

Cars pollute air; parking problems continue

ULRIKE DAUER

Collegian Reporter

"An average car releases five tons of carbon dioxide per year," read a poster on the wall behind Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment's table Wednesday in the K-State Union.

"We are trying to promote bicycling, walking and carpooling to campus to reduce the negative impacts automobiles have on the environment," explained Jonathan Morris, president of SAVE.

Morris' group has spent the week in the Union educating people about different ways to commute during the group's Alternative Transportation Week.

Morris said student response to the Alternative Transportation Week had been fairly good. More than 100 people showed up at the table in the Union in less than two days.

According to SAVE, automobile emissions are the No.1 cause of air pollution. Americans consume more the number of cars on campus.

than nine million barrels of oil a day for automobile use. And if American commuters used alternative transportation to get to work just once a week, the United States could eliminate its entire dependency on oil from the Middle East.

Still, at K-State the situation isn't

The parking situation is bad around here," Morris said. "There are not enough spaces available, and a majority of students and faculty drive to campus even though they don't need to."

He said another frustrating factor is many students and faculty complain about driving around for 10 minutes to find a spot — exactly the time they would need if they walked.

Morris said the pollutions that are emitted and the consumption of fossil fuels is one of SAVE's central arguments to look for alternatives.

He said SAVE has several concrete suggestions to improve the situation. These mainly aim at reducing Restrictions on the parking permits would be something to consider, Morris said. Parking permits should be more expensive and more difficult to get for people who live close to campus, he said. The University also could give discounts for the students who live further away. Morris said campus police do not compare the addresses of people who purchase parking licenses.

Morris said SAVE also encourages students and faculty to take advantage of the carpool permit which campus police recently introduced. Several vehicles can circulate the parking permit around and share the Carpooling is not yet widely used perhaps due to a lack of publicity. But it also requires cooperation, he

Morris suggested the University should make the parking lot at Bramlage Coliseum more accessible, where there seems to always be a lot of space available. A shuttle system between Bramlage and other University buildings would improve the

SAVE, together with other initiatives, also wants to improve the situation for cyclists on campus, Morris

He said members of the recently founded Bicyclists Influencing a Kinder Environment provided information on cycling in the Union.

Morris, who is environmental director of the student body president's cabinet, said the group has talked about establishing a committee for constructing bike paths.

Morris said with the Alternative Transportation Week, SAVE is focusing on campus. But, eventually, the group would like to be able to include the community. He said along with this initiative, a mass transit system should be cstablished. At the present, Manhattan has two private bus systems, which connect only Park Place and Brittnay Ridge apartments with campus.

Both shuttles have been free up to now, but Park Place apartments will charge $75 per school year beginning Expenses to operate the bus are increasing, explained Shelley Reves, manager of Park Place apartments.

Morris said the bus, which circulates every hour, is well used, and he would like to see a similar bus system throughout the city of Manhattan.

Many students would use a bus if it existed, said Kristee Harkless, sophomore in horticultural therapy and member of SAVE.

She said a questionnaire SAVE distributed reported that 62 people answered they would need a bus. Twenty-six people said they don't need a bus system because they bike

'A bus would also boost the companies in Westloop," Harkless said.
"Walking to Westloop doesn't come to my mind."

Jeff Kysar, graduate student in mechanical engineering, said Iowa State University and the community of Ames, Iowa, cooperate.

Guatemala shows Legendary character puts Manhattan on map land devastation entire area faces

DAVE MCCULLAGH and JEFF STURDY

Collegian Reporters

Walter Adams, ecological anthropologist and professor of anthropology, spoke about Latin American land devastation in the K-tate Union Wednesday night.

Adams used Guatemala as an example of the wide range of ecological problems facing the area.

"I chose Guatemala because I am a native of the country, and I know it well," Adams said. "To go through all 23 countries in Latin America would take too long, and Gutemala's problems are reflective of the entire situation."

Guatemala's problems include overpopulation, deforestation, erosion, pollution and a 30-year-old civil war, Adams said.

Adams blamed the deforestation on legal and illegal logging operations in the northern region of Guatemala and the use of napalm in

"Nothing was growing where the napalm hit - there was nothing there and there won't be till the next century," Adams said. "At this rate, the forest of Guatemala will be gone in 25 to 40 years.'

The use of pesticides has caused serious erosion, contaminated water and has infected fish and cattle.

"A shipment of cattle to New Orleans had DDT levels five times higher than the U.S. permits," Adams said.

The pesticides used in Guatemala were banned in the United States 10 years before and sold to Latin American countries by U.S. corporations with the consent of the U.S. government, Adams said.

Adams said the Green Revolution of the 1960s had short-lived benefits of higher yields while the downside was contamination, erosion and unemployment.

"The high use of pesticides and increased mechanization brought about by the Green Revolution to reduce labor costs contributed to a very high unemployment rate and increased pollution," Adams said.

The country's civil war stems from unfair land distribution in the 1950s, Adams said.

"In 1954, a U.S. sponsored coup overthrew the democratic government and put in place one of their own, which divided the land unfairly," Adams said. "Two percent of the population owns most of the

The government must solve its own problems before it can tackle the environmental issues, Adams said.

"I believe the only way to stop the environmental problem is with a grass-roots campaign," Adams said. Guatemala can't allow their neighbors to slap them in the face.'

Guatemala needs U.S. aid, but it needs to be free to use it how it wants, Adams said.

"Unless the Americans understand the history, we will never know the solutions," Adams said.

MEREDITH JONES ber of the committee and the Kbeen cleared by Paul Bunyan. He de-Collegian Reporter

Who in Manhattan follows in the tradition of American folk heroes, such as Paul Bunyan, Pecos Bill and Johnny Appleseed? Who else but Johnny Kaw?

Kaw is a legendary character who was created in 1954 by a committee to help publicize the Manhattan

According to newspaper accounts written at the time, Manhattan was trying to come up with something to put it on the map — something for which the city would be known.

The late George Filinger, a mem-

State's International Agriculture Program, came up with the character to represent not only Manhattan, but Kansas.

Johnny Kaw was a success and started getting front-page space in newspapers.

The legend of the Kansas hero begins by explaining how Johnny and his family came to Kansas.

Johnny's father, who was identified in the papers as both U.S. Kawmandokansan and U.S. Kawmandokansas, brought his family to Kansas from the Great Lakes area.

U.S. was a tough little man who had heard of an area out west that had cided to move his wife and three children, John B., Carrie N., and Jim F. to that land.

As the story goes, the fresh air made the boys grow big and strong. The Kaw River is said to have been created by Johnny when he dragged his heel behind the family wagon on the journey to Kansas. He is also credited with creating Waconda Springs by jabbing the handle of his hoe into the ground because he was thirsty, and there was no water.

Filinger's legendary character was illustrated by the late Elmer Tomasch, who was an assistant professor of art at K-State.

Tomasch illustrated the character with pen and ink drawings. A small, hand-carved statue was put in the park during the centennial, but it was struck by vandals.

Tomasch made a clay statue, which was the model for the current Johnny Kaw statue located at the southwest comer of City Park.

The 30-foot-tall statue in the park was built by William Stewart, who was then a graduate art student at K-

He built the statue, which was dedicated 25 years ago, 12 years after the character's creation.

TOPEKA - A Lawrence advocacy group sued the state Department of Health and Environment on Wednesday over its handling of alleged violations of nursing home regulations at a Pittsburg home.

Kansans for Improvement of Nursing Homes is seeking an order in Shawnee County District Court to force Acting Secretary Stanley Grant to suspend or revoke licenses held by the three companies operating Medicalodge North of Pittsburg. It is run by Medicalodges of Kansas Inc., Medicalodges Inc. and Health Care Lodges Inc.

The department cited the home for alleged violations of nursing home regulations in July 1990, which included accusations of physical and mental abuse of residents and inattentive care. The department said Wednesday that the deficiencies have since been corrected.

The agency forwarded information about two home administrators to the Board of Adult Care Home Administrators and information about alleged abuse by nurses to the state Board of Nursing. The administrators' board has scheduled a hearing for Monday.

However, the advocates expressed shock that the department has not attempted to revoke the licenses of the home's operators. Representatives had a news conference at the Statehouse.

The lawsuit notes that allegations include ones that residents were left outside in the hot sun or in the rain, and that a diabetic resident developed an ulcer that required amputation of a leg. They also included one that a resident was found hanging from a physical restraint at least twice and died after the second time.

ABC gives fresh, powerful music

Hip-hop group explores new genres

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reviewer

Another Bad Creation is just what they claim. ABC explores one genre of music and succeeds. The group whose average age is 11 - presents fresh new and powerful music. ABC combines the youthfulness of New Edition with the hip-hop of Bel Biv DeVoe. Michael Bivins actually discovered ABC, and his influence is seen throughout ABC's debut album, "Coolin' At The Playground Ya' Know!"

Reviewer says ...

The sort of music ABC creates never breaks out of the R&B, pop, hip-hop mode, but they explore this genre well. Chris, brothers Marc and Red, Lil' Dave, Ro-Ro and General "G.A." Austin comprise ABC and give the group the look that first attracted Bivins to them.

Actually, without the great arrangement, sampling, background vocals and producer Dr. Freeze, who also produced Bell Biv DeVoe's hit, "Poison," ABC would be no more than a group of kids playing around with music. Still, this album is strong, full of mixes that guarantee pop hits with positive energy and the essential drive of dance music.

Some of the themes ABC explores on the album include social issues, in the song "Playground," and environmental issues in "My World." Both of these songs have strong mixes behind the innocent sound of these young voices. They may be young, but their music is serious R&B. They exhibit talent and intelligence in the complexity of the music while never losing the simplicity of its dance ap-

ABC actually does a re-make of the New Edition song, "Jealous Girl." This is one of the few songs on the album that exhibits the pure vocal talent of the group. The slow tempo allows the singers to really indulge their voices in a show of music, which is a drastic difference from their rapping and one-line wails of the hip-hop on the rest of the album.

The first hit off the album, "Iesha," is one that doesn't get old. Hearing the full mix of the song on the album is itself a tribute to the group. Top 40 radio really chopped it. There is just some mysterious appeal in the young boys' voices singing about such mature subjects. The appeal is for adults and kids, just as the music itself is a universal sort of communication.

ABC's image, its youthfulness, may help the members find their way to stardom, but the music must not be discounted either.

MARGARET CLARKIN/Staff

Jo Ann McDowell, Kansas Board of Regents member and president of Independence Community College, finds her 1984 master's dissertation with the help of John Johnson, chairman of reference and information, at Farrell Library Thursday.

Farrell tour interests 2 members of regents

JIM STRUBER

Staff Reporter

After touring Farrell Library Thursday, two members of the Kansas Board of Regents said they recognized the immediate need for funding to the University.

Jo Ann McDowell, president of Independence Community College, and Shirley Palmer, Fort Scott elementary school teacher, were escorted by several student government leaders. They toured various sections of the first and second floors of the library for 30 minutes.

"I think it is vastly important this (funding) become a priority with the regents; we started the process," she said. "It is obvious this is a problem, and this is a fine university. The library is the center point of an academic society - it has to be. We need to respond, and I am sure we will."

While viewing room 216, McDowell, a K-State graduate, walked into the stacks and pulled out her 1984 dissertation "Program Administration."

"I appreciate seeing my old dissertation,"

The group walked across the hallway to the 3A stacks. Dean of the Library Brice Hobrock pointed out the plywood floors of the stack level.

"It gets worse as you go up," he said.

"There are really some hazardous situations up there.

After the tour, McDowell said she felt it was obvious K-State has outgrown its library facilities.

Palmer said she was disappointed in the overcrowded conditions and the problems with temperature control. She said she felt students would have problems researching or writing papers in the building.

"I understand the air conditioning had to be turned on in early January, and that isn't very efficient," Palmer said. "I think we are your greatest fans. We see a need, and we are very supportive of the library. We will do all we can to get funding for you."

Todd Heitschmidt, student body president, said the tour was a student initiative by Fred Wingert, sophomore in business, and Jackie McClaskey, senior in agricultural economics and international studies, to invite board members to the library.

Before the tour, Hobrock said he would accent the library's positive aspects that have benefited from Margin of Excellence funding and past planning.

Two students have acquired about 500 signatures since the end of February, when they began a campaign to remove Penthouse and Playboy from the shelves of the K-State Union Bookstore.

Daniel Base, senior in psychology, and Clinton Wolf, junior in agricultural journalism, are circulating a petition on campus.

Base and Wolf said they feel the magazines are degrading to women, and they are seeing if other students feel the same

Wolf said he is surprised those magazines are available in an institute of higher learning.

Base said if someone wants Penthouse or Playboy there are other stores in Manhattan that sell the magazines. He also said he doesn't feel the Union Bookstore is the appropriate place for them.

Base and Wolf said they don't want this to be misunderstood as being an issue of censorship.

"We are only asking that two magazines, which primary purpose is degrading women, not be available at K-State," Base said.

Base and Wolf have talked to about 11 different committees and administrators. Most of those aren't willing to help, they said.

Wolf said he found it interesting that even though admi-■ See PETITION, Page 10

After postponing the Student Governing Association for three weeks, Student Senate finally approved its $54,517.20 budget request. In addition to the SGA budget re-recommendation for UFM. Originally, the 1990 Finance Committee did not want to fund UFM. The committee re-allocated about $13,000 to other groups so the Senate body would not easily find the funds that could go to UFM.

Reading a prepared statement from Heather Riley, arts and sciences senator, Heitschmidt said the review indicated there was no evidence of impropriety or covert activity in its allocations recommendations.

The committee consisted of former and current senators, administrators and other campus representatives.

Heitschmidt also read a statement concerning Senate's effort to improve communication and to prevent further misunderstandings.

The Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment group went before Senate for its allocation hearing requesting $722.75.

SAVE originally requested $1,230.19, but after review by the Finance Committee, more than $500 of the request was cut.

Before the bill was raised, it was requested by Jackie McClaskey, agriculture senator, that Senate not review SAVE immediately because of its political involvement. "I do not feel SAVE is too political to fund, but if there is a doubt among our constituents, I feel they need to be reviewed," McClaskey said.

After questions and debate, Senate found SAVE to be associated with political procedure and felt it should

Maintenance program to affect 7 city streets

Resurfacing began on 14th Street Thursday morning. It is the first of seven streets to be serviced through the 1991 Street Maintenance Program.

Resurfacing also began on Fremont Street. Leavenworth, Fremont, 14th and 4th streets and Poyntz Avenue are scheduled to be resurfaced from today through April 28, while Bluemont and Anderson avenues are scheduled from May 20 to June 10. Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works, said the city will spend $400,000 this year on the maintenance program. "It is the first time in a few years that we've had what I call a fullblown street maintenance program," Williams said.

The Shilling Construction Co. Inc. was awarded the contract to roto-mill existing asphalt and resurface the

"They will mill off the existing surface an inch deep, then lay the new asphalt. Then a subcontractor will put new pavement markings," Williams said.

Williams said he does not anticipate many traffic problems. "We are going to maintain traffic as best we can," he said. "There may be some detours and, at times, traffic will be congested.

"In 1987, the city implemented a program to identify the streets and their conditions as far as pavement distress and serviceability. Then each street was given a priority ranking needing maintenance," Williams

The group identified the type of stress in the sample unit, gave it a low, medium or high rating, and entered this information into the computer, Williams said.

The computer then read out a pavement condition index from 0-100, he said. If the PCI is 100, then the street is in perfect condition.

Emigrants last year reached 452,000

MOSCOW (AP) - The Soviet Interior Ministry has released figures showing that 452,000 people emigrated from the Soviet Union last year, the Tass news agency said Thursday.

About one-fourth of the emigrants, 103,600, came from the populous Russian Federation, while the smallest number was from the tiny republic of Estonia, where 892 people left to live elsewhere, Tass said.

According to the ministry figures, about 60 percent went to Israel, where Jews automatically gain citizenship.

Almost a third of the emigrants went to Germany, while only 2.9 percent went to the United States, Tass said.

Emigration has increased in the last several years as the Soviet government gradually eased restrictions for those citizens seeking to leave the country for good.

Hayden would succeed Constance Bastine Harriman, 42, who will be nominated to the board of directors of the Export-Import TOPEKA (AP) - As many as 30 of the state's 66 Army National Guard armories may close by 1995 because of the federal government's efforts to reduce the size of the guard.

The state adjutant general's office said Thursday that guard officials in Washington have asked state guards to develop plans to decrease the number of members by 136,000 across the nation by 1995. Kansas could see the number of guardsmen decrease by 2,900 from the more than 7,900 currently allowed.

Such a plan would force the Kansas guard to close armories to which units of less than 50 members are assigned. They could include armories in Abilene, Atchison, Great Bend, Newton and Armories that would be closed include those to which 50 or fewer members are now assigned or those Kansas officials do not think will have at least 50 members assigned by 1995.

Typically, when an armory closes, the building is turned back to the local government, Moser said.

Carl Weisbender, a veteran of the Vietnam War and owner of Kansas Wynde Silkscreens, said he sold the coordinators more than 200 T-shirts at near cost for the tournament. "I hope that they have a lot of fun

Coyne said the games will be played by intramural rules, which means the players on offense call the fouls and there are no free throws. Dunks are also not allowed.

The outdoor portable basketball goals were loaned to the event coordinators by a company in Dorrance.

The memorial, completed in 1989, is carved with the names of the 42 K-State students who were killed or listed as missing in action in the Vietnam War. It was funded entirely by private donations.

Marketing chapter named area winner

Pi Sigma Epsilon receives regional award

SUZANNE BROWN

Collegian Reporter

They came home winners. K-State's chapter of Pi Sigma Epsilon, a marketing fraternity, brought home the top regional chapter award from the national convention last week in Anaheim, Calif.

"Basically, we have to get nominated for any awards given at convention," said Midge Ayres, senior in marketing and vice-president of personnel in the fraternity. "We submitted a paper as to why we thought we were the top chapter in our region."

The three chapter members who participated in the interview were Todd Muscari, president of the fraternity; Kirk Winter, vicepresident of promotions; and Avres.

"You take in three people that know more about your chapter than anyone else," Ayres said. "It's a really nerve-wracking experience. You just answer the questions as fast and as best that you can."

Ayres said the questions centered around everything the fraternity had done in the last year. She said questions were asked about recruitment into the fraternity, and the K-State chapter had improved its membership by 51 percent.

Other questions, Ayres said, were about the performance of the chapter when they held the regional convention at K-State last semester.

"They look at how the chapter performed and how we promoted it," Ayres said.

The region K-State is part of includes the chapters at Wichita State University, Southern Illinois University at Carbondale and University of Missouri at St. Louis.

The K-State chapter competed for the top regional award against the Southern Illinois University at Carbondale chapter.

"Some of the other things that went on at the national convention were seminars about recruitment. how to work on projects to raise money for our chapter or for our philanthropy and about making decisions about what projects to do and how to get people involved," said Alan Mecca, junior in economics who attended the convention.

"They also had seminars that told about how to get a job and how to act in an interview," Mecca said. "By attending the convention, we gained a sense of professionalism knowing that we belong to a club that stresses professionalism."

Laura Branson, junior in business and points chairwoman for the fraternity, said she found the career fair offered at the convention to be beneficial.

"We were able to speak with representatives from companies like Johnson & Johnson, Revlon and Sony Corporation," Branson said. "I think attending the convention gave me a lot of excitement, getting to meet people from all over the country. When you think of your own club, you think in a very narrow scope, when it really exists on a much larger scale.'

Mike Ahern, instructor of marketing and faculty adviser for Pi Sigma Epsilon, said the chapter had received the most improved award several years ago.

"By attending the national convention, the students gain a chance to get ideas for the projects they do," Ahern said. "They learn what has been successful for other chapters, what the problems were and how other chapters overcame those problems. It also allows them to meet national recruiters.'

Ahern said the chapter was formed about seven years ago and membership is open to all University students, regardless of their major.

"There is no GPA requirement, just that they are enrolled in school, Ahern said.

"We try to get the most real-world experience we can through Pi Sigma Epsilon, plus get to know the people and have fun," Mecca said.

Ayres said she felt one of the most beneficial aspects gained through attending the convention was that younger members attended, which will enable the chapter to improve in the years to come.

"The whole purpose is to get out and meet people from other chapters and learn from them," Ayres said. "It's a way of learning more about what we need to do

"Receiving the award was the greatest feeling I've ever felt," Ayres said. "To walk up in front of 1000 people and accept an award that we had worked so hard for - I hope it will bring a lot of motivation within the chapter."

New shoes may end legislative problems

hat are we going to do with poli-tics in this country? On the national level, we've got a president who adores spouting self-righteous international defense policy. On the state level we've got a legislature set on undermining education, and on the university level we've got a Student Senate filled with potentially pernicious money magicians who use their positions to cash in on personal vendettas, a.k.a. Darin Batchman and company (or ask current Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt who just happened to receive a raise of $900 as ASK director last year).

Can anything be done? As I was thinking about this very question while intently listening to Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., deliver his Landon Lecture last Monday in McCain Auditorium, I couldn't help but notice that all of the members of the convocation board sitting on the stage were wearing black shoes. Charles Reagan, assistant to the president, President Wefald himself, Todd Heitschmidt, Wane Nafziger, director of Faculty Senate, and, yes, even Bradley himself all had black shoes of one style or another. What could this mean?

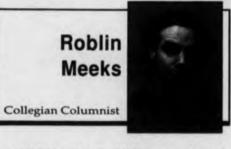

Well, it could be nothing more than a group of basically conservative politicians (and I consider them all as politicians in one capacity or another) who for some reason can't accessorize. But, I think the dogma runs far deeper than mere apparel.

This political ethic must start sometime at birth, or maybe it starts at conception. Either way, at J C Penney somewhere among the Garanimals, there must be a little section set aside for budding statespersons. Mix and match elephants or donkeys according to tags (and the appropriate partisanship of course) for an assertive and successful wardrobe.

But what about socks? Another thing I noticed about the stage panel was that they all had drooping stockings. What ever happened to those sock supporters? Have they gone out of vogue since the Kennedy's were in office, or was it Nixon? It's probably because politicians think garters are a little too stuffy now that it's cool to be liberal, so fallen socks must

Education must have something to do with it. Early in adolescence, as soon as aspiring politicians become well versed in speech, someone somewhere must offer outreach programs on inspirational rhetoric and theory of political dynamics or something like that (and it's probably not on UFM's list, I'd bet). For hours each day, they are taught how to pick good speech writers, dodge important and biting questions, part their hair cleanly on the left side and spout half-truths with copious alacrity to over-trusting constituents. As an elective, one could most likely take a seminar in cover-up and scandal. No one said it was going to be easy to properly represent the people.

Take our current Student Senate "dead issue" for instance. I mean, think about it. Barry Beck really had to work hard to redistribute all that money into other clubs - including Heitschmidt's salary - so that he could screw UFM. It probably wasn't too easy to pull off using Darin Batchman (even though he willingly participated) as the liaison with UFM, knowing he would not recommend funding. He deserves a hand or two. Clever guy, that Beck.

That also must be the reason why Jonathan Morris wasn't elected student body president. Left out of the mainstream political pale, he could burn flags and be outspoken and all, but he just didn't have the background to talk for 10 minutes and not say anything or bring up personal phobias when cautiously debating the allocation of BaGaLs' proposed $61.92 budget for two hours by reading the Kansas sodomy law. Not everyone can do that, you know.

But what does that tell us, if anything, about the black shoe phenomenon? Garanimals and political coursework aside, what could be behind it? I think it all goes back to tight feet. Some senator probably discovered that if your feet are tight and sweaty, it's a hell of a lot easier to keep a straight face when debating your own salary increase, for instance. I bet Jessie Helm's Hushpuppies are about three sizes too small.

Well if this is the case, a simple solution to our various governmental inconsistencies is staring us in the face. We don't need a progressive thinker like Jesse Jackson, we just need to introduce legislation mandating that all political figures must wear sandals or other forms of loose-fitting footwear during debate or public appearances. Birkenstocks, for example, are much more comfortable and last much longer than your average clodhoppers. Just go down to Olson's and ask.

They'll tell you.

If Congress is a bit hesitant about sandals, maybe Nike or Reebok should look into putting space-age pump technology to work for Capitol Hill. All the companies need to do is get Fitzwater or Cheney to do a few clever spots with Spike Lee on prime time, and the project is guaranteed to fly. This could be a big thing: "Powell knows defense strategy."

Once Bush bought his pair, I'm sure he'd want to rethink his New Energy Strategy and pay more attention to domestic issues. The Kansas Legislature, and particularly the current state finance committee, properly outfitted in Congress cross-trainers, would be sure to fund the Margin of Excellence and K-State in general. They wouldn't need to build new highways - everyone would be walking inally, we sould get Student Senate to purchase mass quantities of comforatable shoes. People like Heitschmidt, Batchman — and all Senate incumbents for that matter — should be banned from politics indefinitely on the grounds that they just can't responsibly choose quality footwear.

If they don't like it, they can pump up or air

Little being done by Bush to erase our responsibility

Early this week, Lt. Gen. Brent Scowcroft, President Bush's national security adviser, withstand two simultaneous said the Bush administration didn't anticipate the severity of Saddam Hussein's attack on the tain the downfall of Saddam Kurds.

Rights exhibit displays racism

Tuesday, a group of Palestinian students, purportedly concerned with human rights, set up a display in the K-State Union Courtyard. After I saw the exhibit and spoke with them, it became clear that they did not consider Jews as humans deserving of rights. In the name of human rights, these students condemned the entire Jewish people and called for the destruction of Israel and the Jews.

Israeli-Palestinian differences should, and hopefully will, be resolved in a political arena. These differences should be discussed on our campus and elsewhere in their historical context. But the student display Tuesday was not historical, political or educational; it was hate-mongering and racist. And this blatant racism must be condemned on our campus, as we would any other expression of

Crossing the line

We support people being involved, taking a stand or expressing their views. It does not matter if we hold the same or opposing views. We approve of people's right to criticize a democratic government for its action. This criticism helps reduce the occurence of misconduct and injustice in the actions of the government. This makes the government better for its people.

However, we condemn the use of Nazi symbols and the comparison made between the Nazi's actions taken against the Jews and the events now taking place in the Israeli-Arab conflict. At a table set up in the K-State Union Tuesday by the Palestinian Student Association and the General union of Palestinian Students, this line was crossed.

Even if the people at the table claim that an injustice is being done against the Palestinians, there is no comparison to Nazi actions. The Nazis tried to solve the "Jewish Problem" by exterminating all of the Jewish people. Six million Jews, about one-third of the Jewish population, were killed in gas chambers and other mass killings.

The government of Israel has never tried to solve the conflict between Israelis and the Palestinians by adopting a "Final Solution" policy. There is no Israeli attempt to exterminate Palestinians. Futhermore, Israel is not attempting to solve the conflict by mass deportation of the 1.5 million Palestinians currently living in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. On the other hand, the Palestinian Liberation Organization, which is considered to be the representative of the Palestinians, declares in "The Palestinian National Covenant" that only Jews whose families resided in the region prior to 1917 can stay. This statement calls for the deportation of more than 4 million Jews, half of them who immigrated to Israel from Arab countries. Deporting millions of people is no way to solve a problem.

No matter where people stand on this issue, or any issue, they should never abuse the use of the term "Nazi crime." Using this term inappropriately is crossing the line. This is inhuman, especially when we still have among us those people who survived the holocaust and who are still carrying their painful memories.

Vajnar apologizes

During the past few weeks, numerous viewpoints concerning the issue of abortion have appeared in the Collegian. Now that the debate has receded in intensity, I feel compelled to expand the focus of the issue as well as acknowledge some mistakes that I have

Specifically, three apologies are neces-sary. First of all, I apologize to the Voices for Choice student organization, if they feel that they were being accused of taking the antiabortion posters that were distributed across campus. Secondly, an apology is extended to all women who rightfully took offense at my use of the word "girls" in a recent letter to the editor. Although unintended to be so, it was a very condescending remark. Thirdly, I most sincerely apologize to all those women who have undergone abortions and were subjected to the aforementioned posters. The decision to distribute the posters in such an accessible arena was a mistake for that reason alone.

Recently, a letter was written by Eric Runquist expressing dissatisfaction at being subjected to those "graphic" posters. Again, I am in agreement with Runquist that the posters

However, is it not rational to conclude that the act depicted is graphic and "disrespectful" as well? Those posters are fact; they show abortion for what it is, and what it is not. It is not about slogans, liberation or where people's motivations lie. It is necessary for Runquist to be upset. It is also necessary for him to realize what he is upset about. In an ironic sense, perhaps these posters will allow the men involved in such situations to stop and reflect on their moral obligations before they seek to pressure women into a quick, scared and uninformed choice, just for the sake of avoiding responsibility.

Regardless of where you stand on the abortion issue, keep an open mind. Research the issue independently. Obviously, when such an emotional issue is addressed, it is important to appeal to empirical evidence. For example, when one considers the vital question of when life begins, one should defer to the facts of biology, science and medicine. (The blatant failure to do so has made the Supreme Court's Roe v. Wade decision the most maligned decision since the Dred Scott ruling concerning slavery.)

Finally, continue to write about any issue you feel strongly about. Suspension of the free exchange of ideas is no way to address such a fundamental human rights and social justice issue. In our constitutional republic, we must respect this freedom even if we do not appreciate the diversity that results from it. Special thanks are due to the Collegian, as well as Alicia Poteat (the president for Voices for Choice), for their commitment in upholding this important principle of free speech.

Sessions focus on women

ULRIKE DAUER Collegian Reporter

Women from various backgrounds and cultures will come together to share their experience at the first International Women of Color Symposium Saturday in the K-State Union.

The result of violence in the lives of colored women and problems of interracial coalition building are two topics to be discussed in panels at the symposium.

Speeches concerning women and spirituality, the process of healing and wholeness, women and the holocaust and single parenthood will also be presented at the symposium.

We want to bring people together to share and learn more about those issues. They relate to women specifically, but they have applications for everyone," said Shirley Marshall, director for New Directions in the College of Education.

'Anyone is welcome — all races, students, faculty and members of the community," she said.

Barbara Baker, assistant project director for New Directions, said the symposium is a good educational opportunity for everyone to stress the need for connectiveness among men and women.

"We felt the need for this type of programming," Marshall said. She said she expects 30 to 50 people to attend. "I hope everyone — men and wo-men — shows up," Baker said.

Ramona Douglass, vice president of Bi-Racial Center in Chicago; Florea Davis, social worker at Kansas City Clinic Rockhill Medical Center; and Maggie Rodrigues, child protection social worker in Kansas City, will be a part of the symposium.

As part of the event, a group of Polynesian dancers will give an aftemoon performance in the Purple Masque Theatre.

The symposium is sponsored by New Directions, Women's Studies and American Ethnic Studies.

International Women of Color Symposium is from 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday in the Union 203 and 204. The Interracial Coalition Building Panel starts at 3:30 p.m. Saturday in the Union 204.

Space - the final feeding frontier.

The U.S.S. Enterprise and the rest of the Federation Starfleet landed on the residence halls' dinner tables Thursday night.

Intergalactic decorations and "Star Trek" theme music greeted students as they entered their cafeterias at Kramer, Derby and Van Zile. This year's spring theme dinner, Trek Fest, was held in conjunction with the 25th anniversary of the famous TV saga. At Derby Food Center, Mary Molt, assistant director of the Department of Housing, said she was pleased with the choice of the theme and the overall success achieved by the staff in carrying out the design.

"We try to do something that's timely, yet fun and exciting that the students can tune into," Molt said. "We knew that it was the 25th anniversary for 'Star Trek' and many students and even staff members watch and follow 'Star Trek.'"

The theme was not only carried out through the decorations, but in the entrees and costumes as well. Such treats as "Starship Rounds" and "Mr. Spock's Sour Dilithium and Octoberry Cake" were items on the menu.

Production manager Mark Edwards was in charge of planning the shipment of food, which was served on an all-you-can-eat basis.

"We ordered 300 pounds of shrimp, 610 pounds of game hen and 900 pounds of smoked rib," Edwards said. "Then we have the six not counting the amounts used at Van Zile or Kramer."

Molt said due to production records, the staff does a good job of planning the amount of food needed.

"But we never run out," she added.

The employees in the food line were all decked out in "Star Trek" shirts while the cashiers donned Spock ears.

The extravaganza was not all fun and games, however. To provide a learning environment, the housing department uses the aid of many campus programs to come up with all of the touches.

"We use student employees for all of the professional type of things done like the ice carvings," Molt said. "This gives them the experi-

These scenes from Guatemala were shown to audience members during a slide presentation sponsored by the Manhattan Alliance on Central America in the K-State Union Little Theatre.

The guest speaker of the evening was Peace Brigade International volunteer David Schneck.

Schneck, who received his master's in psychiatric social work from St. Louis University, said Peace Brigade is a non-profit organization promoting human rights without violence in countries such as Guatemala, El Salvador and Sri Lanka.

"We are non-violent," Schneck said. "We work with people nonviolently, but we don't participate in their meetings or work. They feel safer if they have a foreigner with them.' Schneck said his work in threatened human rights workers, political activists or families of the disappeared in their daily activities. He said anyone who takes a stand against the government is a potential target for death threats.

Once a death threat has been given, which is usually by phone, the receiver is expected to stop the subversive action. If not, Schneck said it is common for Cherokee vans with darkened windows to follow them, trying to intimidate them to stop their work. The end result is often death.

Although Schneck doesn't carry any weapons, he says merely the presence of the Peace Brigades accomplishes the goal of saving the lives of threatened Guatemalans.

"We protect them through two ways," he said. "First, because I'm a foreigner, I tend to stick out. Unfortunately, the government is more concerned about a killed American than hundreds of killed Guatemalans."

Another way, Schneck said, is through the international pressure they are able to create because of their emergency reponse network.

Wildcat track team to begin competing in 66th KU Relays

JENIFER SCHEIBLER

Sports Reporter

The K-State men's and women's track and field teams will make the trek along I-70 to compete in the Kansas Relays in Lawrence this weekend.

The KU Relays represent the second leg of the midwest's triple crown of track and field. The third leg is the Drake Relays (April 26-27).

"This is an important meet for us," Coach John Capriotti said. "It's possible to have some national qualifying performances if the weather cooperates."

Capriotti said redshirting and injuries will prevent both, the men and women from competing at full force. All-Americans Janet Haskin and Clifton Etheridge and distance runner Jared Storm have been redshirted for the season.

Sprinters Michael Sims and Marcus Wright will not compete due to hamstring injuries. In addition, the status of high jum-pers R.D. Cogswell and Connie Teaberry and long/triple jumper Dee Dee Tribue is currently questionable. "Right now, we're a little banged up," he said. Despite the injuries, the remaining team members are in good shape going into the meet, Capriotti said. "I think we're where we want to be at this point in the season," he said. "Those competing are fit and ready to go."

Capriotti said the competition will be of high quality, and the relays and open events will be tough.

However, he said the Wildcat men and women have both individuals and relay teams that can bring home gold medals.

"Our women's 4x100-meter relay always has a shot to win it along with our sprinters, 10,000-meter people and the field events," he said. "It's time to turn things up a notch."

He said the Wildcat teams usually do well at this meet, and this year should be no exception.

While competing in the 1990 Kansas Relays, the Wildcat men and women placed in the top six in 29 events, and were victorious in seven throw of 205-1.

events. Additionally, All-American Angie Miller won MVP honors with victories in the shot put and discus.

The KU Relays, currently in their 66th year, have a reputation for being one of the Midwest's premier track and field competitions. It draws competitors from across the country, both team-affiliated and unattached. Coaches can often gauge the level of national competition from the results of events at the relays.

Wildcat heptathletes Lisa Fager and Gwen Wentland and decathletes John Dedrick and Jason Meredith began competition Wednesday and concluded Thursday.

Fager finished the competition in 10th place with a personal record of 4,120 points. Wentland was unable to finish the competition due to an ankle injury.

Dedrick completed the 10-event competition in third place standing with 6,677 points, and Meredith placed ninth with 6,068 points.

Dedrick's finish was somewhat of disappointment, considering he was in second place after the first day of competition.

'John had a sub-par day, although it wasn't as bad as it sounds given the conditions," Cliff Rovelto, assistant coach, said. "But he's capable of scoring a lot more points."

The event winner was Steve Fritz, former K-State All-American decathlete, with 7,860 points.

The point total was about 700 points greater than that of the secondplace finisher and was the secondbest of his career.

According to Rovelto, reaching the 8,000-point mark was a possibility for Fritz in the meet, but weather conditions played a significant role in preventing the achievement.

Rain caused the pole vault and long jump to be moved indoors which lengthened the time between

Tennis squad to face OSU

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

Stopping a three-meet losing streak in the Big Eight can be difficult. Doing it against a dynasty, however, can appear downright impossible.

Ranked No. 9 in the nation with three players listed in the top 100, the Oklahoma State tennis team has finished first in the Big Eight each of the past 10 seasons.

The squad, which came just two matches from sweeping last year's Big Eight meet, returns its top five players and will provide a challenge as tough as any on the Wildcats' schedule, which includes several top 20 teams, Coach Steve Bietau said.

OSU brings a 17-4 record and an eight-meet winning streak to the matchup with K-State at the L.P. Washburn Recreational Area Sunday. Its sweep through conference play has been so dominant this season that OSU has dropped just two matches in four duals with Big Eight

'It's a huge challenge for us," Bietau said of the matchup. "I expect to they're as good as anyone we've do it."

Leading the charge for the visitors is No. 1 player Monika Waniek, ranked No. 76 in the country. Splitting time at the No. 2 spot are Caroline Delisle, No. 40, and Jackie Booth, No. 95.

"Those rankings can be mislead-ing," Bietau said. "Waniek is their best player and should be higher in the rankings. But what makes them so tough isn't so much the ranked players, but that as you go down their lineup, they really don't get any weaker. They have players at No. 4 and 5 that are as about as good as their ranked players."

While OSU's players have earned national attention in singles play, it is in doubles that they solidify their position amongst the very best. At No. 1 doubles, Waniek and Booth are 14-3 and are currently sixth in the country. Delisle and Sally Godman, 16-3 on the year, are rated 17th.

"It's great for the conference to have a team like Oklahoma State," Bietau said. "It brings us some notoriety from the rankings and from the top programs in the country. And if you are trying to lift the level of your

The only meeting between the two squads so far this season came when Michele Riniker faced Waniek at the ITCA Regional Tournament in Salt Lake City last October. Waniek edged Riniker 6-3, 6-4 in what Bietau said was a very competitive match.

The Wildcat squad is seeking its second conference win after dropping to 1-4. The last three losses have seen the team stay close through singles play, only to be swept in doubles. Such facts don't look promising against doubles teams of the caliber of OSU's.

"There's no doubt that we need to improve at doubles if we're going to win, but as disappointing as the last three performances at doubles have been, it's not that we aren't doing the things we need to do," Bietau said. We have done virtually everything within our power to improve, and the results in singles have been bearing that out.

"We're not as good at doubles as we need to be, and we don't accept that. But we have to be realistic in our approach.'

Other than in the sweep of Missouri, the Wildcats have taken just one doubles match since entering the Big Eight season.

Tonight's duel will be the climax to a carnival of pre-fight hype, with Foreman playing the role of ringmaster. His one-liners have sold tickets and garnered more interest than this fight probably merits.

Foreman has used the common man approach, munching plates of burgers before television cameras while saying he has nothing to lose. In his eyes and stomach, he's accomplished more in his comeback than anybody ever believed possible.

Holyfield, meanwhile, has absorbed his challenger's humor in numerous press conferences, laughing with the rest of the world at Foreman's charm. The promotion of this fight has been unorthodox relative to most title bouts, and Holyfield has rolled with Foreman's verbal punches.

Holyfield's response to Foreman's jabber is that the 257-pound preacher will have to back up his words in the ring. The champ has known he can't compete with Foreman at the microphone, so there's been no bold predictions or Ali-like poetry. Just a matter-of-fact tone.

While Foreman isn't a big underdog in tonight's fight, it would take a stubborn gambler to pick him to win. Holyfield should win easily. He's a champ with all the tools. But even the men in Holyfield's corner respect the challenger.

College sets long-term goals

Fewer years of alumni make friend raising important

MIKE VENSO Collegian Reporter

The College of Business has taken a long-term approach to fund raising, and considering its relatively short existence, that is almost a necessity rather than an intention.

The College of Business was one of several departments in the College of Arts and Sciences until 1962. At that time, it became its own college and had its first graduating class fewer than 30 years

"For the graduates prior to 1962, it's hard for them to identify with the college, unless they've been in-volved in it," said David Donnelly, the College of Business interim dean. "We do have several because of their business interest. They've had a close tie with the College of Business through the business environment."

Kirk Baughn, Foundation development officer for business said, A lot of those graduates (prior to 1962) don't have a connection to the College of Business. There's a little link there that's missing. Sometimes we're able to bridge that, and sometimes we just can't."

Donnelly said he agreed. 'A lot of the alumni from arts and sciences do have somewhat of a difficulty. I would think they would have crossed allegiances," he said.

The youthfulness of the college has affected fund raising in another

Because we are such a young college, the bulk of our alumni are still very young in their careers, so it's going to make it a little more difficult for them to make major contributions," Donnelly said.

"The College of Business, prior to the Essential Edge Campaign, was pretty lax in the fund-raising aspect," Donnelly said.

Part of that was attributed to our tremendous growth. The staff was so consumed with handling the growth within the college, our internal demands, that the external demands got put on the back bur-ner," he said. "The campaign was very important to our college because it established that as a high

Establishing the campaign as a priority has meant looking beyond the end of the campaign in 1993 and focusing on the future of the

"It's not a short-run campaign. It's a long-run campaign," Donnelly said. "The goal is to develop a system that allows you to continue fund raising in longevity. If you go in with the idea that this is just a big rush to get as much as we can in five years and then stop, then you're never going to achieve the objectives of the campaign.

"A lot of the objectives have been to develop a network and reestablish our ties with alumni. It's as much friend raising as it is fund raising.

That friend raising had a bit of a shaky relationship during the short time between former Dean Randolph Pohlman's departure and Donnelly's assumption of the post. "There's a period where things do not continue on an even flow,' Donnelly said. "We definitely hit a period like that when I moved in. It was more noticeable on the outside than on the inside.

"I was the associate dean internally and had been involved very much in the internal organization of the college.

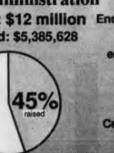

'So when I moved into the position as acting dean, it was not as disruptive from an internal administrative side - but it was from an external because Dean Pohlman had been very active on the external side of the college," Donnelly said. "Without a doubt, we couldn't keep it going at the same pace."

Previously, the dean had handled much of the fund-raising responsibility.
"Dean Pohlman was probably recognized as the person who carried this involvement in the private sector to a much higher level," Baughn said.

That transition period was not as bad as it could have been, and Donnelly attributes that to the KSU Essential Edge

When Dean Pohlman left, we had some continuance through the Foundation efforts. It wasn't like it just fell on its face," he said.

"You've got to allow the dean some time to get out and meet people," Donnelly said. "You shouldn't expect any tremendous changes. We didn't encounter a significant change in the operations when I took over, because the key role that the Foundation has been playing in this campaign has kept that fairly consistent.'

Many donors are contributing in other ways, such as serving as guest lecturers, advisory board members and business resources. Those positions are considered important contributions even though they don't show up on the financial statements.

"We put a lot of attention on the dollar numbers," Donnelly said. "I think the campaign has done more than that by far - if you look at all the contributions and the commitment that the alumni are bringing back in the non-monetary side as Student involvement is most visible in the Telefund and student organizations that try to build contacts with the school and business people, Donnelly said.

The college has a unique idea on its agenda in that a part of its $12-million goal contains $500,000 for Farrell Library.

"When we talk to our constituencies and our alumni, we're talking about some things they can do, Donnelly said.

"We'll bring up that the library also needs some support. Many of them have chosen to support the library directly. What we hope, if the campaign goes according to plan, is that we will be able to take an additional $500,000 out of our funds and make a contribution from the

The college is also using the contacts they have with corporations, especially those that have matching

Many corporations have great matching programs, 2:1 or 3:1 matching, which would turn a $1,000 gift into a $4,000 contribution, Donnelly said.

Rusty Andrews, assistant director of the Essential Edge Campaign, said, "The College of Business Administration does have strong relationships with corporations, and they are developing an even stronger network in that area.

"The nature of the college means they are going to be very attractive to large corporations. When you have people within a corporation with an affinity for your university, you'll see more attention from that corporation given to your

One of Paul's coaches came up and tapped him on the shoulder.

"How you feelin', Bud?" the coach said. "I'm getting pumped," Paul said, smacking his left fist into his right palm. "I'm definitely getting pumped."

The two walked downstairs to get ready for Paul's match. At the same time, the fight below was stopped by the referee because the elbow of one of the boxers had swollen to the size of a grapefruit.

In the locker room below, Paul's coach began taping Paul's wrist. "Does that feel too tight?" the coach asked. Paul shook his head. "I don't care," he said, making a fist.

Another boxer walked into the locker room. His eyes were swollen and his face was red. The boxer walked over and spit a glob of blood into one of the urinals. Guitars screamed from Paul's Walkman.

"Good luck," a friend of Paul's told The Opponent. "You're gonna need it."

The Opponent looked a little confused.

And a little angry.

"Is Paul strong?" he asked.

The taunter smiled. "Yeah," he said.

Outside, Paul said he was ready to go. Inside Weber, red, blue and yellow tube lights flashed above a makeshift tunnel. A dry ice machine breathed an ominous rock-star fog across the floor, while the bass from the PA system thumped and beat against the chests and hearts of the spectators.

The lights above dimmed. Paul entered the arena with a smile on his face and a Sigma Phi Epsilon Knockout on each arm. His feet shifted while he waited for

Iraqi, U.S. officials agree to initiate direct talks

1st negotiations to occur in northern Iraq

By the Associated Press

INCIRLIK AIR BASE, Turkey -Iraqi and U.S. officials agreed Thursday to hold their first direct talks in northern Iraq, where Saddam Hussein's armies have crushed a Kurdish rebellion and sent hundreds of thousands of refugees fleeing.

Turkish authorities, meanwhile, warned that many more Kurdish refugees could die before they are moved to new camps inside Iraq that are to be set up and protected by U.S., French and British forces.

U.S. military teams scouted Iraqi territory Thursday to search for sites for refugee camps, officials in Turkey and at the Pentagon said.

About three to four dozen members of the U.S. military are in Iraq at any given time, Pentagon spokesman Bob Hall said. He said the U.S. troops so far have had no face-to-face contact with any Iraqi military during their efforts.

The new commander of the U.S. relief effort for Kurdish refugees was to meet Friday in northern Iraq with an Iraqi military delegation to discuss ways to avoid any accidental conflicts during the operation, a military spokesman said.

The U.S. commander, Lt. Gen. John M. Shalikashvili, was to travel from the base in southern Turkey to Zakhu in northern Iraq for the meeting, according to the spokesman, Cmdr. John Woodhouse.

Woodhouse did not disclose the reason for the meeting, but a diplomatic source said earlier that such a

The Baghdad government has protested the U.S. plan for the new camps as unnecessary, but Thursday's announcement of the planned talks suggested Iraq was willing to Iraq also took one more step Thursday toward putting the war behind it. The Iraqi ambassador to the United Nations said Iraq had given the United Nations a detailed list of its chemical and biological weapons capabilities and nuclear facilities. That was aimed at complying with a stringent U.N. resolution setting down terms or a permanent cease-

Hundreds of thousands of Iraqi Kurds fled into the mountains of northern Iraq after a rebellion in their traditional homeland was crushed by Saddam's forces in the wake of the Persian Gulf War.

At the crude encampments in the rugged terrain along Iraq's borders with Turkey and Iran, up to 1,000 refugees are dying daily of hunger, disease and exposure, aid officials have

Officials expect that finding sites and building the new refugee centers will take up to 40 more days, and some say even those estimates are too optimistic.

Mahmoud Yildirim, the Turkish commander of the huge ramshackle settlement at Isikveren, estimated that many more people would likely die in that period.

"We are looking at many infections right now," he said Thursday. Yildirim estimated that up to 20 people are dying each day at the Isikveren camp alone, one of several dozen settlements of refugees. And every day, he said, an average of 10 babies are born in squalid tents on the mountainside, with little or no medical care available. Some medical care is available in most camps, but the lack of sanitation and the scarcity of water is leading to increased illness. Distribution of relief supplies remains a difficult problem, with mob scenes around trucks and supply drop sites.

The new refugee centers, surrounded by smaller camps, are to house at least 400,000 Kurdish refugees near the Iraqi town of Zakho, the Turkish border, and Dohuk, about 30 miles into Iraq. Iraqi troops occupy both cities.

About 800,000 of Iraq's 4 million Kurds have fled to Turkey and its border, according to the latest esti-mates. Nearly 1.5 million have sought safety in Iran and along its frontier. In addition, nearly 100,000 Shiites have fled either to Iran or to the allied-controlled border zone in southern Iraq.

Many refugees are expressing skepticism about relocation, and say they fear the allies would eventually abandon them to the mercy of Saddam. They have received no guarantees of lasting protection.

Iraq gives U.N. list of nuclear caches, sites

By the Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria - Iraq has handed over to the International Atomic Energy Agency a U.N.-requested list of the type and whereabouts of its nuclear cache, an agency spokesman said today.

Iraq's mission to the Viennabased, United Nations agency handed over the list about 11 a.m. (5 a.m. EDT) today, said spokesman Hans-Friedrich Meyer.

He declined to provide details of

The International Atomic Energy Agency, which is responsible for monitoring the peaceful use of nuclear energy, had repeatedly sought word from Iraq on the whereabouts of enriched uranium last seen by agency inspectors at nuclear reactors destroyed in the Persian Gulf War.

Iraq had declined to tell the agency where that enriched uranium fuel

Two weeks ago, the United Nations gave the request some teeth by passing a resolution requiring Iraq to declare the type and whereabouts of all material that could be used to develop nuclear, chemical and other weapons of mass destruction.

Meyer said the agency's first step now was to check that Iraq had also handed the list to the U.N. secretarygeneral in New York, as required.

A special commission is to take charge of the nuclear material, supervising its storage. But Meyer said it is not even clear who will be on the commission or exactly what steps it should now take.

School addresses concerns

By the Associated Press

MANHATTAN - The Manhattan School Board has assured residents concerned about a controversial program involving free TV sets in return for required viewing that it won't make a hasty decision about it.

At issue is the advertisersupported Channel One news service for teens provided by Whittle Communications. The company offers 19-inch color TV sets to school districts, provided they guarantee 90 percent of students will watch the daily program.

Board members said they would not rush into anything and would keep citizens informed.

"I'd like to reassure people that this board is going to look very, very carefully at this issue," said Graham Rose. "Not just to bringing in TV shows, but taking valuable time out of our school day."
At Wednesday's school board meeting, two citizens said they don't want the program at Manhattan High School.

"This is promoted as 10 minutes of international news and two minutes of advertising," Mark Weddle told the board after watching two sample programs. "Three minutes of the segment set aside for news was about Nintendo games. I don't think that's something that would qualify as international news and one minute was a celebration of the network that's put this thing together."

Weddle referred to it as a glitzy "disco news show" featuring loud

The fact that students would be forced to watch television bothered A. Edward Wolfe even more than the content of the program.

"If Time-Life was donating books and required students to spend 12 minutes reading out of the Bible or the Koran we'd think that was awful," Wolfe said.

Stores set magazine policy

Courts struggling to define limits to obscene material

BETH PALMER

Collegian Reporter

Recent complaints about sales of Penthouse and Playboy in the K-State Union Bookstore have brought obscenity to the forefront of campus issues.

"The problem you face in a case of this nature is that you have constitutional issues on one side, freedom of speech and whether what's being sold has any redeeming val-ues," said Bill Kennedy, Riley County attorney.

"I don't think that's censorship - it's business," he said. "Censorship comes from the governor, in my opinion.

"My suggestion for people that object, is that they register their objections with the proprietor and the people who sell these magazines."

Kay Farley, manager of the Union Bookstore, declined to make a

Although the U.S. Supreme Court says obscenity is not protected as free speech under the Constitution, the Court has been trying to determine a definition for the past 30 years, said Paul Parsons, professor of journalism and mass communications.

If a work is termed obscene, it has no protection and is punishable by law. The question is how to define obscenity.

"Obscenity appeals to prurient interests, and prurient means erotic," Parsons said. "A lot of art is erotic, but not found to be obscene. Under the law, for something to be declared obscene, it must be found to be clearly offensive and must lack serious literary or artistic Obscenity became a big issue in the 1970s, but not much has been happening lately, Parsons said.

Government has reached an agree-ment with pornographers that if they stay out of the way and aren't noticeable, then government will leave them alone, except for cases of child pomography.

The Supreme Court says each community can set its own standards. People can decide what kind of stores they want in their community. If they don't like what kind of stores open up for business, they can lobby to have the business removed.

"There is no constitutional ground to force them out of business," Parsons said, "but if a pornography store were to open in the middle of Aggieville, the neighborhood would crack down.'

As for the Union Bookstore, it's a decision management has to make. Some universities don't carry sexual material, but some universities decide there is a student interest or need, Parsons said.

"Legally, the bookstore can carry Penthouse and Playboy, no problem," Parsons said. "It becomes a business and ethical decision, not a legal one."

having sexual materials in their own home because it's not illegal, except for child pornography.

Kansas has fairly explicit statutes stating what can or can't be sold. Some people faced with the decision of whether to pull sexual material off the shelves or not, may consider it to be a censorship issue,

"It's kind of an empty freedom if you can't purchase the material," Parsons said.

Several years ago, Manhattan citizens made a request that merchants cover the front of sexual magazines, Kennedy said.

'The covers of women's magazines in grocery stores are just as bad as Playboy and Penthouse," Kennedy said. "I haven't heard anyone complaining about those magazines, but they encourage men to treat women as sexual objects, "I have sympathy for the people making complaints," he said. "Pornography begets violence, and it begets lack of respect of people."

nistrators have told him they personally don't support the magazine, the administrators said they won't take action to stop the sale of the magazines.

This has to be a student movement. The administration that is capable of doing something shows a lack of integrity by not acting on what they say they believe," Wolf

Program overhaul falls to Riquelme

JEFF STURDY

Collegian Reporter

Marcial Riquelme, new director of the Latin American Studies Program at K-State, has recently announced the addition of new classes that will allow students to receive a secondary major in Latin American Studies.

Riquelme was hired to reorganize and restructure the Latin American Studies Program.

Jack Holl, arts and sciences associate dean, said the Latin American Studies Program was important to K-State for economic, sociological and political reasons.

"We are able to launch the program through the mechanism of visiting professors because we do not have the resources to hire professors on a permanent basis," Riquelme said. "We are hoping to get funded to hire professors on a permament basis, hopefully within a year and a

The funding would come from the University, federal government and from outside sources, he said.

Holl said some of the funding for the program would come from the College of Arts and Sciences and the sociology, anthropology and social work departments, specifically.

Riquelme said several of these classes will have to be taught by visiting professors until the program is set and recieves adequate funding.

"With the additions of these new courses to the courses already established in the modern languages department, we have the basis of a secondary major in Latin American Studies," Riquelme said.

Government mandates end, worker dispute unresolved

By the Associated Press

freight trains rumbled the rails Thursday after the government stepped in to halt a 19-hour strike, but the disputes that led to a walkout by 235,000 workers remained unresolved. Freight carriers and their unions will now make their cases on wage and work-rule disputes to a special review panel. Absent any new agreements the parties reach on their own, the panel will impose a mandatory settlement on both sides by late June.

Under emergency legislation rushed through Congress, the clock will start on a 65-day timetable as soon as President Bush names the board's members. The unions won't be able to strike again, even if they don't like the ultimate settlement, nor will management be able to lock them out. The deal, struck by the White for the eight striking unions because it gives them a second chance at gaining a more favorable contract.

At first, the White House pushed Congress to merely enact the wage and work-rule recommendations made by a presidential emergency board in January.

The unions were not satisfied with those recommendations, and pressed Congress for a new board to try and settle differences that had dogged the industry since 1988. They got their way, though the January proposals will mark the base from which any changes will be made.

"I see it as coming into overtime at the end of a ball game after we were down. We tied it at the end," said John Woischke, a union engineer who works for Conrail out of Columbus, Ohio. Mac Fleming, president of the major issue.

Jim Reiter, a spokesman for the American Association of Railroads, said management considered the earlier recommendations "an exhaustive effort and a reasonable compromise." "It would have been a shame to throw out all that effort. At least this way, we're back at the table using that as a base. The main thing is to get back to work," Reiter said.

Work-rule issues regarding crew sizes, miles in a one-day shift and pay differentials for some employees were expected to be hotly contested by the labor unions, officials said.

Uncontrolled Konza fire good, bad for prairie

MEREDITH JONES

Collegian Reporter

A fire in the Konza Prairie burned out of control for 11 hours April 5, but it had both good and bad results.

"It is not by any means a disaster," said Gary Merrill, associate coordinator of the Konza Prairie Office, "Fire is an essential part of the prairie.

"Total acreage burned is 5,358 acres," he said. "Of those, 2,384 were scheduled to burn.'

The fire has affected some longterm research and experiments because some areas were not scheduled to be burned this year, but it also allows other research opportunities.

At a meeting with the Long-Term Research Group, Merrill said ideas of how to take advantage of the situation this summer were discussed.

The fire started after a controlled burning in the morning had been completed. A second fire was started around noon, Merrill said, but sparks from the first fire got into heavy thatch and spread. It hit an area that hadn't been burned for 18 years. "The majority didn't have ex-periments," Merrill said.

The Konza Prairie is an area used to collect long-term data on the different frequencies of fire. The frequencies can be every year, every other year, every five years, on up to every 20 years, Merrill said.

"One of the things that is unique about a site like this is the fact that you can go back year after year. It's going to be there, and you can collect long-term data," Merrill said.

He also said most ecologists don't have that advantage and frequently something changes, whether a house is built on the land, the land is plowed under, or something else.

The Konza Prairie is divided up into different units ranging in size from 20 acres to about 500 acres.

Merrill said, "It's all been burned, yet each one has a different history.

The original part of the Konza

Prairie is located in Geary County.

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Red Cross has not yet stopped unsuitable blood from entering the nation's blood supply despite major improvements in its collection procedures.

The latest known problem involved the Red Cross' Portland, Ore., blood collection center, which according to a Food and Drug Administration inspection report, released blood that was improperly tested for AIDS and hepatitis

The FDA on Wednesday threatened to pull the license of the Portland center because of numerous violations of procedures found during the inspection.

At a hearing before the House Energy and Commerce investigations subcommittee, Dr. Jeffrey McCullough, a senior vice president for the American Red Cross, acknowledged that the Portland center has problems. But, he said, "these situations have not resulted in the transfusion of infected blood, to the best of our knowledge."

But Mary Carden, the FDA official who inspected the Portland center, testified that the written records indicate that blood improperly tested for hepatitis B was shipped out of the center to hospitals.

Forensics team returns from tourney

K-Staters finish 26 out of 114 schools in national competition

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter

Members of the K-State forensics team thought last weekend was jinxed.

Their flight to national competition in Tecoma, Wash., was canceled due to bad weather, and they missed the next plane. Bad karma or no, the weekend actually turned out well. The team finished the tournament,

April 13-15, in 26th place and had four members place in the top 20 in their individual events, said coach Craig Brown.

"I thought we had a chance to finish in the top 20, but I'm very happy with what we did. It was a massive improvement from last year when we placed 43rd," he said. There were 114 schools represented and about 400 students at the tournament, he said.

Laura Pelletier, senior in speech, placed 16th after reaching quarterfinals with her informative speech. Her topic was active noise reduction, "I would have liked to have done better," she said, "but I was happy." Winning sometimes all depends on the judges, she said. At the national level, there is usually the same amount of talent, so it almost seems like they choose randomly.

Jason Brown, senior in speech and political science, placed in the top 10 in after-dinner speaking. His topic was about recycling, he said.

nationals, he said he basically knew what to expect and was prepared.

"I was ready to go," he said. Mark Ray, freshman in political science, placed in the top 20 in impromptu speaking. In this event, he said, the competitor walks in, the judges give them a quotation and the competitor has seven minutes to prepare a speech.

The quote he was given in quarterfinals was, "To give reason for anything is to breed doubt of it," he said. Ray said even though he is a freshman, he wasn't intimidated.

"Our district is really strong, and I had already competed against a lot of the people who were in the top 10," he said, "I couldn't believe it when I

Craig Brown said the team is already thinking about next year, and it knows what it wants to improve on.

MELISSA SMITH

The Department of Accounting is changing its curriculum to better meet the demands of the profession.

Beginning in the fall, the department will change courses, make classes follow a more logical order, increase the degree requirements and attempt to make the curriculum more management-oriented.

As of next fall, the department will no longer offer Financial Accounting, said David Plumlee, associate professor of accounting. Instead, the department will offer Accounting for Business Operations, which started last fall with two sections for accounting majors only. The content of the new course is very similar, he said, but is organized differently.

The new course deals with the decisions made inside a business. Financial Accounting included learning about corporate stocks and

The other new introductory course is Accounting for Investing and Financing, which began this semester and will take the place of Managerial Accounting.

Managerial Accounting will be offered for the last time next fall.

'We felt like most of those people who take the introductory courses won't go on to be accountants anyway," Plumlee said. "So they don't need to be steeped in bookkeeping."

The rest of the curriculum changes focus on accounting majors, he said. The content sequence was changed, he said, to put classses in a logical order. This way, students can build on previous learning, he said. "Additionally," he said, "we want

K-State has a long history of good technical skills, Plumlee said, but demands from employers are changing to include analytical skills.

"It is not that our students do not already have those skills," he said,

"but the skills need to be enhanced." Students need to be able to analyze alternative solutions to a problem, choose one of the alternatives and defend their choice, he said.

Analytical skills would be focused on more during the last year of the new five-year program. Starting July 1, 1997, anyone who takes the Certified Public Accountancy exam in Kansas must have 150 hours of college credit, he said.

Students who enter the program as of fall 1992 should plan to stay five years if they want to take the CPA exam, he said.

When a student graduates, he will have a master's.

Starting July 1, 1991, proof of a high school diploma or Graduation Equivalency Diploma will be mandatory of all who wish to receive financial aid.

Larry Moeder, acting director of financial aid, said, in the past, all applicants needed to prove was they would not use the money to purchase drugs, they were registered with the selective service and they would use the money for education.

Those without a high school dipolma or G.E.D. will need to take a standardized test to prove they have the ability to benefit from the education they want, Moeder said.

Moeder said the original proposal of the bill would have required all students without a high school diploma or G.E.D., regardless of applying for financial aid or not, to take a standardized test.

and high school students who want to

He also said admission's administrators were uneasy with the original take college courses.

to changes in the original proposal. The standardized test given must be administered independent from the institution. The American Collegiate Test is most likely to be used at K-State, Moeder said. Prospective students affected by the bill will need to come to the financial aid office to set up a time to take the test.

Elkins said the action was taken because some schools, especially technical schools, basically, have been ripping off the federal goverment by getting students to participate in programs the students are unable to benefit from.

Elkins said, although he wished the federal government would have enough faith in admissions to allow it to make those decisions, this will help stop abuses.

Students already in programs will not be affected. Only new applicants for financial aid will be checked, Moeder said.

Elkins said it really is not going to be a major problem for K-State because there are few students who will be affected by the testing.

Moeder also said it will not be a hassle, but just one more document for the financial aid system.

Education reforms include exams, aid

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Bush unveiled top-to-bottom school reforms Thursday, including a voluntary nationwide exam system, aid pegged to academic results, and hundreds of millions of dollars in start-up funds.

"I'm here to say America will move forward," said Bush as he described the "America 2000" education strategy in an East Room address before governors, business leaders and educators.

"The time for all the reports and rankings, for all the studies and surveys about what's wrong with our schools, is past," Bush said.

The plan, crafted by new Education Secretary Lamar Alexander in his first month on the job, calls for relatively little new federal spending. It relies instead upon states, governors, teachers, parents, students and communities to take steps to embrace the rigorous new education goals that Bush and the governors pronounced early last year.

It is a national strategy, not a federal program, according to a 34-page Education Department strategy manual.

"The last eight games, for the most part, have been pretty good ballgames. I think the attitude is pretty good right now," Clark said. "We need to put together a streak. We really haven't put together a winning streak all year long of any proportion."

On the mound for K-State in the three-game series will be Kent Hipp (5-3), Tim Churchman (1-3) and Chris Hmielewski (4-3). All three of the throwers had complete-game performances at Missouri last weekend.

"Stick and move and deflect the punches and keep moving so the guy can't get a straight bead on you," Paul said later. "That's about all I know about boxing."

Paul's coach also instructed Paul to come out on the defensive through the first and second round.

"In the third," Paul's coach said, "come out with everything you "That way the other fighter will be tired when I come on," Paul explained. "We'll see how that works. If everything falls through, well, we'll get there.

But Paul didn't get there.

'Man, you gotta get in and get out!" his coach yelled in Paul's ear before the third round. He toweled off Paul's sweat. "Throw your jab and get back out! Keep your head up, Bud! Keep your head up!"

The referee walked over to the corner and leaned down to Paul.

"Come on, man, you're doing good," the referee encouraged. "But you gotta keep your head up."

When the bell sounded for the third round, Paul's feet were pumping like he had just begun to fight. The Opponent had won the first round. Easily. He knocked Paul down within the first half-minute. After Paul got up, they sparred a little and then Paul fell again.

Paul had come around in the second. He knew more of what to expect. He traded punches in several flurries with The Opponent. Once, Paul chased him across the ring and tackled him against the ropes.

But in the third, the crowd yelled

Paul pumped his feet and guarded his face with the big red gloves. The Opponent moved closer.

Paul squared up, looked The Opponent in the eye and smacked him right in the mouth.

The Opponent shrugged it off, and swung his left at Paul. He missed Paul, but The Opponent followed with a right that connected.

Paul was reeling. He put his head down. The Opponent threw an uppercut into Paul's face, and Paul fell to his knees.

The referee moved in and pulled The Opponent off. Paul scrambled to his feet, went to his neutral corner and rapid-fire punched the padded corner guard. The crowd loved it. He

"Come on!" Paul taunted. "Come

"Keep your head up!" yelled Paul's coaches from the floor. "Keep your head up!

The Opponent came in and the two of them traded punches. Paul put his head down like a bull and punched

"C'mon, Paul!" screamed members of the crowd. "C'mon!" The bell dinged.

Paul walked dejectedly to his corner. He sat on his stool and spit out his mouthpiece.

Down in the locker room after the fight, Paul pulled the tape off his wrists and swore he would box again next year. He wasn't hurt anywhere, he said, though that last uppercut smarted for half a second. Outside the locker room, the people were congratulating and high-fiving The Opponent.

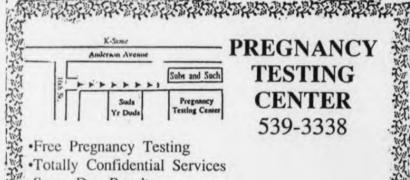

'I just couldn't get anything going the first round," Paul said, throwing the tape to the floor. "In the second and third round, I was starting to get it, but it was too late."

Paul wiped his forehead with his shirt. Another boxer came into the locker room, looking fresh.

"You next?" Paul asked him. "Yeah," he said, punching his gloves together. "I'm getting pumped." Paul slapped him on the shoulder and wished him good luck.

Bushwacker's lawsuit to court

DAVID FRESE

Staff Reporter

After about two years, a complaint charging Bushwacker's with discrimination will go to court next week. Riley County will begin proceedings for the case April 29 at the Riley

County Courthouse.

The incident in the complaint reportedly occurred at Bushwacker's in June 1989 while a group of Puerto Rican students celebrated San Juan Night, a holiday commemorating the baptism of Jesus Christ by John the Baptist.

During the group's celebration, someone allegedly posted signs in the bar that had, "Fuck San Juan -The Management," written on them. The signs were hand-written on Bushwacker's letterhead.

Luis Montaner, a student in veterinary medicine, said he asked a worker to remove the signs, but the worker said if he removed them, he would be fired.

Several days after the incident, then-owner Don Ramey and thenmanager Rich Kriftewirth sent a letter of apology to Montaner. Montaner said publicly that the letter was not enough.

A week after the incident, students rallied around the Puerto Rican group and protested in front of the $2,000.

More than 200 people visited the fair to gather information from a collage of environmentally concerned organizations in celebration of the 21st anniversary of Earth

Jonathan Morris, president of Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment, said he was pleased with the turn-out even though numbers were down from last year's event.

"The fair has gone well but poor weather and lack of national publicity has kept people away," he said. Last year's 20th anniversary was highly promoted worldwide.

More than 15 groups conducted activities and distributed literature about recycling, alternative energy methods, wildlife and other environmental concerns:

Project Release, a wildlife rehabilitation center in Manhattan, featured a live screech owl named Otus in its display.

Migrants' protection failing

Chavez addresses workers concerns

JIM STRUBER Staff Reporter

Cesar Chavez, founder and president of the United Farm Workers, addressed migrant workers' concerns as the keynote speaker Friday afternoon for Hispanic Awareness Month. At least 550 K-State students, administrators, faculty and Manhattan residents attended the lecture in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

President Jon Wefald welcomed Chavez to K-State and commended him and the UFW for their many triumphs for farm workers in America.

Chavez said table grapes and other agricultural products grown in the fertile agricultural regions of the United States are sprayed with excessive amounts of pesticides. This can lead to many health problems for the migrant farm workers and the consumers who buy the products.

"We want desperately to believe the government is protecting us," Chavez said.

Chavez said the Food and Drug Administration and the Environmental Protection Agency do very little to protect people from the effects of pesticides.

He said the Food and Drug Administration has agents inspecting food crossing the border from Mexico into Arizona from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. "Ninety percent of the food comes in after 5 o'clock and on weekends when they're not there," Chavez said.

Cesar Chavez, president of United Farm Workers, delivers a lecture to about 550 people in Forum Hall in the K-State Union Friday.

Chavez said the EPA sets the tolerance level for Captan, a pesticide often used on grapes and banned in Germany, at 50 parts per million.

"The most the human body can resist is five parts per million," he

"The EPA made a big announcement two years ago to ban the use of Captan in 39 crops," Chavez said. "Those 39 crops use less than 5 percent of all the Captan. Where the Captan is really used - in grapes and grains - they leave it

"That's cheating. It's lying to the public and these are our own federal agents. They do that all the time," he said.

"Today we ask you not to buy anything that looks like a grape," Chavez said.

Chavez said the struggle against the use of pesticides started in the mid-1950s against the pesticide

DDT and the other pesticides were harming the immigrant farm workers and the wildlife. The United States banned the use of DDT and related poisons in 1970, primarily through public action.

The policy of the UFW is to make people aware of the hazards of pesticides. 'Our cause is not a burning issue," he said. "When there is debate, they always draw upon the risks vs. the benefits. We take the risks, and they get the benefits." He said there are "cancer clusters" in California near many of the growing regions. The town of Mc Farland, Calif., has a cancer rate 800 percent higher than the national average for children 4-12 years old. There is one city block in the town where every household has a child stricken with cancer or death. "Many of these areas have cancer rates much higher than the national average," he said.

The audience responded to Chavez with a standing ovation. Jodell Lamer, Collegian reporter, contributed to this story.

Tuition hike eases budget preparation

increase in '93

CHRISSY VENDEL Collegian Reporter

The tuition increase passed by the Kansas Board of Regents Thursday should make Legislative negotiations easier for the regents budget. Legislators from both the House and Senate form the conference committee, and its purpose is to iron out the differences between the two houses' budget recommendations.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said, the House version incorporated a tuition increase, but the Senate did not, or at least not to the same magnitude.

"If the regents would have dug in their feet and not raised tuition, it would be more of a battle in committee," she said. Hochhauser said more than likely, a tuition increase will be included in the final budget package, especially since the regents have already increased tuition. "I am pleased the amount of tuition increase in the final package isn't as high as the original version,'

Sue Peterson, assistant to President Jon Wefald, said the regents' action is a positive sign for the Legislature. "I think the Legislature had pretty much agreed a tuition increase was the route to take, and the regents went ahead and did it," she said.

Peterson said the Legislature

GREGORY A. BRANSON/Colleg thought regent institutions' students were getting a good education at a reasonable rate. Wefald agreed. "K-State and KU are still two of the best deals in America today, even with the tuition increase," he said.

Wefald said tuition is something that must be looked at relatively.

"We're still a very low-tuition state," he said. Hochhauser said she was cononly included a raise for fiscal year 1992, but also 1993.

"That would be an 18-percent increase in two years. That's a lot," she Hochhauser said although the regents are the final policy making body, she would want to closely study this second increase.

"The Legislature has the power to put pressure on now and again, and I would want to take a hard look at that cerned the regents' tuition hike not increase," she said.

U.S. to set up MIA office in Hanoi

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The United States and Vietnam have agreed to set up a U.S. office in Hanoi to speed the search for American servicemen still missing from the Vietnam War, the countries said in a statement.

The move could help pave the way for formal U.S. recognition of the Communist government in Hanoi.

The agreement came during a visit to the Vietnamese capital by special presidential envoy Gen. John Vessey, who met with Vietnamese Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach last week.

A joint statement said the two sides agreed to set up an office in Hanoi on a temporary basis. The statement, dated Saturday, was carried by the Vietnam News Agency and made available by a Western embassy in Bangkok Sunday.

It said the office would concentrate on improving joint field investigations, planning for joint searches and follow-ups on alleged sightings of Americans.

The issue of Americans missing in action has cast a shadow over U.S.-Vietnamese relations since the close of the Vietnam war. About 1,700 Americans are still listed as missing.

Election costs Kohl majority

BERLIN (AP) — Voters in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's home state Sunday knocked his party from power for the first time since World War II, in an election seen as a referendum on the embattled chancellor's policies.

The outcome of the election in Rhineland-Palatinate state should also cost Kohl's Christian Democrats their slim majority in the upper chamber of Parliament.

The election in the southwestern state was the first major vote since Kohl's center-right coalition won national elections in December.

Missile strike kills, injures about 1,000

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Searchers dug through debris Sunday, trying to unearth bodies after a missile strike on a crowded bazaar in eastern Afghanistan. Reports said up to 300 people were killed and 700 hurt.

At least two Soviet-made Scud missiles slammed into Asadabad, capital of Afghanistan's eastern Kunar province, late Saturday, said Qaribur Saeed, a spokesman for the radical Hezb-i-Islami, or party of Islam, guerrilla group.

Radio Kabul, the voice of Afghanistan's Communist government, monitored in Islamabad, was silent on the reported attack. It rarely acknowledges Scud strikes on guerrilla positions.

Pakistan's official news agency said 300 were killed and 700 were wounded in the attack. Another report from a pro-rebel Afghan agency said 100 people had died in the attack and several hundred were wounded.

Because of the town's inaccessibility, the claims could not be verified independently.

Saeed, the guerrilla spokesman, said about 150 shops were destroyed in the mountainous capital, about 120 miles northeast of Kabul.

Collapse of church roof kills 7

POMPIGNAN, France (AP) — The roofing on the nave of a church collapsed during a classical music concert, killing seven people, including two girls and the mayor of this southwestern village, officials said Sunday.

Thirteen people were injured in the accident Saturday night, officials said.

"It started with cracking sounds. People thought of an air current or a badly closed door," said Assistant Mayor Antonin Faucani, one of about 60 people who attended the violin and piano

The noise then increased and "sounded like an explosion," he said. "There were loud cries. I turned the lights on. And the sight was before me."

Officials were investigating the collapse.

NASA launches Star Wars mission

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA proceeded Sunday toward the launch of space shuttle Discovery's Star Wars mission despite a gloomy weather forecast that put the odds of liftoff Tuesday at worse than 50-50.

Discovery was scheduled to blast off at 7:05 a.m. EDT with seven astronauts and an assortment of Strategic Defense Initiative and Air Force instruments.

At midday Sunday, shuttle weatherman Ed Priselac said the chance for favorable weather at launch time was 30 percent, with only slight improvement later in the morning Tuesday. The forecast is somewhat better for a launch Wednesday or Thursday.

Man killed in police shooting

LAWRENCE (AP) — Police officers shot and killed an armed Lawrence man who had been distraught with personal problems, police said Sunday.

The victim was identified as 22-year-old Gregory Allen Sevier. Police said little about the circumstances. Officers were dispatched to a residence around 2:30 a.m. Sunday and told by the victim's family that he was anguished with personal problems.

The officers became involved in an armed confrontation with Sevier, who was killed, a police statement said.

The statement did not say whether Sevier fired a weapon.

Douglas County Attorney Jim Flory said the shooting was under investigation. He said a coroner's inquest would be conducted.

The two officers involved in the shooting were placed on administrative leave with pay during the investigation.

Police and Flory planned to release more information Monday

Owner seeks use of farm water system

SHANNAN SEELY

Agricultural Reporter

The Ponderosa Trailer Park, 3001 Tuttle Creek Boulevard, was recently notified that its drinking water is violating national standards for nitrate.

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment issued administrative orders to Ponderosa and 14 public water supplies in the state to take steps to correct violations, said Dave Waldo, chief of public water

"The 15 water supplies have been violating the nitrate standards for some time," he said. "It's been an ongoing problem."

The violations are between 10- to 20-milligrams-per-liter nitrates. The maximum contaminant level for nitrate is 10-milligrams-per-liter.

Although the orders do not contain fines or penalties, failure to comply with the time schedules could lead to assessment of civil penalties. The owner of Ponderosa Trailer Park, Joe Ellis, said the nitrate level usually runs about 9-milligrams-perliter and less than 13.5.

He said he disagrees with the law because he thinks the standard is set

A water supply is considered public when there are 10 or more residences.

The orders establish a timetable to correct the problem of the effected water supplies.

By Sept. 1, Ponderosa must submit an engineering report about how the problem will be solved. The problem must be corrected by October 1992.

Waldo said options include developing a new water source by drilling a well or purchasing another water supply.

Ellis would like to obtain water from the city, as he is about three with their system.

miles away from the city limits.

The college farms near him have city water and he is waiting on the farms' approval to let him hook up

"There are a number of other alternatives, but they are too costly," Ellis said. "I only have 3 acres, and I'd probably find the same levels if I drilled a new well."

Waldo said the orders were not issued earlier because the department was waiting for an Environmental Protection Agency decision. The EPA was considering raising the standard, but recently decided to maintain the present standard.

Ponderosa was required by law to tell its customers the water exceeds the nitrate level standard.

the nitrate level standard.

Constructing water treatment facilities is an expensive option.

Ellis said if his first plan does not work, he may consider the feasibility of water treatment.

"I have to do something," Ellis said. "Otherwise, I'll have to close my place up and take my lumps."

High nitrate levels are associated with infant cyanosis, also known as methemoglobinemia or blue baby disease.

Waldo said infants less than six months of age are especially susceptible because of underdeveloped digestive systems.

The nitrate may convert into nitrite and react with hemoglobin in the blood to form methemoglobin.

Methemoglobin will not carry oxygen, thus turning the babies' toes and fingers blue.

"They are literally starving for oxygen," Waldo said.

Blue baby disease is treatable by early detection and withdrawal of the contaminated water or food product.

SHARE, greeks team to help needy

MELANIE SCHOENBECK

Collegian Reporter

Scavenger hunters gathered everything including the kitchen sink this weekend.

In coordination with Greek Week, sororities and fraternities teamed up and conducted scavenger hunts to collect items for the Self-Help and Resource Exchange.

SHARE is a non-profit organization founded by the Flint Hills Junior Service League to collect, organize and distribute used clothing and household items to persons and families in the Manhattan area who need assistance.

The scavenger hunt came complete with a list of household items to collect.

Some items, like televisions and VCRs were placed on the list as a joke. The hunters brought in so many televisions and VCRs that the organization does not know what to do with them, said Todd Allenbrand, sophomore in business and a Greek Week coordinator.

"The project was good public relations for SHARE because all the students knew what they were gathering the merchandise for. We will be set for the summer with all of this," said Carol Kershaw, director of SHARE.

Kershaw said she was overwhelmed with the response of the community. She received several phone calls this week while the neighborhoods were being canvassed from friends saying how polite the hunters were.

"The greeks could not do a better project. I am overwhelmed, and I don't know what I am going to do with everything. It is absolutely amazing," Kershaw said.

Allenbrand said Greek Week was intended to be a philanthropic event.

"The purpose of the week, to me, was to portray greeks the way I see them. They are more of a philanthropic organization than anything. People seem to stereotype them as social organizations, but in essence the main objectives are more toward the community," Allenbrand said.

The general response from the community was that hunters should come back another day so residents could fill two truckloads, Allenbrand said.

Some greeks had the opportunity to see the scavenger hunt work go directly to families in need of items. Elverta Vassol, sophomore in pre-nursing, took advantage of the amount of merchandise taken to SHARE Friday afternoon. She said she thinks the project was positive publicity for the greeks.

"This is a godsend and a real blessing. I did have two beds and I have four kids. They were sleeping two on a bed. I got two beds, a television, pots and pans and a coffee maker. We have just been setting up again. This has been a real help for me and the community," Vassol said

About 800 pounds of food for the Flint Hills Breadbasket were also gathered, Kershaw said.

"Manhattan is an excellent giving community. That is how we function. We are a service program for people who need help from others in the community," Kershaw said.

Woodwind music performed

ANNE TATUM

Collegian Reporter

Woodwind instruments will generate Renaissance music at 8 tonight in All Faiths Chapel.

Sara Funkhouser, associate professor of music, said six faculty and staff members joined forces about five years ago and began playing the Renaissance period music.
"It's a performance of Renaissance music with Renaissance woodwind instruments and some singing," Funkhouser said. Funkhouser said the group also performs one weekend at the Renaissance Festival in Bonner Springs in the fall.

"It's nice to have an opportunity to play in the environment the music was intended to be played in," she said. "Originally, it was intended to be played outside."

Although they wear costumes of the period they perform at the festival, the musicians will be wearing modern, formal clothing tonight.

Lois Kuyper-Rushing, music cataloger at Farrell Library, is a member of the group. She has been playing the shawm and krumhorn, relatives of the oboe, for several years. Kuyper-Rushing also does many of the vocals for the group.

"A lot of the music is instrumental. We play on recorders and other various woodwinds from the Renaissance and Baroque periods," Kuyper-Rushing said. "The music is upbeat; however, there is every variance of mood.

"Songs are sung is German, Latin and some English," she said. "I like the literature and the music. It has character not found in modern music."

Kuyper-Rushing said there is an element of creativity in instrumentation.

This generation must slough off '60s legacy

esar Chavez spoke here last Friday. Jon Wefald delivered a weird introduction, in which he mentioned several times that Chavez had been affiliated with Bobby Kennedy. I sat in the back row and looked over at my cousin sitting next to me. "What the hell does that have to do with anything?" I asked.

'No idea," she said.

Here was one of the most important labor leaders since John Lwellyn Lewis and all Wefald could say was that he knew Bobby Kennedy? Hot damn, I wondered, when Jimmy Carter speaks here Friday, is Wefald going to introduce him as Billy's brother?

Bobby Kennedy. Timothy Leary. Malcom X. Jim Morrison. Huey Newton. Abbie Hoffman. John Lennon. These are some of the people whose names will forever be identified with the late 1960s. Go into a student ghetto, and one will find posters of them all over the walls. The poster sales in the K-State Union usually have an abundance of them. Admittedly, their faces can be seen in my house, too.

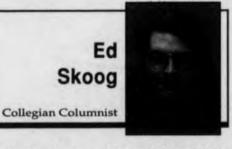

So, I guess it makes sense for Wefald to endow a less famous speaker with the mystique of a more famous cultural icon, but it was awfully condescending to both the audience and Chavez. But this all leads to bigger questions:

Why is the present college generation so charmed by the '60s? Why not the 1840s? What kind of strange legacy have the '60s provided? What was the real contribution of 60s culture?

This generation was born roughly between the Kennedy Assassination and Nixon's Resignation. Some parents were college-age or a little older at the time, but many more were part of the establishment so heavily targeted as evil by the radicals. My parents were active in the GOP at the time. To them, "The War" meant either Korea or World War II, not Vietnam. But the sense of the present college generation is that its cultural parents and legacy comes from the '60's sex, drugs and music culture.

In this century, it is simply assumed that children will rebel against their parents that one generation is usurped by the next. But the present college generation seems mostly content with its legacy. The heroes of the Vietnam era have become icons to Persian Gulf War-era students. Very odd.

It's all over the place, too. It's unavoidable. Oliver Stone's movie, "The Doors," lionized the excesses of lizard king Jim Morisson. It is politically incorrect to discuss Malcom X or Huey Newton as the loonies they may have been. People still take Yoko Ono seriously and Julian Lennon's albums actually make money. At the University of Kansas, thousands of students came to hear LSD hero Timothy Leary debate Watergate badguy G. Gordon Liddy; the crowd made no distinction between them and cheered both with fervor.

It seems to make no difference what a person from the '60s achieved, just that they were there. I think of the ticker-tape parades for astronauts and war heroes. That's what college campuses have become - celebrations of a party the celebrators weren't invited to. Thomas Pynchon described the '60s as a party in his book "Vineland," but also showed life was just as boring then - that people grew old anyway.

This generation has been taught since preschool to question authority. But what do we do now that the questioners have become the

Of course, we could give in. We could trust them when they say we don't need to question them because they did all the questioning already. Perhaps the country needs a period of acquiescence. History would confirm the backlash theory - that after great tumult, a formal feeling comes. Students of the year two decades of braggadocio, have made no 2525 would be able to say, "Ah, yes. See how the infidels were unable to continue the revolution? See how quickly stuffiness comes back into fashion? By 1995, they were all wearing paper collars and cufflinks again."

So what do we do, if we follow the provided example? We don't have to make new music, because all the great music has already been made by the Beatles. We don't have to write anything, because Richard Brautigan, Hunter Thompson and Robert Bly have written everything we need to know. We should just watch our televisions and be content or attend a few protest rallies, maybe, just to make them feel nostalgic. Register as democrats, but don't worry that the Democratic Party owns just as many suits as the other one. Don't smoke dope or take acid, because they've already tested the bounds of reality, and Leary and Carlos Castenada wrote about it for us.

But look closer. What lasting effect did the 60s really have on American culture?

People walked around looking constipated throughout the 1970s, then relaxed when Reagan came and told them how to feel. R. Emmet Tyrrell Jr., the editor-in-chief of the American Spectator, summed up the '60s perfectly in the May issue of his fine magazine.

"... A generation of radicals who, despite greater contribution to Western intellect than have the intellectual elites of Bulgaria (and I mean no disrespect to Bulgaria's eggheads; they did labor under certain impediments). The American radicals were oppressed only by their megalomania and swinishness. Their illuminati have created not one book admired anywhere by anyone but them. Aside from a few treatises on the public benefits of dope and zoo sex, the 1960s radicals have created nothing of lasting intellectual interest," Tyr-

How true. Despite loud voices, they didn't. do diddly-squat.

Except Bobby Kennedy, who made many advances in the field of wire tapping while monitoring the famous rascal, Martin Luther his college generation must take steps to avoid the hypocritical, nasty brutishness of its fossil heroes. Burn the Doors posters, make a funeral pyre out of tye-dyed underpants, apply gasoline liberally to Herbie the Love Bug and watch it all burn like a disco inferno. Stick around and watch a pheonix rise out of the

These people have no right to be in office, and Student Senate Chair Pete Marsh may be one of them.

Todd Heitschmidt, student body president, formed an ethics committee to investigate allegations of misconduct of the 1990 Senate Finance Committee. Heitschmidt specifically asked a Collegian reporter to cover the Wednesday meeting to avoid the appearance of a cover-up.

Apparently, Heitschmidt didn't tell Marsh the game

Marsh demanded that the reporter leave. He said he would not comment as long as a newspaper representative was present. He said quotes and facts would be twisted to make him look bad.

But Marsh needn't worry. He did that on his own.

Marsh stuck out his lower lip and pouted until reprimanded by an administrator.

When public officials demand This ethics committee member gave Marsh an impromptu lecture on the First Amendment and what it means to be a public official.

> When running for an office - whether it's the city commission, school board or Student Senate - individuals must realize that upon election, they are no longer individuals. They are part of a body working for its constituents. They are to leave personal grudges at home when they do their job.

> People have the right to know what their elected officials are doing. They have the right to attend meetings or to read about the meetings the next day. Without this information, they cannot make informed decisions at election

Most of all, they have the right to hear what senators are saying in their best interests.

Some may say the repression of information is not that bad. They say all public officials do it, but that doesn't make it right. And that doesn't make it acceptable.

This is in regards to Daniel Base' and Clinton Wolf's petition to ban the sale of Playboy and Penthouse magazine from the K-State Base and Wolf, would you please focus your energy and thoughts on something that is remotely important? It does not hurt anyone on campus, including women, to allow the sale of Playboy and Penthouse magazines in the Union Bookstore.

You state that the sole purpose of these magazines is to degrade women. Had the two of you taken a few minutes away from your job as our moral policemen, you would notice that only a small portion of each magazine is devoted to pictorials. The many articles in both magazines are written by some of the best authors in the world, who address important topics from a different perspective than most mainstream magazines.

If we are to ban the sale of Playboy and Penthouse, then let us ban everything we do not like. We could get big groups together in front of Anderson Hall and burn books and magazines that we all find offensive. Then, we could all go on with our daily lives of Paul Harvey radio shows and People magazine, and be much better people morally.

The bottom line, Base and Wolf, is that if you do not want to buy these magazines, then do not buy them. No one is forcing you to. But by banning certain materials, whether you think they are morally wrong or not, you are depriving me of my rights as a U.S.

That is not OK

Editor,

I share Phil Anderson's and Scott McKinney's outrage at the vindictive and unethical behavior exhibited by both the 1990 Finance Committee and the silent approval of that behavior by Student Senate. I remember because I was there. When I questioned those actions. I was told that "a couple of people on the Finance Committee have a personal thing about UFM." That was as far as I was able to get, but then I supported UFM. It amazes me that supposedly "everybody knew what was going on." Someone please define everybody."

What is most appalling about the whole mess is the "Oh well, that's politics" stance that has been taken by Student Senate. Since when is it OK for an elected public official to misuse the power of the office to further a personal vendetta? The actions taken by the Finance Committee were unethical and fundamentally dishonest. Who are we kidding? And every senator who knew and "passed by on the other side" and said nothing is equally culpable. Student Senate, and the Finance Committee in particular, have ethical and fiduciary responsibility to which they affirmed when they were sworn into office.

During last week's Landon Lecture, Bill Bradley remarked, "We can not lead (the world) by example if individuals refuse to take responsibility for their own actions or if government bureaucrats remain unaccountable for results.'

Student Senate has refused to be held accountable for its actions, and the actions of its members. They say it was "last year's senate," and that it doesn't matter since everybody got funded anyway. They say it's OK because "that's the way it is," and that's OK because "that's politics.

That's crap, and it's not OK. Dorothy Roberts graduate student in student counseling/personal services

Conflict continues in Nazi namecalling

Friday, two letters to the editor were dedicated to criticizing the exhibit displayed last Tuesday by the Palestinian Student Association. Both letters displayed wrong and misleading information that demands clarification.

First, David Margolies writes that he saw the exhibit and spoke with the students organizing it. With all due respect to Margolies, whom I know, I do not recall seeing him or speaking with him regarding the exhibit, and I never left the exhibit. He also says the display "was not historical, political or educational; it was hate-mongering and racist." On the contrary to his claims, the exhibit contained a portion on the historical background of the problem, and it exposed the Israeli policies against the Palestinians - the policies of mass punishment, home demolishing, torture and racism.

I invite him, and everybody who is concerned about the truth and human rights, to see the exhibit the next time it is displayed April 29, so he gets firsthand information ab-

Second, Yael Carmi and nine others claim "there is no Israeli attempt to exterminate Palestinians." I have a few questions I wish they would answer.

Why don't the Palestinians have the right to vote or choose their leader? Why does the Israeli government deport Palestinian community leaders outside the country? Why does the Israeli army destroy fields of olive trees, which are the only source of income for their owners?

Why does the Israeli government support building settlements on land owned by Palestinians? Why can Israeli civilian settlers carry personal weapons, while it is a major crime for Palestinians to carry even a pocket knife? Can they explain the following statistics without saying that the Israeli government is

In the past three years, more than 900 Palestinians have been killed by the Israeli army; more than 106,000 Palestinians have been injured; more than 1,700 houses have been demolished or sealed off; more than 97,000 trees have been uprooted; and about 9,000 days of curfew have been ordered over the Palestinians in different places. The list

Finally, although the claim that six million Jews were killed by the Nazis has been refuted by many reports, do we have to wait until an equivalent number of the Palestinians are killed by the Israelis to prove that the Israeli government is Nazi?

Education attracts funding through image Engineers slowly enhancement, asserting unique qualities

$3 million Total raised: $2,172,724

Although the College of Education has encountered many fundraising roadblocks, like the other colleges, they have managed to overcome them with planning.

Fund-raising was seen not as a luxury, but as a necessity for the college a few years ago, and now this philosophy is paying off, said Mike Holen, dean of the College of Education.

At the time this decision was made, Holen was an assistant dean who began coordinating the financial future of the college.

"In that capacity, (assistant dean) Mike was always responsible for the fund-raising of the college. Because of that, Mike has developed a lot of relationships with business and industry and also with individual alumni over the years," said Mark Moore, director of the Essential Edge Campaign.

"Mike has been very energetic and involved. He has really spent a lot of hours on the campaign, and I think the results show," Moore said.

The results are showing, as the College of Education has raised 72 percent of its $3-million goal. Most of those contributions haven't come from its own alumni, said Betty Johnson, KSU Foundation development officer for the College of Education.

"They are working a lot with national organizations and foundations. We have not been very successful in getting a lot of money from individuals," Johnson said. "We don't have a real good base to draw on."

"Groups and corporations get requests from colleges and universities from all over the country. So, to stand out, you really have to have something to sell and they've done a good job of selling themselves," said Rusty Andrews, assistant director of the Essential Edge Campaign.

The college has found areas where it has some things to offer that other colleges of education don't have, Andrews said.

He said the dean has done a good job of asserting the uniqueness of the College of Education at K-State.

That uniqueness has paid big dividends for the college. Holen has brought three national organization headquarters to K-State, Johnson said. Those organizations pay the college for serving as hosts to the different groups.

For example, the National Association of Academic Advisors has con-■ See EDUCATION, Page 12

The College of Engineering, despite numerous resources, has raised only 60 percent of its goal, and that may be attributed to having the largest goal of any project in the Essential Edge Campaign - $18 million.

"We've got such a large goal," said Don Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering. "I'm not sure how we got that goal. My goal would have been more like $10 million. I had nothing to do with it; it's not my Rathbone said it was the goalsetting process he was involved in.

"We made a list of our needs. The Foundation took and made the final decision based on those needs. guess I was part of the process, but I certainly wasn't the one who selected that final number. I don't know why mine is so high," he said.

"Your needs and what you feel you can raise aren't always the same. I need more than $18 million if you ask me," Rathbone said.

"I'm working. We're going out. If it doesn't work, I know where a lot of the responsibility will be placed," Rathbone said.

Scott Scrogin, KSU Foundation

development officer for the College of Engineering, said, "The $18-million goal is certainly aggressive and will be a challenge to obtain. But, with the dean's constituent work, the Foundation's efforts and my full-time work on the project, I hope, and expect to, obtain the goal."

'I wouldn't have taken the job if we weren't going to reach the goal," Scrogin said.

Those resources include individuals and corporations that have been associated with K-State engineering for a long time, as well as some new prospects.

Essential Edge Campaign Director Mark Moore said Rathbone's Engineering Hall of Fame alumni recognition program is an example of constituent development.

"He inducts 10-12 individuals annually to the Engineering Hall of Fame at K-State," Moore said. "It's been a tremendous way of strengthening relationships between affluent alumni and the College of Engineering. And that has had a direct result on the success of the fund-raising."

Equally as vital to the college's attempt to raise $18 million is corporate relationships.

"Dean Rathbone has been working since he got here developing strong relationships with their corporate sponsors. That is a major reason for the success of the College of Engi-■ See ENGINEER, Page 12

Relay teams lift 'Cats in KU

J. KYLE WYATT/Staff

Wildcat Verida Walter pulls ahead of her competition in the women's 100-meter hurdles Saturday morning. Walter finished fourth in her race with a time of 14.20. The 66th Annual Kansas Relays opened last Wednesday and concluded during the weekend.

K-State's Todd Trask clears the water hurdle in the men's steeplechase Saturday afternoon in the KU Relays at Hershberger Track in Memorial Stadium. Trask finished fourth with a time of 9:03.27.

Men capture 4-mile, 880; Greene stars

JENIFER SCHEIBLER

Sports Reporter

The K-State men's and women's track teams found relay heaven at the Kansas Relays in Lawrence this past weekend.

The Wildcats placed in the top three in seven relay events.

The primary reign on the baton took place Friday when the men were victorious in both the fourmile and the 880-yard relays, and the women in the sprint medley

The four-mile team of Todd Trask, David Warders, Phil Byrne and Jason Goertzen outpaced the Kansas Jayhawks to win the gold in a time of 16:51.20.

Sprinters Ernest Greene, Thomas Randolph, Tyrone Watkins and Corey King combined in the 880-yard relay to produce a winning time of 1:25.12.

Verida Walter, Trish Joyner, Markeya Jones and Nikki Green took first place over the reputable Barton County Community College team in the sprint medley relay with a time of 1:41.34.

Saturday, the tables were turned and Walter, Green, Jones and Joyner finished second to the Barton team in a time of 45.61, the best of the year for the team.

The men's mile relay team (King, Greene, Adrian Johnson and Watkins) ran their best time of the year (3:09.86) and placed second without the regular team members. The 440-yard relay team (Randolph, Watkins, Charles Armstead and Greene) placed second with a season-best time of 40.56 and the distance medley relay team (Byrne, King, Randy Helling and Goertzen) took third in 9:53.30.

A couple of 1-2 finishes also highlighted the weekend for the Wildcats.

Greene and Randolph swept the gold and silver in the 100-meter dash in times of 10:49 and 10:54, respectively.

Coach John Capriotti said he was pleased with the way Greene is performing at this point of the season.

'That was a great race and a nice 1-2 finish. Ernest is really starting to come on," he said.

Ranked OSU team takes 9-0 victory in women's tennis

TODD FERTIG Sports Reporter

Oklahoma State, the No. 9 tennis team in the nation, proved worthy of its billing by dominating the Wildcat lineup from top to bottom.

The Wildcats could manage to win just three games in the closest sets of the day as they fell to perennial Big Eight champion OSU 9-0 at home Sunday. The loss was K-State's fourth straight and dropped its conference record to 1-5.

OSU, meanwhile, holds a perfect mark in the conference and extended its winning streak to nine duals in a row. Since entering Big Eight play, OSU has dropped just two matches.

"It really wasn't a bad day on our part. They're just that good," Coach Steve Bietau said. "We played awfully hard, but I give credit to Oklahoma State for having a great team and for playing very well against us."

All but one singles match saw the visitors blank K-State in at least one set. The Wildcats also continued to struggle in doubles, losing all three matches for the fourth straight

Monika Waniek, OSU's No. 1 player, who struggled to hold off K-State's Michele Riniker 7-5, 6-3 earlier this season, handed Riniker her most decisive loss of the season 6-0,

Last year's Big Eight runner up in No. 1 singles, Waniek teamed with Wendy Parker at No. 1 doubles for the first time this season and beat Riniker and Thresa Burcham 6-0, 6-2. Waniek's doubles mate throughout the season, Jackie Booth, was unable to play Sunday. Waniek and Booth hold a mark of 14-3 on the year and are rated No. 6 in the nation.

Angie Gover lost to Parker in the closest singles match of the day 6-2, 6-3 for only her second loss since the start of the conference season. Gover falls to 12-7 and 4-2 on the year.

The K-State squad returns to the courts at L.P. Washburn Recreational Area at 1:00 this afternoon to take on an Oklahoma Sooner team that is battling to keep pace with the University of Kansas for the No. 2 spot in the conference.

The Sooners have finished second behind OSU for the past two seasons. Bietau said that although the Sooners lost several key members from last year's team, they have continued to play at a very high level this year.

They have a great tradition at Oklahoma, and though they have a lot of new faces for this season, their results show that they're still playing at that same level," Bietau said.

Oklahoma is 12-9 this spring and 3-1 in the conference, but was blanked by OSU earlier this month. The Sooners have swept their last three opponents, including Colorado, since the loss to their interstate rivals.

"I hope we carry something over from today's meet," Bietau said after Sunday's loss. "It can really be frustrating to work hard and not get better results. We hope to continue the kind of effort we're making."

Stacey Bullman brought a record of 24-6 and a ranking of No. 81 in the nation into the weekend for Oklahoma. Bullman is 10-4 at No. 1 singles in the spring and will probably fill the spot today against Riniker.

Intramurals showcase for talents of students

Season winds down with 78 points. The Pikes were led by with weekend meet

DAN WICKER Sports Reporter

The K-State intramural season is winding down. This past weekend, the final large event was completed in the form of running, jumping and throwing.

While the K-State scholarship track athletes were competing in the 66th Annual Kansas Relays, the students of K-State were showcasing their talents at the R.V. Christian Track.

Although the caliber of athlete, the times and distances didn't come close to matching those of the Kansas Relays, the meet provided an excitement of its own.

"It turned out to be a pretty nice day on Saturday," said Steve Martini, director of intramurals. "I think we even had more entries in the fraternity division than in the past, and we had to add some more heats."

The overall success of the meet was shown by the dedication of the competitiors. Cold and windy conditions Thursday and Friday afternoons helped slow times, but most students still managed to show up and compete.

"I thought it went really well, especially with the weather as bad as it was. On Thursday and Friday, it was really cold and windy out there," Martini said. "There was only the typical amount of no-shows. I was surprised how many people braved the cold weather.'

In the fraternity division, Pi Kappa Alpha was crowned the champion with 82 points, followed by Sigma Chi with 79 and Tau Kappa Epsilon long-distance runner Kevin Lashley, who picked up a pair of victories in the 1,500- and 3,000-meters.

The Pikes also took a second in the 400-meter relay, and Toby Hankenson and Chad Joachums finished fourth and fifth in the long jump. The only other double winner in the division was Tracy Bollig for the Tekes, who captured the 100- and 200-meter

The residence hall division was dominated by Marlatt. Marlatt 5 and Marlatt 3 finished first and second with 82 and 72 points, respectively. Haymaker 8 finished in third with 59 points. Bill Came helped Marlatt 5 to the title by winning the high jump, placing fourth in the 100-meter and running a leg on the third place 400-meter relay team.

The only double winner in the residence hall division was Randy Tenbrink of Haymaker 2, who captured the 100-meter and the long jump.

The independent division proved to be the closest race, with the Falcons edging out the Teke indpendents and Smith House by only one point. The Falcons scored 48 points. They were led by double T-shirt winner Greg Phillips in the 400- and 800-meters and John Steenbock, who won the long jump and placed second in the 200-meter.

Gamma Phi Beta won the women's division with the largest margin of victory of any division. The G-Phis tallied 86 points to Kappa Alpha Theta's 72 and the Woo's 70 points.

The G-Phi's were led by three individuals. Jana McKee won the 200and 400-meters and placed second in the 100-meter. Kellie Parke captured the 50-meter and long jump titles, and Angie Dunshee went second in the 800-meter and third in the 3,000-meter.

Bodybuilders pump up for 1991 championships

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

It was a night when dreams were realized and made real after hours and hours of hard work and dedication.

McCain Auditorium was the site of the 1991 Big Eight Bodybuilding Championships, and the crowd came away — clap once — pumped up.

The about 600 or so on hand to see the contest acted if they were seeing the Mr. Olympia contest, with hoots and hollers for their favorite contestants.

However, the contestants themselves felt they had already won. Several of the contestants were first time entrants into this kind of competition, and the nerves were alive in all of them.

One of the men's lightweight competitors, before he got on stage, kept saying that if he didn't get on stage soon, he felt like vomiting from nervousness

Others, though, were able to put the nerves on hold and able to focus on the task at hand. That was even if they had no original intention of doing it.

"Well, I had to be talked into doing this," said Rachel Cunnick, a K-State graduate who plans to return this fall to obtain a master's in exercise science. "I work out and I believe in keeping in shape, but I didn't think I would get into competitions like

For most, though, it was a beginning in sports that lead them into the bodybuilding lifestyle.

The women's overall champion, Tammy Shoults from St. Louis, said it was something to do after her gymnastics career was finished in high school.

"This all got started with gymnastics in high school," she said. "But, I needed to get stronger to do some of the moves required for the uneven bars. After high school, though, I just kept on lifting weights and have done it ever since.

Shoults said she is looking to take a layoff in the coming years to get started on a family and pay more attention to her job. This just takes so much time and effort and commitment," Shoults said. "I just need to get back to the important things in my life.' Another contestant who expressed an interest in a layoff was Sarah Hamilton. Hamilton, junior in music appreciation, has finished second two years running and said she feels the time demands of school as a major factor in cutting down on competitions. "I did this last year and I was second then," Hamilton said with much shagrin. "This year I finished second again. Two times a bridesmaid. It makes it kind of tough to keep going

"I'm thinking about doing it next year," she added. "But I'll have a heavy class load, and we'll just have to see how it goes with all the commitments I have to keep up on." One person who showed no signs of laying off was guest poser Alq Gurley. "It's really neat seeing guys just built to the hilt," he said of his career as a pro bodybuilder. "Plus the overall appeal of seeing the human body or what it can be is incredible. This is what the human body can do. Now, let's see if we can do more.' Gurley, like some of the others, got his start by wanting to improve in

"When I was in high school, I was having trouble making the track Gurley said. "So one of the coaches pulled me aside and talked to me about lifting weights during the off season to build up strength and endurance.

"Then my senior year, I made the track team and was a city all-star in track," he added. "And, as some people say, the rest is muscle history. A lot of that can be attributed to the weight training. It also built up my self-esteem. It's been a very positive endeavor."

Gurley said he never really expected this kind of success at all, but when he saw his first national meet in Atlantic City, N.J., he knew it was what he wanted to do.

"From that point on, I've been training to be world-class, and by the grace of God and with the support of my friends and mom and dad, I'm getting there," he said.

Cowboys make Maryland 1st draft choice

By the Associated Press

NEW YORK - Once the Rocket lifted off to Canada, the NFL draft turned into a defensive drama.

The first six picks Sunday were defensive players, with Miami tackle Russell Maryland being the No. 1 overall pick by the Dallas Cowboys.

Such a strong run was made on defense that 300-pound lineman Eric Swann, who never played a down in college, was the No. 6 overall pick by the Phoenix Cardinals, who have a reputation for making surprise firstround picks.

The most notable offensive pick came late in the round, when the Los Angeles Raiders, picking 24th; chose controversial quarterback Todd Marinovich of Southern Cal. The USC sophomore was arrested earlier this year on drug possession charges.

There were six deals in the first round and Dallas was involved in three, using picks obtained in deals the last two years for Herschel Walker and Steve Walsh for

In fact, the 17th overall pick belonged to four different teams at one point - Hous on, New England, Dallas and Washington, the team that finally used it.

The Cowboys, who had traded for the first pick with New England after the Patriots were unable to sign Rocket Ismail, took the 265-pound Maryland, the Outland Trophy winner considered small in an era of 300-pounders. He reportedly signed a four-year contract worth $1.5

Ismail, on the other hand, signed for a reported $26.2 million in four years with the Toronto Argonauts of

Moreover, no more than the first three picks had ever been used for defense, and UCLA safety Eric Turner's selection by the Cleveland Browns was the highest any defensive back had been chosen since Gary Glick was the first pick overall by Pittsburgh in 1956.

All in all, it was a bizarre draft, starting with Ismael's defection.

'Nobody could anticipate any of that," said Rams coach John Robinson, who expected to get Maryland with the No. 5 pick instead of getting Notre Dame cornerback Todd Lyght.

Jimmy Johnson, the Cowboys' coach, coached Maryland his first two seasons in college and was the only major-college coach to offer him a scholarship.

Johnson, meanwhile, said Maryland was the player the Cowboys wanted all along when they obtained the No. 1 pick Friday in a trade with New England.

Chiefs nab running back from LSU with pick

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Harvey Williams, a running back from Louisiana State who got acquainted with Kansas City coaches while playing for them in the Senior Bowl, was the Chiefs' top pick Sunday in the NFL draft.

Williams, 6-feet-2 and 216 pounds, had a detrimental knee injury in 1987, but convinced the Chiefs he was fully recovered and ready to join what could be a crowded stable of running backs that includes Christian Okoye and Barry Word.

"We had the opportunity to and Word, who emerged last year to spend almost a week with him at the gain more than 1,000 yards and Senior Bowl," general manager Carl Peterson said. "We are all very, very high on him."

In the Senior Bowl, Williams rushed six times for 44 yards and caught two passes for 29 yards and a touchdown. He also returned five kickoffs for 126 yards.

When we got involved with him down at the Senior Bowl we were very impressed with his athletic ability," coach Marty Schottenheimer said.

The Chiefs already have Okoye, the 1989 NFL rushing champion, help push Kansas City into the playoffs for only the second time since 1971. But the offense was hampered by the inability of Okoye and Word to develop into depend-able receivers, a skill Williams has in abundance.

"He's got very good hands as a receiver," Schottenheimer said. "And top speed. He's clocked below 4.5 (in the 40-yard dash). We think he can bring a different dimension to our offense."

The native of Hempstead, Texas, gained 953 yards on 205 carries last year and scored seven touchdowns. He also caught 15 passes for 152 yards and one score. Following the 1987 season, he underwent reconstructive surgery on his left knee and sat out 1988 as a medical redshirt.

"I messed my knee up back in 87. What was it, three years ago? It's old news," Williams said. "It's never been a problem these last couple of years. I'm healthy and I'm ready to play some football."

Williams ranks third on LSU's all-time rushing chart with 2,862 yards and was a first-team all-Southeastern Conference selection.

every time he touched the ball in college - an outlandish average that got him his outlandish salary.

"His numbers were totally out of our range," said Cowboys owner Jerry Jones.

After Maryland, who said "it's just like coming home," came a potpourri of players with some kind of deficiency in a draft in which most scouts had question marks about everyone.

Overall, two comerbacks and a safety were among the first five players taken, a rarity for what isn't normally considered an impact position. In fact, four of the first 10 were defensive backs.

Cleveland, drafting second, took the 210-pound Turner because new coach Bill Belichick wants hitters in his secondary; then Atlanta, which earlier had traded for cornerback Tim McKyer with Miami, took cornerback Bruce Pickens of Nebraska, one of the best pure covermen in the Then Denver took Pickens' teammate, linebacker Mike Croel and then took Lyght, a cornerback who had been expected to go second overall.

Then came Swann before Tampa Bay finally bucked the trend by picking Charles McRae, the 292-pound offensive tackle from Tennessee with the seventh choice.

"All I needed was one team to have faith in me," said Swann, who might have fallen all the way through the round if no one had been willing Philadelphia traded up with Green Bay and took McRae's Tennessee bookend, 305-pound Antone Davis to bolster a shaky offensive line. The Packers got Philadelphia's pick, the 19th overall and the Eagles' first pick next year.

Detroit followed with the first skill player, 11th overall, and took Herman Moore, the 6-4 Virginia receiver.

That started a run on wide

After New England chose USC tackle Pat Harlow, Dallas - with the second of its three picks - took Vols wide receiver Alvin Harper.

The K-State women's golf team continues its collision course with history today and tomorrow as the linksters travel to Lincoln, Neb., for the Husker Spring Classic. The fiveteam meet is scheduled for 36 holes today and 18 holes Tuesday.

The ladies have been cellardwellers for so long that even those related to the program aren't sure if the team's history includes anything but basement finishes.

However, from the early-season performances, it would appear that a marked improvement could be in store for the Wildcats when they journey to Columbia, Mo., next Monday for the Big Eight Championships.

"The new golf rankings are out, and our position has improved remarkably since last fall, not to mention from last season," said assistant coach Mark Elliott.

The Husker Spring Classic will be another golden opportunity for the women to add more evidence to their step forward. The five-team field includes Big Eight rivals Iowa State and Nebraska. Also competing will be district opponents New Mexico and Wyoming.

"We have been competing against Iowa State and Nebraska all season,' Elliott said. "If we play like we're capable of playing, we should beat those schools.'

The matchups against the district foes are crucial, considering the fact that the district ratings determine which teams qualify for the journey to the national championships.

The team's brightest spot on the season thus far, sophomore Valerie Hahn, said she is hopeful she can maintain the performances that earned earned her Big Eight-Golferof-the-Month in the season's open-

"I'm playing as well as I have all season," Hahn said. "I'd really like to win this meet."

Baseball team drops 2 of 3 to Illinois St. in weekend contests

Wilson stars vs. Redbirds

By the Collegian Staff

K-State, idle from Big Eight Conference play during the weekend, lost two of three road games to Missouri Valley Conference foe Illinois State.

The Wildcats wasted a solid offensive performance by Craig Wilson, who was 5-for-9 with two home runs in the series. The junior shortstop also scored five times.

Wilson homered in both games of a doubleheader Saturday, with his second round-tripper helping the 'Cats to a 7-3 win. Larry Peddy and Jeff Ryan added three hits each to give pitcher Tim Churchman his second win of the season. The Redbirds scored four unearned runs against K-State staff ace Kent Hipp to win Saturday's opener 6-5. The 'Cats gave Hipp a three-run cushion after two innings, but two errors allowed Illinois State to take a Sophomore Brian Culp tied the game with a solo home run in the top of the seventh. Illinois State's Brad James answered with a two-run blast in the bottom half of the inning for the game winner. James also hit two home runs in the doubleheader. Illinois State took the series with a 5-3 win Sunday behind a solid pitching performance from Andy Cottner. Cottner yielded just two hits, a tworun homer by Scott Stroth and an RBI double by Culp, in eight innings.

It was Cottner's longest outing of the season. K-State's Chris Hmielewski took the loss. Hmielewski, 4-4, surrendered four earned runs and struck out four in 51/3 innings. The 'Cats, 27-20 overall and 7-9 in Big Eight action, will play a makeup game at Creighton Tuesday.

Holyfield outlasts Foreman Morrison beats Soviet ### in battle on undercard 27-0 with 23 knockouts.

It was almost too good to be true. It was USA vs. USSR in what many viewed as the fight of the night.

And it happened Friday, the night that contained the "Battle of the Ages" between George Foreman and Evander Holyfield.

But it was a local heavyweight named Tommy Morrison, who played a boxer in the movie "Rocky ," who stole the show at a packed Bushwacker's at a closed-circuit showing of the events from Atlantic City, N.J.

Morrison remained unbeaten that night by stopping Yuri Vaulin of the Soviet Union in the fifth round at the Convention Center.

Morrison, however, was not impressive in running his record to Vaulin had the best of the first four rounds, rocking Morrison several times in the third and raising a mouse under his right eye. Midway through the fifth round,

Morrison landed a right to the ribs, and Vaulin turned away and went to the ropes, where he was given a standing eight-count. A short time later, Morrison landed another right to the ribs. Vaulin again grimaced, clutched his side and went to the ropes, and the referee stopped the match at 2:06 of the round.

Several times when Morrison did attempt a barage of punches, the crowd would start chanting, "USA! USA! USA!" In the fifth round — with Morrison clearly on his way to a victory

tance of 12 rounds.

Many members of the K-State administation could be seen at the closed-circuit viewing, rooting for the much older opponent of Holyfield. Included in that group were K-State basketball coach Dana Altman, Athletic Director Steve Miller and President Jon Wefald. Wefald might have gone out on a limb, but was close in predicting Foreman the winner.

"If you look at the record of the light heavyweights who have come up to the heavyweight ranks, it's not that good," Wefald said. "I've got to go with Foreman because of his size. I think he'll beat Holyfield in five." Foreman came close to that prediction as he rocked Holyfield around the canvas in the seventh round. Holyfield was able to back pedal and save himself from further damage. At that point, the pro-Foreman crowd started to rise to its feet and cheer louder than ever. It was the start of the eighth round, when they quickly saw their dreams of an old. overweight, bullish and bullheaded fighter give way to youth.

Holyfield won four of the last five rounds on skill, speed and stamina to retain his title.

All in all, though, young and old at Bushwacker's found themselves treated to a night that will last for ages in their minds.

Pay trails in survey

Riley County Police officers say their wage requests are being put on the back-burner and ignored.

Jay Mills, president of the Fraternal Order of Police, said the FOP took a wage survey last year of six different police agenices, which included agencies from Big 8 unversity towns and one from the Big 10.

Mills said results showed the Riley County Police Department has the lowest starting wage compared to the test population.

Three other surveys done by a committee with members from the Riley County Law Board, the RCPD and the state of Kansas all showed the RCPD 10 to 14 percent behind other agencies in wages.

A committee from the law board meet with the FOP about the wage problem. Together they developed a three-year plan to raise wages by 10 percent.

Included are national-cost-ofliving increases and percentage wage increases each year that would increase wages 10 percent, Mills said.

Near the end of last year, he said, the FOP discovered the RCPD had about $100,000 worth of funds left over, so they proposed the funds be used for wage increases.

used for wage increases.

The law board agreed to the proposal, and last year the department was given a 7-percent increase in pay, which included 4 percent coming from a cost-of-living increase and a 3-percent wage increase, Mills said.

The FOP was hoping the difference between the 7-percent raise and the 10-percent recommendation could be made up in fiscal years 1992 and 1993, he said. Now, however, proposals by the law board would include no cost-of-living increase and a 5-percent wage increase.

"We lose everything we've gained in bringing up wages," Mills said. Rich Seidler, city commissioner and chair of the law board, said the county and city knew this year would be a crunch year because of commitments both have to fund capital improvement projects.

He also said sales tax receipts are running 10 percent below last year.

"The police department has had hearty increases for the last couple years," Seidler said.

He said this year the law board wanted to look at a couple of proposals and see how they would affect the operation of the department.

"We are at no mandate to clear either of those budget proposals," Seidler said.

To meet increasing operational costs in some areas, the police department budgets in other areas will have to be decreased, Mills said.

One concern Mills has is the loss of officers. He said the department has a high turnover rate because officers find better paying jobs with more benefits.

Because of lack of funds, Mills said RCPD wouldn't be able to replace some of the people, and he is afraid the wages of the people who leave will be used for the deparatment's operational costs.

"A reduction of staff will mean a reduction in what we can do on the streets," he said.

Mills said the RCPD is one of, if not the best, rated police departments in the state of Kansas. He said the percent of cases solved is way above the national average.

There will be a law board meeting at noon April 26 at the Riley County Police Station when the law board and the officers will take a look at how the proposals will effect the department if implemented.

Hoop-Fest helps fund memorial

DARLA GOODMAN

The quiet of the Aggieville parking lot on Laramie Street behind Rusty's Outback was interrupted Saturday for three-on-three basketball action that raised more than $200 for the maintenance fund of the KSU Vietnam Veterans Memorial.

Hoop-Fest 1991, a basketball tournament sponsored by Arnold Air Society, an ROTC honorary; Silver Wings, a civilian service organization; and KQLA-FM 103.9, will be an annual event.

The 21 teams from Manhattan, Junction City and Fort Riley competed for the top prize of $150, championship T-shirts and a set of mirrors. The next five teams also received prizes worth at least $50 donated by the sponsors of the 30-feet by 40-feet courts chalked on the parking lot surface.

The five outdoor portable goals were donated by a company in Dorrance.

Shane Somers, freshman in business, put the winning team, "Big Dogs," together with friends he played with during high school in Salina.

He said he read about the tournament and called up his friends.

"I didn't think we had any chance of winning," Somers said.

Plans are already being made to expand the tournament next year.

Event coordinator Shane Coyne, junior in political science, said the sponsors are hoping to find corporate sponsorship for next year.

Coyne said they hope to get about 30 or 40 teams entered next year, and possibly add a women's division.

"I don't think we'll have to change too much as far as the format goes," Coyne said.

Éd Klimek, KQLA general manager, said he thought the tournament went well this year, and he is already looking forward to making it a bigger event next year.

KQLA donated more than $2,000 to the building of the memorial, and Klimek said they are involved in seeing that it continues to be maintained.

The maintenance fund for the memorial is used for the regular upkeep of the memorial, such as replacement of the flags and light bulbs.

Carol Lanier, sophomore in arts and sciences, takes her first of about 10 drops into a pool of water at the Dunk Tank after a Greek Week Carnival participant successfully hit the target with a ball. The previously undunked Lanier became a goal for throwers to see who could soak her first. The dunking tank was one of about eight activities all day Sunday in Weber Arena. The Twisters, a classic rock group, performed in the afternoon.

Goals, praise crucial in motivation of workers

DAVID PRITCHARD

Collegian Reporter

Communication is the most important factor in motivating employees, said members of a panel on employee motivation Friday in the Union Little Theater.

The discussion, entitled "Motivating Employees: Comparing Techniques Across Industries," featured Webb Garlinghouse, president of National Electronic Type; Robert Tate, manager of marketing projects for Kansas Power and Light; and Gary Walter, chief operating officer and vice president of Farm Bureau.

Walter started the discussion emphasizing the need for managers to develop a style, a special interest and an attitude about people.

"Every person is different, and you must learn to listen differently to each and every person," Walter said.

People also must have a clear understanding of what they are trying to accomplish and what they represent, Walter said.

"Nobody's satisfied where they are," he said. "They must have a career track and know where they're going in order to be motivated."

Many managers think their job is to catch people doing things wrong and to reprimand them, Walter said. "Managers should try to catch people doing things right and then praise them for it in public," he said.

"Praise is a public thing, but criticism is a private thing.' Walter referred to praising people in public as word wages. In order to motivate people, one must first understand the current said.

talks with each person," Tate said. KP&L also has group recognition dinners, and individual and group incentives to motivate its employees,

"We support them while they support us," Tate said.

Garlinghouse gave three primary ways to motivate employees: goals, a network of professional support and constant reminders of the

He said the goals that one sets must be "SMART" — specific, measurable, attainable, relevant and have a timetable.

"Without goals a person will ac-complish nothing," Garlinghouse said. "If I get in my car and have no goal or destination, I could end up anywhere."

Involving employees on all issues that pertain to the company and giving recognition copiously are two things Garlinghouse uses to motivate his employees.

Garlinghouse also stressed the need to find a mentor or role model for motivation.

"It's better to copy excellence instead of inventing mediocrity," he

Violence barriers Wendy Wilburn, assistant director of admissions, said she believed this freedom

Education crucial to ending prejudice

ULRIKE DAUER Collegian Reporter

It's part of the educational responsibilities of colleges to expose stu-dents to racial differences on campus. Wendy Wilburn, assistant director at the Interracial Coalition Building restrict Panel of the International Woman of Color Symposium Saturday in the K-State Union.

Wilburn said college reality challenges people coming in with their own ideas. Ideas being challenged may start a thinking process. With more hands on practice, values can begin to change, Wilburn said. Wilburn said the seed should be planted on a college campus, where there is a support of an intellectual

About 40 women and men of different nationalities came together to share their professional and personal experiences of violence and racial stereotypes against women in present and past, and to talk common strategies out of the circle of violence and Cultural differences make us rich and should be used to empower us instead of victimizing us, said Florea Davis, social worker at Kansas City Clinic Rockhill Medical Center.

Davis said women need first to nurture themselves to be able to give to others.

Many Jewish women survived the systematic dehumanization of the holocaust only because they could rely on the friendship and bonding of other women who were in the same situation, said Lillian Kremer, instructor of English, Women's Studies and American Ethnic Studies.

Kremer said solidarity and emotional support — the caring for each other - enhanced the chance for survival.

Kremer analyzed fictional and nonfictional texts, diaries, and testimonies written by women who survived the concentration camps in Nazi occupied Europe. These texts testify Jewish women developed an active spiritual, physical and psychological resistance.

The strength to bear the unbearable often came from the group bonding system," Kremer said.

She said today it is important to struggle consciously against the American tendency to homogenize.

She said it is better to acknowledge that everyone has unique experiences.

There are similarities of domestic violence along racial lines, said Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost for multicultural affairs, at the panel on Women of Color and the xperience of Violence.

Taylor-Archer said social support networks like extended families can often act as a buffer to reduce the rate of domestic violence.

She said that medical services are frequently sought in the case of violence occurring at home. Nabombe Silangwa, graduate student in food science, said not only men but also women are to be blamed for domestic violence, because their education is the main influence on their children. "We bring up our sons that way,"

"Lack of education plays a big part in domestic violence," said Maggie Rodrigues, child protection social worker in Kansas City.

Rodrigues said many women accept domestic violence as a way of

But once a woman is beaten, children are next, she said.

Rodrigues also said the churches do not react appropriately.

She said 95 percent of Hispanics are Catholics. Many Catholic priests tell women to stay with their violent husband and pray about it.

Rodrigues said there are very few shelters in the Midwest, and literally none of the shelters and services have Spanish-speaking staff for Hispanic

She said 500 shelters for all women in the United States are not

Cynthia Willis, assistant professor of psychology, said researchers recently defined police officers, military, professional sports and clergy as the most violent professions.

"Women of color are more blamed for domestic violence than white women," Willis said.

She said the more intimate a relationship becomes, the more the perception goes there to blame the woman for rape and spouse abuse instead of the man.

'Jack shall have Jill,' even in modern version of play

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reporter

The K-State Players present Shakespeare's midsummer comedy with great success, borrowing from the Greeks, 17th Century England and 20th Century United States. "A Midsummer Night's Dream" succeeds in outrageous comedy that is highlighted by using the ideals of humor from these three different ages.

Most obviously unique in the K-State Players' performance is their emphasis on the early 20th century. This time frame is subtly indicated both by the costumes the players wear and by their actions, especially in comedy.

The lovers, Hermia, played by Camille Diamond; Lysander, played by Kevin Kelly; Demetrius, played by Jason Harris; and Helena, played by Carrie Gilhousen, wear costumes that suggest Grecian apparel only within the confines of early 20th century fashion. The women wear long dresses, Helena wears tiny gold spec-

Concrete canoes compete on Tuttle

SEAN MORAN

Collegian Reporter

Civil engineers from around the Midwest traveled to Manhattan Saturday to compete in a concrete canoe race at Tuttle Creek State Park.

Nine schools and 13 canoes competed in the race. K-State finished fifth in the team standings, with the University of Kansas taking first followed by Arkansas State University. Kansas is now eligible to go on to national competition.

Along with the race, each team had to turn in a report describing its canoe's construction. Judges from the Kansas chapter of American Concrete Institute looked at each canoe and critiqued the report, a poster board display of the canoe and the finished canoe.

"We don't get too critical," judge Jim Frazier said. "We just go by the guidelines. The overall appearance of the canoe does weigh pretty heavy, though."

The competition was divided into four divisions: men's, women's, corec and faculty. Several heats were run Saturday morning and the top six times advanced to the finals later in the afternoon.

K-State didn't get off to a good start - in the first race, its canoe tipped over. Things did get better, however, with two teams placing in the top three.

Jill Kueker, senior in civil engineering, and Suzanne Spring, senior in civil engineering, placed second in the women's division, while Jeremy English, senior in civil engineering, and Lisa Schmid, junior in civil engineering, took third in the co-rec division.

Burt Murey and Jim Kohman, seniors in civil engineering, pull ashore the concrete canoe they designed and built after it sank in the first heet of the concrete canoe race at Tuttle Creek State Park Saturday morning. Nine schools participated in the race.

Facts emerge about case

Bushwacker's investigation continues

DAVID FRESE Staff Reporter

The Kansas Civil Rights Commission's investigation of Bushwacker's has yielded more evidence of discriminatory practices by the bar and the manager's reasons for those practices.

The incident in the report occurred in June 1989, when a group of Puerto Rican students went to the bar to celebrate San Juan Day, a holiday commemorating the baptism of Jesus Christ by John the Baptist.

Shortly after the celebration began back in June, signs reading "Fuck San Juan-The Management," were posted in Bushwacker's.

It was announced Monday that this case, originally scheduled to go to court April 29, has been moved back to May 3. The proceedings will take place in the Riley County Courthouse.

In the investigative report, the manager states that he wrote out the signs and posted them because he was mad at the Hispanics for arguing with him about having an unauthor-

He further stated San Juan was just a city to him, and he was unaware of any religious significance attached to it.

The complainant in the case, Luis Montaner, fourth year student in veterinary medicine, said he made arrangements with Bushwacker's for the party and to have special music played as part of the celebration.

The investigation report also states that an unnamed witness said when the DJ at the bar played the requested songs he said "Oh yeah, we have some Hispanics here to commemorate San Juan Day."

After the DJ played two or three of the requested songs, the investigation states, "The DJ suddenly said, 'Fuck San Juan.' A lot of people cheered, and the Respondent (Bushwacker's) started playing hard

The witness also stated that when the DJ yelled his comment "Most people on the dance floor were Hispanic, but after that they left."

The manager at that time, Rich Kriftewirth, said neither he nor anyone at the management level had authorized a San Juan Day party for the evening of June 23, 1989.

Kriftewirth said on the night of the incident he received about a half dozen complaints from other patrons about the DJ playing the songs requested by the Puerto Rican students.

"He said that he then instructed his DJ to stop playing the music because he had 200 other people who didn't like it, and this made the people having the celebration 'real furious," Kriftewirth states in the report.

Kriftewirth then states that he made the signs because he was angry because of the arguments and the shouting match that followed.

He also admits, in the report, that he used "very poor judgement, but questioned whether he discriminated because he let the Hispanics in the Respondent (Bushwacker's), played their music and did not ask them to leave.'

A Bushwacker's employee who witnessed the incident, however, said at another, somewhat unrelated, incident

Kriftewirth asked the owner. See CASE, Page 12

Landfill agreement expected in 6 weeks

Dickinson County serves as tentative site for new Riley County dump

BETSY HIDALGO

Collegian Reporter

In six weeks there will be an agreement made to build a new landfill to serve Riley County.

Dan Harden, Riley County Public Works director, said the new landfill will be publicly owned and easily accessible.

"The tenative site for the new landfill is Dickinson County, and it will also accomodate Riley, Geary and Morris counties," he said. "Com-able to take their trash to a transfer station where an 18-wheeler will transport it to the landfill site."

The Kansas Department of Health and Environment is putting the current landfill under closure because it is contaminating groundwater. The current landfill was constructed in 1963, Harden said, and the technology was not as advanced as it is today.

"It was poorly located because the land was cheap and the neighbors ar-mercial trucks or individuals will be ound the area were politically impotent, so they had no say," he said.

Even so, the Kansas Department of Health and Environment wants the present landfill closed by July of 1991. Rod Meredith, assistant director of public works, said the landfill has room for three and a half more years of use.

The current landfill is no longer accepting tires among many other

"The tires resurface, and they are a nuisance if there is a fire in the dump," Meredith said. "They are face cap is a soil material that has the also a harbor for insects and rodents."

The contaminant in the groundwater is called leachate. This is caused by any liquid that seeps through the waste and lining of the landfill down into the groundwater and aquifers, Meredith said.

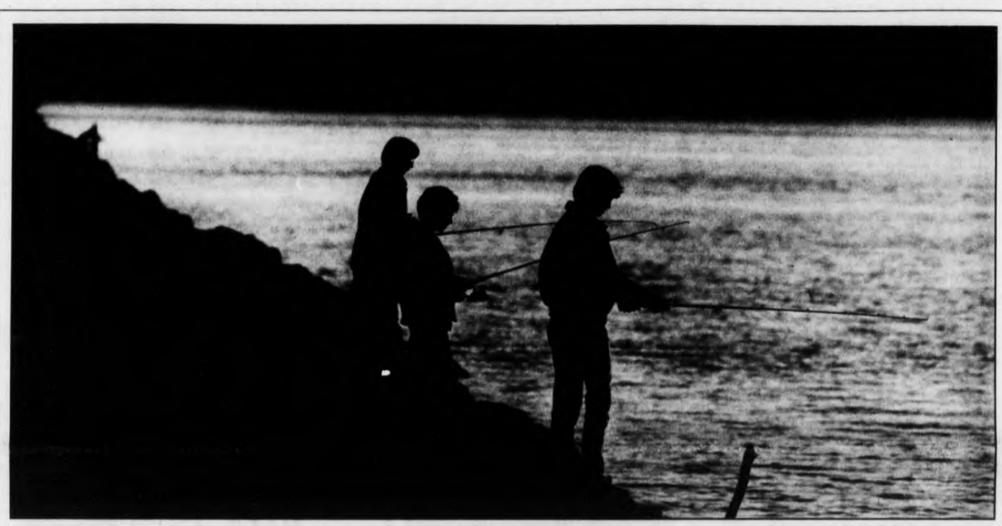

"The levels of linings vary in thickness, and all have a function,"

The bottom barrier is either clay or vinyl. Gravel is placed on top of that, and then the trash is put in. The sur- construct the liners, Harden said.

Bramlage spends time, Victim of explosion money for Carter's visit slowly improving

ANDREW CAPPS

Collegian Reporter

By the time former President Jimmy Carter delivers his Landon Lecture address Friday morning, Bramlage Coliseum employees will have spent more than three weeks preparing and more than $70,000 for equipment.

Charles Thomas, director of Bramlage, said this is the first time an event such as this has been in Bramlage, and the coliseum has been prepared for the lecture with the purchase a special curtain that will spread 312 feet across Bramlage.

The curtain, which cost about $70,000, will be used as a divider and backdrop for the lecture and for other special events.
"The curtain will allow us to further enhance the multi-purpose aspects of the building," Thomas

"It provides great flexibility in the type of shows we can do at Bramlage," said Jim Muller, assistant director. "It is an alternative to McCain Auditorium. It also gives us the ampitheatre type forum.'

The curtain was not purchased for the sole purpose of Carter's Lecture. It was actually part of the original 1988 Bramlage construction costs to the Middle East in Bramlage at and does not come out of the student's pocket. It arrived about three months ago from a company in Omaha, Neb.

The money was in an account specifically for the repair and replacement or improvement of equipment.

We've been looking for this curtain for about three years now," Thomas said. "This is something we've envisioned but never really got started."

With the help of the curtain, Bramlage is able to seat about 4,000 people compared to McCain's 1,800 seats. "Acoustically, Bramlage is ex-size," Thomas said. He said the Bramlage staff would work with McCain to bring some of the larger shows out to Bramlage. McCain is restricted to the shows it can produce due to the size of the tremely good for a building of this

"The curtain allows us to put on shows that the public wants to see," Thomas said. "I think we've proved that Bramlage is a multi-purpose building with basketball, concerts and technical shows - the curtain only adds more to it."

Carter will discuss issues related

10:30 a.m. Friday.

Carter will be the fifth U.S. president to speak at the Landon podium, following Richard Nixon in 1970, Gerald Ford in 1978, Ronald Reagan in 1982 and George Bush, then as vice president, in 1985.

Carter served as the 39th president

1977-81. Foreign policy accomplishments during Carter's administration include the Panama Canal treaties, the Camp David Accords, the peace treaty between Egypt and Israel, the SALT II treaty with the Soviet Union and the establishment of U.S. diplomatic relations with the People's Republic of China.

The lecture is open and free to the public. The coliseum doors will be open at 9:30 a.m., and free parking is available in the west coliseum parking lot.

Provost James Coffman said K-State faculty has the option of dismissing classes during the lecture to permit students to hear the former president speak.

Free shuttle buses for students and uests of the University will depart from the south doors of the K-State Union for Bramlage from 9:15 a.m.

Conditions are critical, but improving, for the employee injured in the explosion at Howie's recycling plant April 10.

Derek McMullen, a former K-State construction science student, was injured when an attempt to recycle Army scrap metal failed. McMullen was taken to the KU Medical Center's burn unit with second- and third-degree burns and shrapnel wounds.

A skin graft was done on his left leg April 16, but doctors say the burns on his chest, arms and hands are improving well enough that further skin grafting may be unneccessary, said Michelle McMullen, Derek McMullen's sister and freshman in elementary education.

Michelle McMullen said the burn unit is one large room where those patients with serious burns are placed furthest from the door. "He has moved up two spots since he got there, so he is improving," she said. Derek McMullen will probably remain in the burn center another four to six weeks, depending on the rate of improvement.

Due to the seriousness of the burns, Derek McMullen's environment must be completely sterile, Michelle McMullen said. This means visitors are only allowed if they are dressed in a gown, booties and a medical cap. Flowers are not allowed in the room.

"They only allow cards and letters in the burn ce :er," she said. They have allowed a few balloons in, but they generally don't allow flowers because of the chance of infection.' Michelle McMullen said they are giving him morphine for the pain, which causes him to dose off occasionally when someone is talking to him.

Todd McMullen, Derek McMullen's cousin and sophomore in physical education, said although they are allowing some visitors, they are restricting his visiting hours until the burns are more stable. He said sending cards and letters is the best way to show support.

He also said Derek McMullen is in good spirits and is looking and feeling better since the first week of the accident.

Weather could delay shuttle's launch as high winds threaten

By the Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. -The secret is out - there are no secrets about space shuttle Discovery's planned launch today for a military mission. And money's the reason.

NASA, hoping for a break in weather, pushed ahead for today's morning's launch of Discovery with seven astronauts and a Pentagon cargo worth more than $260 million. public scrutiny. Discovery is scheduled to blast off at 7:05 a.m. EDT.

Shuttle weather officers put the chance of liftoff at 50-50. The main concerns are low clouds, high winds and possible rain.

NASA planned to start fueling the shuttle late Monday.

It is the first Defense Department mission in shuttle history open to

The Pentagon expects to save $80 million a year by lifting secrecy around military shuttle flights. Much of the saving reflects the cost of secure computers and coding devices used on the secret missions.

Lt. Gen. Donald Cromer, commander of the Air Force Space Systems Division, said Monday the new openness eased preparation of Dis-covery's Star Wars mission. But, he said, "we do our job with or without classification.

Most of the eight-day, round-theclock mission will be devoted to research for the Strategic Defense Initiative, known as Star Wars. The intent is to "figure out what missile targets look like so we can protect the United States," said Michael Griffin, deputy of technology for SDI.

The crew, commanded by Michael Coats, will release a SDI spacecraft on their second day in orbit and operate it by remote control. Television cameras on the spacecraft will focus on the shuttle's exhaust plumes.

The spacecraft will be retrieved after 36 hours in orbit and placed back in the cargo bay for additional tests involving chemical and gas releases.

Discovery's other primary payload is a collection of scientific instruments. The five instruments will take infrared, ultraviolet and X-ray measurements of stars, the northern lights and the atmosphere.

Engineers investigate auto defects

WASHINGTON (AP) - Federal engineers are stepping up investigations of reported engine fires in some Cadillac DeVilles, one of which is blamed for a death, the government said Monday.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration said it also had upgraded an investigation of collapsing trunk lids on some Honda Accords.

Both probes were started as preliminary evaluations, which involve mostly paperwork, and reclassified as engineering analyses, in which auto parts are studied for possible defects.

The DeVille investigation involves 1990 and 1991 models, of which an estimated 64,000 are on the road. The agency has received four complaints of the engines bursting into flame, agency spokesman Tim Hurd said.

One of the fires is alleged to have caused a death, Hurd said.

COLUMBUS (AP) - Abandoned coal mines beneath Kansas 7 in Cherokee County that could give way with no warning are going to be repaired.

State Transportation Engineer Mike Lackey said at a news conference here Monday the Department of Transportation has received a $400,000 emergency grant from the federal government to begin immediately filling in mines that are in the worst condition.

Lackey said department engineers may have to develop a permanent solution to the problems along the 11-mile section of road north of Columbus. He said that could cost several million dollars.

As a precaution, the weight limit on K-7 from Columbus to the Cherokee-Crawford county line has been reduced to 15 tons.

WICHITA (AP) - City officials have said thanks but no thanks to an invitation to bid for the 1992 Miss USA pageant.

The city likely will exercise its option to stage the 1993 pageant, Mayor Bob Knight said. But for now, city officials want to concentrate on other priorities, such as downtown redevelopment, he said.

Joe Boyd, Convention and Visitors Bureau chief, said money had nothing to do with the decision.

Mobile, Ala., was supposed to have the 1992 pageant. But its Legislature and a university reneged on their financial commitments to the production. Mobile then withdrew.

Kremlin watchers question its future as Gorby weakens

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - U.S. officials are reluctantly concluding that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev's government is paralyzed, and the initiator of worldshaking reforms at home and abroad may not hold power much longer. Kremlin watchers in Washington are studying the most likely successors and considering what a post-Gorbachev Soviet Union may look like.

Gorbachev has enjoyed hearty support from President Bush, who made no secret of his hope that the Soviet leader would succeed. But Bush advisers and State Department analysts now say privately that Gorbachev appears unable to regain control of his fractious country, and his time may be running out.

One official, with long experience observing Soviet affairs, said the administration has received recent signals from various sources indicating Gorbachev is in serious trouble and is maneuvering furiously to protect his flanks and undercut the opposition.

"He's very much aware of the threat," the official said.

Administration officials are reluctant to comment openly about a subject as sensitive as Gorbachev's political survival, and those who spoke to the Associated Press did so only on the condition they remain anonymous.

The administration is attempting to broaden its contacts at all levels of the Soviet power structure, while trying not to under-mine Gorbachev, whom it still regards as a friend and a positive force for change.

"We are resisting the advice of critics who say we should wash our hands of Gorbachev," said one well-placed official. "We don't count him out."

Bush is pressing to settle a dispute over conventional force cuts in Europe and to complete work on a strategic arms reduction treaty while he still has a sympathetic counterpart in the Kremlin.

Sources say Bush eased his conditions for holding a summit before the end of June in hopes of meeting Gorbachev again, in part to assess for himself what is happening in the Kremlin.

One indication of the depth of Gorbachev's trouble came during former President Nixon's recent trip to Moscow.

Dimitri Simes of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, who accompanied Nixon, reported that KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov said he had to argue with Gorbachev too often.

That alone was an ominous sign, coming from the head of the secret police, but Simes recounted an even more intriguing followup.

"Just hours after our session with Kryuchkov, a senior KGB official requested a meeting with me," the Soviet affairs scholar wrote in an article for The Washington Post.

Threat of changes helps college

Reorganization motivates alumni to support human ecology following campus disagreement about closing of program

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

University reorganization may have helped rather than hampered the College of Human Ecology. The threat of losing the college may have served as a motivation for alumni to support the college.

'I do not think that reorganization has really impeded us," said Barbara Stowe, College of Human Ecology dean. "It is true that some people who are already supporting the college or have been contemplating it may have withdrawn, but I don't know that. I do know that others have said, 'I will make a contribution provided there continues to be a College of Human Ecology.'

Reorganization was halted when the campus erupted in disagreement and a outpouring of alumni support drenched the colleges.

A large effort was made to keep constituents informed about what was happening and find out if they thought it was a good idea, Stowe

"About 12,000 of them said it was bad idea in about 36 hours," she said.

"It didn't hurt our campaign, and indeed, it may have brought to people's attention the importance of supporting the college," Stowe said. "To my knowledge, we didn't have anyone that pulled back and said, 'No -I'm not going to contribute."

Gary Hellebust, the Foundation development officer for the College of Human Ecology, said he is confident the college will make its $4 million goal because of pending proposals of support from alumni and friends that have surfaced.

"It has been a slower process because they didn't have that broad constituency to start with. They had the numbers, but the awareness and the cultivation wasn't there," Hellebust said. "In fact, reorganization has helped because it really unified them," he said.

The college was also faced with an additional reorganization that it wasn't planning on.

'A setback, organizationally, was that Rick Harmon was our original chairman of the human ecology committee for the campaign, but he was named to the Board of Regents," Hellebust said. "We felt, and he felt there was a conflict of interest there so he stepped down. Christine Chalendar from Hays has stepped in and done a super job.

But, when you have a disruption like that, it doesn't help. That and reorganization have been the two bigger challenges.

After overcoming the University's reorganization and an internal reorganization, the college is putting to rest other theories, like the assertion that the college's primary graduates are not the breadwinners of the

"There has always been an undercurrent that many of the graduates of the college are female," said Rusty Andrews, Essential Edge Campaign assistant director. "But if you look at their committee members, many of them are also female and many are heads of major corporations, so that isn't going to hold back."

The largest project for human ecology is the facilities renovation and research equipment goal. The college has plans for three projects, Stowe said.

Add a wing to Justin Hall to provide space for Hotel and Restaurant Management and Food Product Development; new space is needed to support those areas.

- Link the Family Center and the Early Childhood Laboratory on Campus Creek Road with an additional structure; provide more research and office space for student project coordinators.

"We're going to continue to work with our alumni, faculty and students," Stowe said. "I do hope we will be able to complete at least one of those facilities projects. We probably will not be able to do all three of those within the time frame of the Essential Edge Campaign, but that would be highly significant in helping us reach our goal."

When the campus campaign begins next fall, the College of Human Ecology plans to focus on both faculty and students. The cultivation of campus support will be done with peer-to-peer consultation, Stowe

"Frankly, that's far more effective than if the dean says, 'well alright now contribute to this campaign," Stowe said.

"For the most part there will be some contributions," she said. "We have a very loyal faculty. The faculty and the students were a very significant factor in turning that reorganization proposal around. It was an inspiration to the dean to see how they felt about being in the college."

"I've worked at a number of universities, and I don't think I've ever worked at one where there was as much interest on the part of alumni as there is at this institution," Stowe

"People really feel a sense of ownership of their university and their alma mater. That's showing up, I think, in the support that's being provided even in some difficult financial times," she said.

'We could not exist as an institution if we didn't have private support," she said. "That's dire to have to think about, but that's the truth.'

Officials discuss waste

Bill may wait until next session

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - Kansas officials said Monday there is little chance the Legislature will take up, during its wrapup session, a bill Nebraska wants passed to change terms of the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact.

Sen. Ross Doyen, R-Concordia, chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, said he has heard nothing to persuade him to have his committee act on the bill during the wrapup, which begins Wednesday and is expected to last at least four days.

Jack Alexander, legislative liaison for Gov. Joan Finney who has been involved in discussions between Kansas and Nebraska on the issue, also said he can't see lawmakers taking time during the wrapup to consider the bill.

The legislatures of Nebraska and Arkansas passed bills to make the changes last month, while Kansas, Oklahoma and Arkansas still are studying legislation. Doyen said in an interview before the Legislature adjourned its regular 90-day session on April 13 that he wanted the bill held over for review in the 1992 session because he considered the changes sought by Nebraska officials to be major and perhaps to the disadvantage of the other four states in the compact.

That position drew criticism from Nebraska Gov. Ben Nelson who wants Nebraska to have greater representation than the other four states and wants Nebraska to decide what fees to charge for storing low-level nuclear waste at a repository to be built in extreme northeast Nebraska.

Nebraska also has proposed changes in the nine-year old compact that would subject its records to that state's open records law and establish a system of shared liability if any problems develop with the waste repository's operation.

Doyen said he has not talked with anyone in Nebraska about the Kansas bill. He said a Nebraska state senator did attempt to contact him, but they missed connections.

"I still think we ought to let it lay over this summer until we can see how it shakes out," said Doyen, who was in Topeka Monday for the start of Ways and Means Committee meetings on the omnibus appropriations bill, traditionally the last spending measure approved by the Legislature. "I just want some assurances that they're going to continue to meet these deadlines," Doyen added.

Alexander said efforts to get Nebraska and Kansas officials together for a meeting to air their differences failed largely because there wasn't enough time.

He said Kansas didn't receive the final version of what Nebraska wanted passed until March 27, when Kansas' regular session had only 10 days left to run.

"We certainly wouldn't recommend that they pass something just to be passing it.

Quiz determines next Manhattan landlords

hile walking across campus last to a K-State student. Do you? week, I happened to glance across Anderson Avenue. What I saw was a rundown house that had once been white but was now a color best described as dingy gray. The porch had col-lapsed, and the whole place looked a wreck.

My fellow columnnists would see this situation in different eyes. Becker would see the broken dreams that lay collapsed along with the porch. Meeks would probably blame it on the Reagan era. Skoog would blame it on the Democrats. Seabourn would make sure everyone knew the house collapsed on its own free will, and any imagined God had absolutely nothing to do with it. Dell'Antonia would probably relate it to something she had seen in Chicago.

I, however, didn't see the house through columnist's eyes. I saw it through the eyes of a Manhattan landlord. In other words, a nice two-bedroom apartment, close to campus, water and trash paid — $320 a month.

With that in mind, I hereby present The First Annual Shawn Bruce Quiz on How to be a Manhattan Landlord. Hope you enjoy it.

1.) A grandmother in Wamego dies leaving you a house in her will. You wish to rent it that, when dialed, rings the same place in Fiji

a. List the house as being within drivdistance

b. Offer the house as being "countryliving" at its best.

c. List the house as being within walking distance to campus. The students will just have to get up early.

2.) A foreign student, whose command of both the English language and the American monetary system isn't too good, wishes to rent an apartment from you. Do you? a. Explain slowly that the apartment $250 a month. b. Write down that the apartment is $250 a month.

c. Hire a translator to explain that the apartment is $450 a month.

3.) A student tenant asks for a phone number to reach you in case of a problem with the apartment. Do you? a. Give the tenant your home phone number to call any time there is a problem.

b. Give the tenant your office phone number to call between 9 and 5 during the 4.) A tenant actually manages to reach you and complains the toilet in the apartment is broken. Do you?

a. Immediately call a reputable handvman to fix it.

b. Immediately leave the office and go over to the apartment to see if you can fix the toilet.

c. Immediately call up "Fix-em-dude Bob" to go over and repair it knowing full well the only tool Bob owns is a ballpeen

5.) At a city commission meeting, a student speaks about the need for a rental inspection program. Do you?

c. Dousing him in gasoline, setting him alight and dumping him on the porch of your tenants who are always complaining about the lack of heat in their house.

b. Work with the tenant to find someone to take over the lease.

c. Laugh evilly and tell him by the time you're through with him, he'll wish he was the one who had died.

K-State Union

Recycling program in place, now attitudes must change

The K-State Union has picked up steam in its recycling program just in time for Earth Week.

Last week, Union workers added containers for the collection of aluminum cans to areas throughout the building, and all Union offices will be saving white, colored and computer paper to be recycled. Students are asked to return Collegians or other newspapers to the bins instead of throwing them away.

In June or July, the Union Food Service production will begin to do its part in recycling plastic, glass and tin products. It's about time.

Finally, one of the highest waste producers on campus is moving toward saving Mother Earth.

Let's hope it will continue, and that other departments on campus will continue efforts or even follow suit in recycling.

It is not just up to the Union or the campus to supply a place to throw a can away or to provide bins for newspapers, however. It is up to us to use

Unfortunately, we're not. Reportedly, students are mistaking the canisters as trash cans. The clearly marked "For Alumninum Cans Only" container was never intended as a place to dump styrofoam cups and napkins.

And, we continue to throw away newspapers, which are the easiest waste product to return or share with someone.

One Union director said the University is that hoping next year, with a new class of freshmen, there will be more awareness of the recycling program. A new attitude among students to use the available canisters and bins effectively is

We can only hope this attitude change will come sooner than next year. Union employees have adapted to preserving the environment. Why can't

WELL, GEORGE, IT'S A LITTLE SHORT

Banning magazines has no place in campus diversity

If K-State is truly a higherlearning institution, it will not withdraw Playboy and Penthouse magazines from the K-State Union Bookstore. Such magazines require the consumer to make a choice about values and morals - personal choices that cannot be dictated by a government or institution.

Values and morals are generally formed early in life and vary among individuals. Once students graduate from high school, they go on to an institute of higher learning - a university.

Universities encourage students to make their own choices after researching, analyzing and making judgements. Banning certain reading material, even what many people find offensive, denies students the chance to make that choice.

For the University or the Union Bookstore officials to decide what is suitable for students to buy or read is censorship. No culture or idea should be censored on a campus that claims to recognize and celebrate diversity among students, and that requires one to make room for even the offensive.

Once offensive magazines that degrade women, such as Playboy and Penthouse, are made available to be viewed for what they are, students will find them to be just that offensive.

But to take them off the shelves and pretend they don't exist when they can be purchased across the street at a convenience store only denies students the opportunity to make the choice not to purchase them.

New food groups, labels spell trouble for all health food nuts

knew I had fallen into the abyss when I found myself checking the fat content of a box of Fudge Stripe cookies. One doesn't, after all, eat cookies for their health value. You know, going in, that you should probably be eating a carrot or at least an apple. That's one of the reasons cookies taste so good.

I've never been on a diet, never eaten anything except exactly what I wanted to eat, but the health craze has finally caught up to me. Millions of people like me all over the world are forcing themselves to face the fact that eating a pound of Doritos doesn't simply make you gain a pound. That piece of logic just doesn't ring true in a health-crazed society. Somehow, a pound of chocolate chip cookies weighs more than a pound of lettuce, and my life will never be the same.

It all started a few weeks ago, when they took dairy, meat and bread out of the four food groups. I mean, to me, the four food groups have always been chips, chocolate, pizza and frozen foods, but I was willing to accept the old fruit, vegetables, meat and dairy products and starches thing as a working hypothesis. It worked; I could eat something from each group at least once a week, although not once a day, and consider myself to be at least making the effort. But now they've really messed me up.

The four new food groups are, basically: fruit; vegetables people eat, like corn; vegetables no one eats, like peas; and vegetables some people eat, like broccoli. It's something like that, anyway. All I know is that this isn't going to work for me.

In the old days, like last month, I could fix a pork chop and corn on the cob, have a roll, drink some milk and figure I'd had a relatively healthy meal. (Relatively when you consider that I consider a meal balanced if I eat both corn and potato chips.) I could have cereal and know that was a pretty decent breakfast, even though I didn't cut any fruit into it or add toast like they do in the picture on the box. Bread was good. Crackers were OK, and baked potatoes, hamburgers, cheese and beef jerky (all right, that may be stretching it, but you know what I mean) were too. All of those things I will eat, willingly and on regular basis. Life was good.

Now, suddenly, I am supposed to accept the idea the only really healthy foods are vegetables and fruit, most of which, if eaten in excess, can cause one difficulties in the bathroom. The only way I'll eat most vegetables is if they are smothered in dairy products like butter or cheese, or in the form of pizza sauce, which used to be part of a meal that included three food groups and now is doomed to holding only one. This depresses me. It is too late for me to learn to chow cheerfully on raw cauliflower or broccoli and regard meat as

I know what the powers that make these decisions are really saying. They're saying, "You're gonna die." I know there are people in the world (or at least in this country, where we are lucky enough to have a choice) who willingly live on nothing but the new four food groups. Apparently, we are going to try to create a whole generation of people like that. But right now, they're few and far between. All of the normal people are doomed.

So I guess I went bonkers. Cholesterol and fat were my enemies, and I would reduce them in my diet without changing my entire concept of eating - in other words, without giving up my favorite two food groups.

I bought "light" everything. Light Doritos, Light Ruffles, Sara Lee Light, Light Kraft Dressing, light bread ... the list goes on and on. I bought miniature cookies on the theory damn rice and popcorn cakes away.

that I wouldn't eat as many. If they made light candy bars I would have bought those, too. That's when I started reading labels.

Some light! The dressing and the desserts aren't bad, but light chips aren't worth the effort, and they don't taste as good. (I confess, I like them oily. Who doesn't?) As for the cookies, well, they got me off on a whole new tangent. Forty calories, 1 gram of fat per serving the label said. Not bad, right? Until you realize that a serving is five cookies. Cookies the size of your fingertip. Five of those cookies isn't a serving, it's a mouthful. Light Cool Whip has got to be the worst, though. They claim six calories a serving. Do you know what's a serving? A tablespoon. Now, what would you do with a tablespoon of Cool Whip? Put it on one strawberry? Skinny Dipping, they call it. Right. Do you know anyone who only eats one strawberry?

Then I started comparing labels. I'll eat what I want, I'll just buy the most nutritious (or least dangerous) kind. This worked well for about one row in the grocery store. Then I thought I'd buy pop-tarts, which say "nutritious" right on the box. Unfrosted, I thought, would be better. I checked. Frosted and unfrosted pop-tarts have the same labels. Same calories, fat, etc. How can this be possible?

It's not possible. Therefore, the labels are lying. And if I can't believe the labels, how can I believe the people who tell me which are the four basic food groups? Obviously, I can't. I can no longer believe anyone; they do not have my best interests at heart. They want to upset me, to give me an ulcer and ruin my digestion so I can't eat anything good at all.

ell, from here it's only a short step to the dangerous point where I begin believing it's all a plot against me. I conclude that I haven't had enough brain food lately. I'm going for pizza. Then I'm going to the store. But first, I'm going to throw those

Organization forms, adds music to K-State

MEREDITH JONES Collegian Reporter

A new organization is forming to bring Indian culture to K-State.

The organization is Society for the Promotion of Indian Classical Music and Culture Amongst Youth, or SPIC-MACAY (USA).

S.H. Venkat, graduate student in mechanical engineering, is active in obtaining a sub-chapter for K-State.

The organization is a non-profit organization, which organizes Indian music concerts and dance performances.

Venkat said SPIC-MACAY originated in India. The United States has its main office located in San Jose, Calif. and has chapters and subchapters all over the country.

There has been one concert already, and Venkat said another is scheduled for May 3 at Manhattan High School. Both concerts are sponsored by the International Coordinating Council at K-State.

South Indian classical music will feature a violin accompanied by an Indian drum called Mridangam.

Venkat said it will be interesting because the violin is being adapted to Indian music.

The music in South India is different from North India, Venkat said. The music in South India is called Carnatic, and the music in North India is called Hindustani.

"What we are expecting right now is generally interested people to come and sit in for the concert," Ven-

Many of the artists come from India, but Venkat said there are also Indian artists in the United States.

Community plans Earth Day celebration

By the Collegian Staff

Recycling bins have appeared in the K-State Union.

A program started last semester was implemented in January to be ready for Earth Week.

"We formed a committee last September that had a cross section of people who work in the Union," said Jack Connaughton, assistant director of the Union, "The committee is made up of six other members and myself, including a representative from SAVE.

"In January, we kicked off the cardboard box campaign," Con-naughton said, "We are having the bookstore, food service and the recreation area break down their boxes.

"Instead of putting them in the trash compactor, they are putting them in a seperate pile for a recycling company to pick up," he said. "We normally have the trash compactor dumped five times a month, and we have cut it down to only three times a month, so this has been a saving to the landfill and to us in expenses." The Union is saving aluminum cans, newspapers, computer paper the students have told me they think and white and colored paper at this it is great. e — a second stage is planned to people putting trash in the aluminum can receptacles.

The second stage of the program will add recycling of plastics, tin and glass. It will involve more of the food service and recreation area. Connaughton said.

"We haven't hired anyone else for the position of gathering and taking care of the recycling, but we probably will hire a part-time person to take care of the plastic, tin and glass in the next stage of the program," he Barb Depew, Union dietitian, said, "At this point, I am getting questions from employees about the amount of time they are supposed to spend breaking down the boxes.

"I am concerned about the safety factor of the second stage of the recycling program because I found out the glass has to be broken into small pieces, and the tin has to be smashed," she said. "I think because of the safety factor and the amount of time the recycling will take, another person should be hired.

"The feedback I have received has been from my employees about what they can and can't recycle," she said. 'It has been a educational process for our employees.'

Sharma Ray, member of SAVE, said, "People are just starting to notice the containers for the cans, but

For a number of years, Dillon's Stores have been reusing paper sacks, said Jim Peterson, store manager at the Westloop Dillon's. When customers bring in their old sacks to carry groceries, they receive a 5-cent discount for each sack used.

He said an increasing number of people are taking advantage of the discount and the canvas bags Dillon's has been selling for about a year, he said. The bags cost $2.99 and can be used for carrying groceries.

Dillon's also recycles other materials. Dillon's will pay for aluminum cans, Peterson said, and will also accept plastic milk containers and twoliter pop bottles.

Time constraints continue to plague 'Cat football team

Madden added to defensive unit

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

In the second week of spring practices, the K-State football team is struggling with time constraints due to recent NCAA regulation changes.

Forced to reduce the spring season to three weeks and the practice week to five days instead of four, the team is limited in the things it can accomplish in the season, Coach Bill Snyder said Monday.

"It plays havoc with our schedule. There's just not ample time to accomplish the things we need to,' Snyder said. "We're 40 percent of the way through the season, and we haven't done nearly 40 percent of the things we need to do.'

The team schedules Wednesdays and Sundays as days off. The limited number of days off the field could cause some problems of injury and fatigue, Snyder said.

"I think the players get a little sore and tired from the frequency of workouts because they don't have the recovery time we'd like to give them," Snyder said. "That's hard on them, but I think the players have been very understanding of the time problems we face and have been very patient and have worked very hard."

Several players are receiving a look as the coaches search to solidify the offensive backfield. With the graduation of leading rusher Pat Jackson, playing time in the predominately one-back offense is readily available.

Snyder listed finding a replacement for Jackson as one of his top concerns for the spring season. Jackson led the team with 721 yards and eight touchdowns rushing on his way to becoming the first player in K-State history to compile 1,000 yards rushing in a two-year career.

Two freshmen, Rod Schiller and Kitt Rawlings, lead the group returning to the backfield. Schiller carried 58 times last season to finish second on the squad in rushing with 195 yards. Rawlings added 80 yards on the ground and scored two Several players are expected to add support. Eric Gallon, who takes a second shot at his junior season after missing last year due to injury, moves from fullback to running back. Gallon starred in the spring game last year, rolling up 152 yards on 12 carries. As a sophomore, Gallon was the team's second-leading rusher and third-leading receiver.

J.J. Smith signed with K-State last year, but will join the squad for the first time this spring. Smith will be on scholarship as a freshman in the fall.

Senior Curtis Madden, the Wildcats' third-leading rusher last year, is practicing at defensive end this spring. Madden, the biggest back on the K-State roster at 6-0 and 225 pounds, will provide extra size and speed on the defensive side.

Madden joins starting linebacker Chris Patterson, who is also making the transition to defensive end this spring. Madden was listed second at fullback on the prospective spring depth chart behind Gallon.

"Curtis has a lot to offer athletically and we're short at the defensive end spot," Snyder said. "We felt like Curtis could make his best contribution at this position. He could give us a real strength and help us to fill in at a position we saw as a potential

Michele Riniker fought back from a 5-1 third-set deficit against Oklahoma Monday to earn a victory and tie the best conference finish of any Wildcat No. 1 player.

Riniker extended her Big Eight mark to 5-2 by beating OU's Stacey Bullman in one of K-State's two singles victories in its 7-2 loss to the visiting Sooners.

The Wildcats' loss dropped them to a 1-6 record and a seventh-place finish in the conference. Oklahoma ran its streak of consecutive wins to five and finished the season in second place in the Big Eight.

The other win for the Wildcats came at No. 5 singles, where Angie Gover matched Riniker's mark with a 5-2 conference record of her own. Gover beat Shea Hetherington 6-3, 6-7 (4-7), 6-1 to lift her season record to 13-7. Bietau said Gover's record comes as no surprise.

"Angie, for the past month, has played very solid tennis. Today was no different," Coach Steve Bietau

In the No. 1 match, after taking the first set in a 7-4 tie breaker, Riniker dropped the second 6-1 and fell quickly behind in the third. At 5-1, however, Riniker turned the match around and captured the last six games for the win.

"Bullman started attacking a lot more after the first set, and although the second was 6-1, it was still pretty close," Bietau said of Riniker's match. "Bullman was running off some games pretty quickly, and she went from losing the first set to winning the next 11 out of 13 (games).'

Bietau noted the significance of the come-from-behind wins Riniker recorded Monday and against Nebraska last weekend. After losing the first set at Nebraska, Riniker held off four match points in the second to defeat Ildiko Guba.

"To be honest, in the past, Michele couldn't have come back from something like that," Bietau said of the win over Bullman. "At 1-5 in the third, she unleashed three great passing shots and fought back into the match.'

The fact that Riniker never let the match, or her temperament, get away from her was the key to the match, Bietau said.

"She kept her composure well enough under pressure to allow herself to play well," Bietau said. "She then was able to lift her play at the end of the match.

The Wildcats dropped all three doubles matches for the fifth straight outing to fall to 4-20 on the year. Although the team fell to the visitors, Bietau found encouraging moments within the loss.

This was a very good effort. We've improved in just about every area of play," Bietau said. "I realize our doubles are not what we'd like them to be. But I've asked the players to find small things to improve on, and even in the places where we're not seeing results, right now I'm seeing those things happening.

The squad now prepares for the Big Eight Championships at Oklahoma State April 27 and 28.

Bietau said Riniker and Gover probably locked up top-four seeding positions for the meet.

"We're playing our best tennis right now," Bietau said "We've worked hard and had to endure a very tough stretch, but in the long run that's going to pay off. Some of the hard lessons throughout the year are starting to show some results.'

Chiefs stockpile defensive backs

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas City Chiefs loaded up on defensive backs Monday, hoping to stretch their lower-round winning streak through one more draft.

The past two Chiefs' drafts have uncovered some key operatives in the final rounds, including guard David Szott in the seventh round and running back Bill Jones in the 12th.

But the pickings may be leaner in this third draft under general manager Carl Peterson and coach Marty Schottenheimer since last season's 11-5 record had them picking 21st or 22nd in every round.

"But I feel very good about it," Schottenheimer said at the conclusion of the two-day NFL draft. "I think the reason we've had the success is we've continued to follow the board. We've continued to make selections based on the way they were evaluated in the time preceding the draft. When the pressure's on, when the bullets start flying, you have one final safety net.

"You always look up and say, 'Is that the highest-rated guy on the board?' And when you look up there and that's the guy, it makes the choices easy.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - What most Big Eight fans would consider an unflattering NFL draft ended Monday when Missouri's Linzy Collins was taken by Green Bay in the 12th and final round.

Collins, expected by many Missouri fans to go much higher, was the 316th of 334 players taken in the two-day affair.

From Staff and Wire Reports K-State women's basketball coach Susan Yow announced

Monday that Jamie White, a 6-foot, junior college All-American from Utah Valley Community College in Orem, Utah, has signed a national letter of intent to play for the Lady Cats. White led Utah Valley to a 29-3 record and a trip to the NJCAA round of 16 last season en route to first-team all-America honors by Kodak.

White was also named the Region 18 Player of the Year after averaging 18.8 points, 4.6 rebounds, 3.0 assists and 2.7 steals per game. She also shot 51.6 percent from the field, 37.2 percent (55-of-148) from three-point range and 68.4 percent from the line.

"I think Jamie can have an impact on our program immediately," Yow said. "Jamie's a tremendous scorer from three-point range and one of her main strengths is that she's a solid team player. There are only 10 firstteam junior college All-Americans in the country, and it's great for K-State to sign one of them. That says a lot about our program and what K-State has to

As a freshman at Utah Valley, White was used primarily as a post player and averaged 10.1 points and 6.3 rebounds per game to help her team to a 26-4 record. In fact, White attempted just two three-point shots as a freshman before her transition to the perimeter last season.

"We decided to move her outside the summer before her sophomore season to take advantage of her size and great shooting ability," said Utah Valley coach Tom

White is K-State's first signee during the the spring period. Yow also signed five high school players back in November: Michelle Johnson of Midwest City, Okla.; Jomoree Grattan of Cleveland, Ohio; Dana Pollock of Onaga; Pam Stoltz of Albert Lea, Minn.; and Joey Ward of Burnsville, Minn.

In a game originally scheduled for April 18 as part of a long weekend trip for the K-State baseball team, the 'Cats will play a nine-inning game against the No. 13 Creighton Bluejays this afternoon in Omaha, Neb.

K-State is coming off a disappointing performance against the Illinois State Redbirds. In the weekend series, K-State dropped two of three games, dropping their record to 27-20 on the season. At the time of the game against Creighton, Clark felt the offense of the Omaha-based team was one of the better ones in the nation. 'Creighton probably has as good of offensive talent as anybody in the nation," Clark said. "They have a tremendous ballclub and a very talented pitching staff - just a very strong team." During the road trip to ISU, Craig Wilson was the main offensive power. During the three games, the 'Cat shortstop went 5-for-9 with two homers and scored five runs.

How well the first day of the Husker Spring Classic went for the K-State women's golf team is still unknown.

Rain and wind greeted the golfers as they played the first 36 holes Monday, and the team sits in third position in the field of five.

The Wildcats tied a team record for the first 18 holes with a score of 322 despite the conditions and were positioned in second place at that

The final round was a 328, still respectable, and left the Wildcats third behind New Mexico and Nebraska. New Mexico leads host Nebraska by one stroke, 634 to 635. K-State is at 650, and Wyoming, in fourth, has racked up 669 strokes.

The big surprise for the Wildcats is freshman Denise Pottle, the team's No. 5 player to this point, who leads K-State and is in third place overall. She turned in scores of 81 and 75.

The second-round 75 ranks as the team's top individual score of the season, and a personal career best. The prior team mark was 78, which was Pottle's average for the two

The K-State American Society of Interior Designers chapter sponsored a career day Friday in Kansas City. About 70 members attended.

The students listened to various speakers at Johnson County Community College talk about interior design specifics.

Professionals spoke about fabric, furniture, carpet, networking and building. There was also a panel dis-cussion on career options including architecture, residential designers, dealership designers, lighting designers and facilities personnel. Each professional spoke on his or her company and what to look for in a good

Christine Busenitz, president of ASID said there was not as good student attendance as in past years.

The students that attended, though, toured a designer showhouse with over 50 rooms.

Karen Pittman, Kansas City liason for ASID, said each year a different house is chosen to be the designer home. This year the 30,000 square foot mansion was located at 5500 Ward Parkway. More than 40 designers donated their creative skills to design their room.

"It's very fairytale-like. It's not a terribly realistic thing looking at these rooms and thinking of someone actually designing your home like this," Pittman said. "You can really tell from one room to the next that different designers have designed the

By the Associated Press

LAWRENCE - A 22-year-old man who was killed by police had lunged at two officers with a large knife before they opened fire, au-thorities said Monday.

Gregory Allen Sevier ignored repeated warnings to drop the knife during the confrontation early Sunday at his parents' home, Jim Flory, the Douglas County attorney, said at a news conference.

The two officers, Ted Bordman and James Phillips, were put on administrative leave with pay pending a coroner's inquest scheduled for late April, Flory said.

Bordman has been on the force for just more than two years and Phillips for more than 13, Police Chief Ron Olin said.

Flory said results of an autopsy on Sevier were not yet available. He declined to say how many shots were fired or exactly how many struck Sevier, except that he was hit at least twice.

Relatives had called police to the house around 2:30 a.m. because Sevier was emotionally upset over personal problems and had a weapon, Lawrence police said in a statement issued Sunday.

Bordman and Phillips responded to the call, along with a third officer who witnessed the shooting but did not fire, Flory said. He would not ing, except to say Sevier ignored the order to drop the knife and lunged at the officers.

The inquest will be held to determine if the shooting was an accident, a criminal act or a justifiable homicide, Flory said.

Besides the Lawrence Police Department, the shooting is being investigated by the Douglas County Sheriff's Department and the University of Kansas Police Department.

Sevier became the latest in a series of young Indian men to die vio-lently in the Lawrence area in the last two years. Sevier's father, Willie, works in the facilities maintenance department of Haskell Indian Junior College in Lawrence, said Hannes Combest, executive education assistant to the president of the college.

"We want to express our remorse to family members," Combest said, speaking on behalf of the Haskell community.

Members of the Indian community in the Lawrence area have complained about police investigation of three earlier deaths, the latest being that of Christopher Bread, 19, who was found dead along a road just east of Lawrence in March

In October 1989, the body of Cecil Dawes Jr., 21, was found in the Kansas River. The body of John Sandoval, 19, was found in the Kaw River in April 1989.

Circumstances of those deaths never were fully explained despite months-long investigations.

Songwriting, singing talent lead Kravitz to greatness

'Mama Said' explores love themes tinged with doubt, pain

ERIC MELIN

Collegian Reviewer

For some unknown reason, music seems to go in cycles. These days, some rock music closely replicates the whole late 1960s love era, but few actually have the rare songwriting and singing talent Lenny Kravitz posesses. On his 1989 debut album "Let

Love Rule," Kravitz stunned music critics and fans alike with inspiring songs about love, beauty and peace. On his brand new release, 'Mama Said," he explores the same themes. But this time they are sprinkled with doubt and pain.

We are immediately greeted with Kravitz's stunning falsetto on the first track, "Fields of Joy." Kravitz used to sing the song, originally done by the New York Rock Ensemble in the early 1970s, as a child. He updated and rearranged it and, helped by a seering solo from Guns 'n' Roses' guitarist Slash, made it the best tune on the album.

It is apparent the new batch of songs will be no less Beatlesque than the last album. Kravitz uses the ancient mellotron (see "Strawberry Fields Forever") on "Fields

"Fields of Joy" later in the album (see "Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band"). The difference between Kravitz and most other "summer of love" nostalgia artists is his songs are relevant today.

Don't be fooled by "Always on the Run," the first single, though. It's the only balls-out rocker on the entire 14-song stretch.

Reviewer says...

Ultra talent, ultra catchy

"Mama Said" is basically very mellow, showcasing Kravitz's classically trained voice and ultracatchy melodies.

Although "Mama Said" has some guest musicians, it is very much Kravitz's album. He penned every tune but "Fields of Joy," and he produced the record, too.

Many of the songs are piano ballads reminiscent of John Lennon's solo material. On "All I Ever Wanted," Sean Ono Lennon plays

He even goes so far as to reprise piano. It's one of the more upbeat tunes comparatively, but its lack of guitar keeps it from rocking.

Although the songwriting on Mama Said" is consistently catchy, it lacks the inventiveness of "Let Love Rule." Kravitz chooses traditional structures more often. and sometimes repetitiveness sinks in. Songs like "Flowers For Zoe" and "What Comes Around Goes Around" have prolonged instrumental breaks to keep them from being under two minutes.

"It Ain't Over Till It's Over" is a pretty common cliche for a title (see Shooting Star), but it doesn't sound much like the rest of the album. Instead, it sounds like the Jackson 5, complete with disco

The lyrics on "Mama Said" are surprisingly pertinent to modern society. At the same time, however, they are extremely personal. "Stand By My Woman" is fairly ironic, since Kravitz split with Lisa Bonet during the recording of the album. "What The ... Are We Saying?" teeters between both sides with the lines "I've been lost in the name of love/And we kill our brothers daily in the name of God."

DODGE CITY - To five teenage boys being held in the killing of Bruce Romans, the meat inspector walking home early one morning was just somebody to shoot, the lead investigator in the case said Monday.

Only one of the youths fired the shot that struck Romans in the head April 16, but police want all five charged with first-degree murder because all were involved in and knew about the shooting, said Capt. Mary Chambers, chief investigator for the Dodge City Police Department.

The five, aged 15 through 17, were arrested Saturday night and are being held in the Ford County Detention Center, according to Chambers. All five are juveniles under Kansas law.

Romans, 28, and the youths apparently did not know each other, according to Chambers.

"It wasn't an accidental shooting, m vicum, said. "They decided they were going to shoot somebody.

Books & Bricks Questions and Answers Q: What is the basis for determining KSU Libraries' inadequacy?

The quantitive standards of the Association of Research Libraries (ARL) provide the best overall measure of adequacy, competitiveness and excellence. Q: Are KSU Libraries members of the Association of Research Libraries?

No. Membership is by invitation only, and our Libraries do not meet their minimum standards. Over 100 American and Canadian college libraries are members.

Q: Why is Association of Research Libraries membership vital to K-State?

Membership in ARL increases the success rate of graduate and faculty research grant applications. A positive image of KSU graduates is conveyed to recruiting offices across the nation through a strong library Q: How does Farrell Library rank within the Big Eight schools?

Sadly, K-State has the most inadequate library in the Big Eight; while KU has the best. With total volumes numbering around 1,100,000, we have 400,000 fewer books than the Big Eight's seventh-rated library at Iowa State.

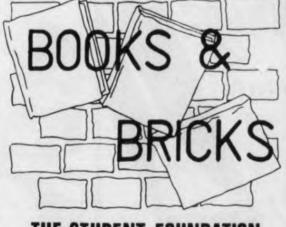

Q: Why should I donate my money when I will never get to use the improved and expanded facilities?

We now have Bramlage Coliseum, the K-State Union, and the Chester E. Peters Recreation Center. We would not have the facilities if former K-Staters had not paid for something they would never get a chance to use. Now it is our turn to make a small sacrifice for the

Environment topics benefit students

By the Collegian Staff

Students researching environmental issues can now find specific information at the environmental library located in the UFM building, 1221 Thurston St.

The library, which has been a project of Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment for the past year, is open to students, faculty and members of the community during regular UFM office hours, UFM Director Linda Teener said.

Teener said students are the most common patrons. Since the word was spread about its opening, several students come in each day looking for speech and research paper topics, she said.

Patrons may take materials home on an honor basis, she said.

SAVE moved into UFM last summer after both organizations worked together to celebrate the 1990 Earth Day. Teener said UFM had extra space and offered it to SAVE, which pays a small rental fee for the space, she said.

President of SAVE, Jonathan Morris, junior in math, said his organization created the library so they could share the environmental information SAVE has accumulated with students and faculty. He said he is confident they have a better selection than Farrell Library.

"The environmental movement has really picked up in the last year, and it's hard for Farrell to keep up with the number of articles that are flooding the market," he said. "Even though we have a much smaller budget, we have a lot of contacts where we can get donations."

Eventually, Morris said, they would like to move from UFM into an environmental section at Farrell, but he said right now Farrell does not have the space.

Currently, within the UFMlocated library, there are 18 journals, various newsletters, books, pam-phlets and a vertical file put together by SAVE. All of the materials are donated by members of SAVE, faculty and community members.

Teener said UFM also receives environmental publications, which they give to the library once no longer needed.

"Donating fits right in with the recycling theme," Morris said. "If you are done reading your material, instead of throwing it away, you can let someone else read it.

Morris said during SAVE meetings, members encourage each other to choose environmental topics for class papers and speeches. He said not only will the student learn more about environmental issues, but it will also spread the word to instructors and classmates.

Morris said anyone wanting to donate materials can do so by contacting a SAVE member or dropping by

Police observing, not stopping soldiers

By the Associated Press

SILOPI, Turkey - U.S. military forces who worked Monday to construct a model camp to house Kurdish refugees in northern Iraq are being watched but left alone by Iraqi police in the region, officials said.

The U.S. soldiers have received high marks from relief groups and refugees in Kurdish camps along the Turkish border.

"We were a bit worried they would take over at one point," said Constantin Sokoloff, a field officer for the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. "But they are very cooperative, very willing, and they have a lot of logistical support."

Dozens of U.S. troops have arrived the past few days at the worstoff refugee camps, at Cukurca and Uzumlu in Turkey. They will be bringing in medicine and water by helicopter, distributing food and helping pipe spring water to the hundreds of thousands of refugees at the squalid

Two U.S. soldiers were injured in a land mine explosion at the Uzumlu camp Monday. The border had been mined by Turkey and Iraq before the Gulf War, and several refugees have been killed or maimed by stepping on Relief workers said the arrival of the Americans had reduced tensions among the refugees.

"They see it as a bit of a tangible sign that the Americans are interested and are going to do something," said Leah Thatcher, a public health specialist with the New York-based International Rescue Committee.

At Cukurca, a camp crowded with about 185,000 refugees, refugees seemed particularly pleased to see U.S. Army Special Forces on Monday. A day earlier, Turkish soldiers had fired at a crowd rioting over food distribution, killing five and seriously injuring three, medical work-

Turkish officials said Sunday one refugee was killed and five injured.

The United States and allied countries have promised several safe havens in northern Iraq to house refugees now massed on the borders of Turkey and Iran.

Reporters who visited the camp being set up near the northern Iraqi border town of Zakho said about 200 tents had been erected since Sunday, and another 400 were being put up. They noted hundreds of Iraqi policemen carrying automatic weapons and loitering around the camp area and

But Lt. Cmdr. John Hopkins, a military spokesman, said the Iraqis had not interfered with the construc-

Hopkins said the settlements in northern Iraq will eventually house 20 to 25 tent communities of about 1,000 people each.

The broad valley near Zakho that is under the protection of U.S. and allied forces could house 100,000 refugees, said Marine engineers who are taking part in the construction.

Local Kurds told U.S. officials the police in the region are members of Iraq's secret police, or soldiers dressing up as police, according to Fred Cuney, a U.S. State Department consultant helping to establish the camps in northern Iraq.

'They are testing us," said Cuney, adding that talks were underway between U.S. and Iraqi military officials about the police. "They'll be out of there pretty soon," he said.

Censorship needs to be judged by individuals, Stanfield says

CHRISTINE SPLICHAL

Collegian Reporter

People have to trust each others' judgments about what should be censored and what should not be, Susan Stanfield, instructor in speech and K-State debate team coach, said at a lecture Monday in the K-State Union.

"Most people think censorship is wrong. So why is there so much around us?" she said.

"Personally, sometimes I don't want to hear things or listen to people speak, but we need to have faith that the truth will eventually come out in the marketplace of ideas," Stanfield said. "It may be hard to have faith in some people, but we must believe in them.

There is censorship in the schools including banning books, the choice of high school drama and plays and censoring school newspapers, she said.
"There is much censorship in this area. In fact, Huck Finn is one of the single most-banned books in the nation due to its offensive language," Stanfield said, "Yet, it makes one of the most definitive statements against racism there is.'

There are arguments for both sides of an issue, and there is no easy answer as to who is politically

One example of censorship currently being debated is a San Francisco public TV station that wants to televise executions, Stanfield

The National Endowment for the Arts is another subject being debated in regard to censorship. Stanfield said some feel grants should not be given to inappropriate art be-cause artists tend to be poor, and it is possible they would compromise their art in return for the grant

The Persian Gulf War has also incited a debate concerning mili-tary censorship. Stanfield said most people support the thought of national security over rights.

The numbers of reporters in Saudia Arabia who were put into pools of 10 people were given supervised tours — a practice not done during the Vietnam conflict.

Stanfield said because of the war coverage in Vietnam, the military may think people stopped supporting the conflict.

She said, however, that studies have shown the support decline to be the same in Vietnam as it was for the Korean War, which had much less media coverage.

Baker to meet Assad, Sharaa in Damascus

By the Associated Press

KUWAIT CITY - Secretary of State James Baker III headed for Damascus on Monday in hopes of enlisting Syria's participation in a Mideast peace conference.

Earlier, he bid for Soviet cosponsorship of the initiative and gained the sideline endorsement of Saudi Arabia.

Baker's scheduled sessions with President Hafez Assad and Foreign Minister Farouk Sharaa loomed as his most difficult challenge on the Arab side, as he attempts to fashion a format and agenda for the prospective peace talks. He was expected to return to Israel today in hopes of resolving its concerns about the scope of the proposal.

On the way from Jiddah, Saudi Arabia, to Damascus, the secretary of state took a brief detour to Kuwait to reaffirm U.S. support of the emirate.

Before leaving Jiddah, Baker had a 35-minute telephone conversation with Soviet Foreign Minister Alexander Bessmertnykh. Baker wants Moscow to co-sponsor the peace talks, provided the Soviets resume full diplomatic relations with Israel after a 24-year lapse.

Bessmertnykh is expected to make a trip to Israel soon. Baker's detailed briefing of the Soviet official and the fact that he was keeping his schedule open raised a possibility that Baker might fly to Moscow to firm up a jointly sponsored conference, provided he can resolve the Arab-Israeli differences over the agenda and the extent of third-party participation.

The Saudis confirmed during Baker's meetings in Jiddah with King Fahd and Prince Saud, the foreign minister, they would not participate directly in peace negotiations though they may take part in dealing with such side issues as the environment.

But Prince Saud, seeing Baker off to Kuwait, said "It was conveyed to the secretary that Saudi Arabia believes it is time to put an end to the Arab-Israeli conflict and to achieve a comprehensive and just solution to the Palestinian question."

The foreign minister said, Saudi Arabia "supports the efforts of the United States for the convening of an early peace conference to achieve this objective.

The declaration lined Saudi Arabia up with Egypt in support of Baker's mission. King Hussein of Jordan has promised to keep an open Baker's talks with Assad were to complete the secretary's tour of five Arab nations and set the stage for equally critical talks Wednesday with President Yitzhak Shamir and Foreign Minister David Levy.

Baker has declined to outline his specific proposals, but Israeli officials have said he has raised the possibility of broad international participation at a Mideast peace table, including representation from Europe and the United Nations. Israel would prefer the conference be structured as a springboard for direct, bilateral talks with both the Palestinians and with Israel's Arab neighbors.

Baker has pressed Israel, according to Israeli news reports, to allow participation in the conference by Palestinians with links to Arab East Jerusalem. Israel has rejected such proposals in the past.

On Sunday, Baker said at a news conference in Cairo he was not putting pressure on Israel, but he made it clear that negotiations should have an international characteristic. Israel has resisted the idea of a broad international conference for fear that third parties other than the United States would support the Arab side.

"We have not heard responses to the suggestions we made in my last visit," Baker said in Cairo.

In Kuwait, Baker conferred with the Emir Jabir al-Ahmed Sabah and Crown Prince Saad Abdullah al Sabah. The visit came a week after a report by Amnesty International that human rights abuses, including torture and executions, had swept Kuwait since it was liberated in February.

Baker's staff stressed the economic side of the visit, to avoid embarrassing the rulers.

The employee also stated in the report that Kriftewirth told the employees to "cut back on the blacks" by being stricter with blacks on carding and asking for more forms of identification.

The witness also told the commission while Kriftewirth hung the signs on San Juan Night, Kriftewirth said if any of the employees didn't like it, they could leave.

Another similar complaint against Bushwacker's has just been granted probable cause.

Probable cause means the commission will work with both the complainant and the respondent towards a conciliation, or a settlement to avoid a hearing.

In this complaint, James Griffing, a former employee, also charges the bar with ancestral discrimination.

Griffing never names anyone specifically aside from "Bushwacker's and its representatives,"

The other big surprise is in a negative light and involves the scores turned in by the team's top performers: Valerie Hahn, Adena Hage-

Griffing's complaint also states that black people, except for K-State athletes and friends of employees, were also discouraged from patronizing the bar by being asked for more than the required identification needed for entrance.

Of the six rounds completed by the three, only one round was sub-80. The three sit at 165, 166 and 171, respectively.

"If Denise and Theresa didn't play well, we'd be in a lot of trouble," Elliott said. "It wasn't a good day for Valerie, Adena and Chris.'

Training MerBabes can stop drownings

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Red Cross on Monday urged parents to turn their kids into little mermaids "MerBabes" — who know how to enjoy the water and avoid drowning. "Drowning is the nation's second leading cause of accidental death for children under the age of five," said Elizabeth Dole, president of the American Red Cross.

She said that in 10 states drowning is the No. 1 cause of accidental death for youngsters.

"These tragic numbers simply must be reduced," Dole said. While no child is drownproof, aquatics courses can teach children respect for water and basic survival skills, the Red Cross said.

Dole said children's innate curiosity makes them particularly susceptible to falling into water, and they can drown in just 2 inches of water.

Police officer, students encounter odd situations as delivery drivers

CANDY MCNICKLE

Collegian Reporter

It's 1 a.m., everything's closed, but you're hungry - Who ya gonna call?

About 30 to 45 minutes later, there is a knock on the door.

The pizza delivery person came through again.

Tom Southern is a police officer, but delivers pizzas part time for Pyramid Pizza while his wife attends school at the University of Kansas.

"It's not that hard of a job, and it pays the bills," Southern said. "As far as making good tips, a good night for me is $6. Some people even stand there and wait for me to give them a penny back."

Many of the delivery people in Manhattan are students at K-State and are majoring in degrees ranging from business management to prechiropractic.

"We have quite a diverse group of workers, which makes it fun to work here," said Mike Urbanski, freshman in business administration and manager of Falsetto's

One of the most interesting aspects of being a delivery person is getting used to all of the odd apartment buildings, residence halls and campus buildings.

"I hate going to apartments that don't have any lights, or have a lot of confusing stairs, or dogs that jump all over me. You never know who is going to answer the door," said Mark Tinkler, senior in Mike Jones, employee of Domino's Pizza, said, "I used to deliver in a much larger city and have gotten quite familiar with Manhattan. The larger cities are like spaghetti."

But, Tinkler said the residence halls pose special problems. "It is especially hard to find people when they order from the dorms," Tinkler said. "The people who order are usually on the phone with someone and forget they called us.'

Being in Aggieville, places such as Falsetto's, Pyramid, Pizza Hut and Domino's have to deal with the late-night partiers who have been drinking.

"I've learned from being in large cities as well, you have to deal with drunks nicely and quietly," Jones

Several of the delivery people said most of their problems, such as pizzas being stolen from their vehicles or vehicle damage, have occurred at or near fraternity

"We got a lot of trouble from one house in particular, so we couldn't deliver to them for about three months," said Meko Kahssay, sophomore in management information systems. "They tried to take the pizzas from our vehicles." But, Eric Martin, manager of Pizza Shuttle, said, "Even though we've had some bad luck with fraternities, there are some good ones. We have three to four we give Jeff Fritch, senior in marketing, said there was one instance where the driver outsmarted two guys at a fraternity.

room service to.

"The driver's friend had a plastic gun in his hand to scare off the guys when they came up to the delivery vehicle. He held the gun in his hand and the guys said 'Oh, we're just lookin," Fritch said.

But, the drivers said fraternities aren't the only places where someone has caused them problems.

Kahssay said, "I had to deliver a pizza to Park Place Apartments, and the guy that answered the door was severely drunk. He came to the door with the money in his hand and passed out. I tried to give him the pizza, but he was so passed out I just left the money in his hand, took the pizza and went back."

Fritch said delivering to parties is sometimes troublesome.

"I've had to deliver pizza to a party and instead of everybody giving me money for a tip, they all offered me beer," Fritch said. "I was at a frat party when a girlfriend of one of the members offered to have sex with me for a free piece of Females do some late-night deliveries, but most managers like to keep them from delivering too late for safety reasons.

Sherri Cooley, senior in physical sciences, though, is a late-night delivery person for Pizza Shuttle.

People need to appreciate the drivers, we only get minimum wage," Jones said. "We always get yelled at when the pizza is late, but it's not always our fault."

Associate provost accepts position at science institute

Kansas State Historical Society

LAJEAN RAU

Staff Reporter

Laverne Lindsey, associate provost and director of Continuing Education, will leave K-State to take a similar position at the University of Lindsey said the job offers her an increase in salary and the opportunity to be closer to her home state, Mississippi.

"They is a great opportunity. Tennessee is a progressive state, and they're doing a lot of very exciting things there," she said.

Though she looks forward to her new position, she said she appreciates the time she has spent at K-State.

"This has been a really opportune time. The nation is seeing a trend afoot of learning as a lifelong process," she said. "I have been very fortunate to be here during these seven Lindsey has been at K-State for seven years, holding the same position she does now.

Provost James Coffman said Lindsey has been a valuable asset to K-State during her stay.

"She has really made a contribution here in my view," he said. "If you look at the expansion of the outreach program during her tenure, it is quite impressive.

"Besides the day-to-day administrative duties, she has been instrumental in finding opportunites for K-State. She is a very hard worker with an eye for the future.'

The Continuing Education program has literally doubled since Lindsey came to K-State - from a $5-million to a $10-million program. Progress has been made with off-campus credit programs at places like Fort Riley, Wichita and Topeka. Continuing Education helped secure funding for the Regents Education Communication Center, as well as improving the KSU Child Development Center.

Lindsey said one of her primary obs has been with the Kansas City Regional Center for Higher Education, which is a group of 20 schools in the Kansas City Area. Lindsey said a shared telecommunication system the center developed will provide graduate degree programs in technical fields to industry.

Continuing Education has also been a major participant in obtaining a $10-million grant from the government to deliver math, science and foreign language courses to rural and small schools by satellite.

Lindsey said the move is official, but she has not submitted her resignation to K-State because she has not received the contract from Tennessee yet. She said she expects to receive it today or Thursday.

"I will be leaving July 1 for Tennessee," she said. "I don't want people to get the impression that I am already finished with my job. I still have a lot to do before I leave."

Lindsey will become the fifth woman dean at Tennessee. She said the university is about the same size as K-State and has a positive affirmative action policy.

Coffman said after consulting with all the division heads in Continuing Education within the next week to 10 days, a decision will be made as to interim leadership.

"After that, we will decide if we want to continue with the current program, or if we will do some fine

Career not 'nerdsville,' accountants protest

MELISSA SMITH

Collegian Reporter

K-State's Department of Accounting is working to change the image of accounting and accountants.

Dan Deines, associate professor of accounting, said people's perceptions of accountants and what accountants really are do not coincide

"What I have found is that people have a very negative stereotype of accountants," said Dan Deines, associate professor of accounting. "Simply stated, the stereotype is that you might make some money, but you don't deal with people. There is almost no personal satisfaction involved, not too much intellectual challenge and it's boring as hell."

However, accounting offers incredible career flexibility including positions with the FBI, international CPA firms, large corporations or small businesses, he said. Students can also teach at a university or go on to law school.

"The bright students coming in all see accounting as being nerdsville,"

The department has started working with high school teachers and counselors to try to change negative perceptions. Some of them are invited to campus in the spring and then matched with professionals to show these influential people that the perceptions are wrong, Deines said.

"We want to give them a feel for the wide variety of positions available for accounting majors," said Johanna Lyle, instructor of accounting.

Students with a basic technical skill can branch out into other areas and sometimes be earning six-figure salaries after 10 to 12 years, she said. In the fall, the department invites 30-40 high school students recommended by the teachers and have a similar conference with professionals so the students can see them as human beings who enjoy what they are doing, Deines said. In addition, the department has started a student group of Accounting Advocates to help with the conferences and presentations, Lyle Shannon Stites, senior in accounting and one of the advocates last year, said the purpose is to try to dispel the stereotypes - such as that accountants are bean counters - and educate people about the opportunities available in accounting. The department also started the Accounting Club so that freshmen and sophomores do not feel ignored, Deines said.

Vet Med designates first foundation on campus

College dean expects to exceed current fund-raising goals

MIKE VENSO Collegian Reporter

Based on a history of fund raising and personal education, the College of Veterinary Medicine has been able to raise 76 percent of its $9-million

Michael Lorenz, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, said, "Early on, I thought that was too high a goal. But, where we sit right now, I think that goal is about right. In fact, I think we can exceed that goal.

"I sense from the graduates at K-State that their allegiance to the program comes from a feeling that the administration and the faculty always held the interest of the students at heart," Lorenz said. "We're concerned about them more than just students of veterinary medicine; we take a personal interest in them.'

Lorenz said the first foundation on campus was designated for veterinary medicine. The KSU Foundation actually started considerably later than the foundation for veterinary

"It's a component of the Foundation. But the whole concept of a foundation started here in the veterinary college," he said.

"I've realized that a large percentage of veterinarians have invested in farm properties," said Mark Moore, Essential Edge Campaign director. "A lot of them have invested in commercial properties that have appreciated dramatically.

investment of real estate was from the teachings of a very popular professor named Dr. E.J. Frick," Moore said. "He recommended to all his students that they buy real estate once they set up their own practice. He stressed the development of an understanding of which way the community was moving by buying real estate.'

That past real estate investment is paying off now as the alumni make contributions of land back to the

"I found out the reason behind the sitively engaged in the program (than at the University of Georgia, Lorenz's previous employer)," he said. "They're concerned about the budget of the college, they're concerned about what's happening with the faculty.'

The college will be trying to help those students by asking for faculty and staff contributions when next fall's campus campaign hits full

"We have a goal of 100-percent participation for the faculty in the Essential Edge Campaign," Lorenz forward and make major gifts. But, most of them do contribute."

Lorenz said he feels his faculty has been contributing before and throughout the campaign.

Kansan nominated for commission

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Bush said Tuesday he would nominate two new members on the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, including Sheila Bair, who unsuccessfully ran for a Kansas congressional seat last year.

The new commissioners will need Senate confirmation to take their seats.

Bair, who was born in Independence, is the legislative affairs counsel for the New York Stock Exchange in its Washington

She ran for the Republican nomination in the 5th Congressional District in 1990, but McPherson banker Dick Nichols won the primary and went on to win the seat in the general election.

Bair worked on the staff of Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., in 1981-1986. She received undergraduate and law degrees from the University of Kansas.

The commission regulates the futures industry. Commissioners serve five-year terms. Bair was selected to fill a vacancy on the commission.

NASA postpones shuttle launch

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) - NASA called off Tuesday's launch of space shuttle Discovery after a sensor on one of the main engines failed during fueling. It said the next liftoff attempt would be Sunday at the earliest.

Engineers will not know the cause or extent of the problem until they gain access to the shuttle's rear compartment on Wednesday, officials said.

Workers easily could replace the sensor or an attached bundle of electrical cables, said Boyce Mix, deputy manager for NASA's shuttle main engine project. That would allow officials to try again Sunday to send Discovery on a military mission devoted to Star Wars research.

It would take a few extra days to put in a new controller, Mix said. The electronic package is about the size of a microwave

The repairs can be done at the launch pad.

Thieves roll salesman up in rug

WEST HOLLYWOOD, Calif. (AP) - Two robbers rolled a salesman into one of his prized rugs before making off with $500,000 worth of goods, police said.

"In 20 years, this is the first time I've come in contact with a robbery victim who was rolled up in a rug," police Lt. William Henderson said.

Samuel Shaoulian, owner of Samuel's Rug Gallery, was alone Monday morning when two men entered his store with a large suitcase that they said contained a rug they wanted to sell.

When he bent down to help open the case, one of them pulled a gun. The merchant's hands were bound with duct tape and he was rolled into one of the display rugs, police said.

"They apparently took the merchandise while the victim was bundled inside the rug," Henderson said.

Shaoulian, 46, squirmed free a half-hour later and called police. The thieves made off with 60 rugs valued at about $500,000, Henderson said.

Shaoulian declined to discuss the robbery.

13-year-old charged in shooting

PRAIRIE VILLAGE (AP) - A 13-year-old Prairie Village boy has been charged with involuntary manslaughter in what authorities say was the accidental shooting of a 17-year-old youth.

The boy, whose identity was not released, was charged in Johnson County Juvenile Court Monday. A detention hearing was scheduled for today to determine whether he should remain in custody. The shooting occurred about 6 p.m. Saturday when the younger boy allegedly was handling a .38-caliber handgun and it discharged, striking Nicklaus Robert Hughes in the side. Hughes was pronounced dead Saturday night at Saint Joseph

Health Center. The younger boy reported the shooting to authorities. Paul Morrison, Johnson County district attorney, said Monday that he could not comment on the specifics of the case. Involuntary manslaughter carries a maximum sentence of three to 10 years in prison for adult offenders. Juvenile offenders can be held in custody only until they are 21 years old.

Arrest won't affect US Ecology work

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) - The arrest of the executive director of a five-state, low-level radioactive waste compact won't affect work in Nebraska done by developer US Ecology, the company's vice president said Tuesday. Compact director Ray Peery was arrested Tuesday in Lincoln on federal and state charges alleging he took at least $600,000 in compact funds for his own use. The state complaint said some of the money allegedly was used to pay off personal loans and credit cards at various loan companies nationwide.

Gov. Ben Nelson called for Peery's suspension from his duties pending the outcome of the case.

US Ecology vice president Richard Paton said he was surprised by Peery's arrest and that there had been no hint of any problem. But the arrest likely won't affect US Ecology's work, he said. Nebraska is one of five states that belong to the waste compact. Other states in the compact are Arkansas, Kansas, Louisiana and Oklahoma. The commission chose Nebraska as the state to host the waste dump, and US Ecology was chosen to develop the site. US Ecology chose an area near Butte in Boyd County as its preferred site for the dump.

Woman sentenced for embezzlement

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) - A woman who embezzled nearly $80,000 from the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation to repay money she had stolen from a Johnson County country club in suburban Johnson County has been sentenced to 18 months in prison.

The theft from the March of Dimes was discovered in June 1990 when Merchants Bank noticed Nancy Estevez, 56, had written a $22,615 check on her account to the Johnson County Dis-

The check was to have been the last restitution payment of $96,124 the court ordered Estevez to repay Milburn Golf and Country Club for funds she embezzled while working as a bookkeeper there.

In passing sentence Monday, U.S. District Judge Joseph E. Stevens Jr. did not order restitution to the March of Dimes because its loss was covered by insurance. If he had ordered restitution, he said, Estevez might embezzle it from someone else.

Professorships given to 3 K-Staters

College of Business attracts, retains faculty with awards

STACY HILBURN Collegian Reporter

Three K-State professors in the College of Business Administration have received professorships. Yar Ebadi, management department head, is the 1991 recipient of the J.B. Ellis Professorship of Business Administration; David Plumlee, associate professor of accounting, has been named the Ralph Crouch-Peat Marwick Professor; and Cynthia Fraser Hite, marketing professor, received the 1991 Herbert H.

Belvins Research Professorship. David Donnelly, dean of business administration, said, "We use the term loosely, but, in essence, professorships are to serve as a supplement to salary for the professors' accomplishments, and each one varies in

"They are awarded based on different achievements, which the college reviews. It is a combination of their teaching, research and service."

Some are temporary and some are endowed, in which case the interest from the money in the endowment is used for the supplementary salary. Plumlee said, "The term professor means discovering and disseminating new knowledge. Those who receive these professorships have done more widely recognized research."

He also said, "States don't adequately fund the professors' salaries. Salaries at K-State are way below those of comparable schools. So the professorships compensate to an Hite said they are not competitive. "I did not apply for it," Hite said. It's just the college's way of attracting and retaining faculty.

Herbert Belvins is a K-State graduate and the money he donates is administered on a yearly basis. This is Hite's first year as a recipient in her current position.

She co-teaches Marketing Management with Robert Hite. She also teaches Special Topics in Advanced Marketing Management.

One of the main reasons Hite was chosen for the professorship was her research. Her research interests right now are in adaptive decision-making and why some managers are status quo minded when it comes to management.

This is Plumlee's second year at K-State. He is the second recipient of his professorship.

Raiph Crouch was a K-State

Maurice Stark, accounting department head, said, "They (Crouch and Marwick) began the professorship because of their high respect for the K-State accounting program and its graduates.'

Plumlee said he also has a good research record and is involved in the change of the accounting curriculum.

"There was a committee formed to look at the curriculum and a new course I'm in the process of developing, which has never been taught anywhere else - Accounting Processes and Controls — is a product of the curriculum change," Plumlee

He presently teaches Advanced Accounting Theory.

Ebadi has headed the management department since 1987. He received the Teacher of the Year award for the College of Business Administration for the year 1986-1987.

His professorship is also endowed, and it lasts for five years. J.B. Ellis gave the money to the college and they, in turn, gave it to Ebadi.

"Ellis gave the money to help the college accomplish its goals," Ebadi said. "It is up to the donor whether the endowment is extended after the Ebadi teaches courses in the quantitative management area.

Donnelly said, "All three are good teachers with good research records, and they were chosen because of their quality to the college."

Manhattan women proud of finish in Boston

Staff Reporter

Two Manhattan women who ran in their first Boston Marathon last Monday said they want to do it again someday.

"It was exciting. We both set personal goals," said Helen Cartwright. "It was really an experience."

Sandy Robinson said, "It was wonderful, and I feel really good about it. We ran well and got to meet all sorts of different people.

This year, about 9,000 runners took to the streets of Boston to take a crack at the 26.2-mile race. Both women said the large number of runners was new to them and made the race more challenging than other marathons they have done.

"I thought it was great," Robinson said. "I've never raced in a race that big before. But it was a little frustrating because of all the people. You couldn't go as fast as you wanted to." Cartwright also said the large number of runners was a challenge. The first two miles or so, we were half walking, half running, it was so crowded with people," she said. Cartwright said due to the crowding, their time was 20 minutes by the second mile. Typically, they run the first two miles in about 16 minutes. We had a lot of making up to do after that," Cartwright said. Both women ran the race in less than 3:40, the cut-off time for qualifying for marathons, such as the Boston marathon. Cartwright ran it in 3:22, and Robinson ran it in 3:26.

Cartwright and Robinson, who both started running just five years ago, train together every day and run each race side-by-side from start to finish. The differing times are something new to them.

"We got split up about the fifth mile," Cartwright said. "It made it kind of stressful. We ran with another girl, and we got confused about where we each were. Sandy thought we were ahead of her. The other runner and I met up and were able to run together."

Cartwright said about one million people watched the race, which has been held annually since 1897.

"They lined both sides of the race course from the start to the finish," Cartwright said.

Cartwright said she and Robinson started the race a half of a mile behind the actual starting line. Where you started was decided by your registration number, she said.

"We have heard from other runners and people in Boston that they adjust your time according to where you started, so our times might be even better," Cartwright said.

Ideas need the right setting in order to pop met an interesting man the other day. His name was William. William threw a party last weekend. Al-though I didn't know him, I ended up at his party when a friend of mine who did know him asked me along. We arrived at William's party at about 10 p.m. It was a pretty tame affair. People were mingling in the front two rooms of William's

"Where's William?" the friend with whom I'd gone along asked a cluster of people sitting around a coffee table.

"William went to the kitchen," one of them answered. "A long time ago. He said he was going to pop some popcorn.'

I didn't know anyone there besides my friend, so I got a drink and moved around in the little groups. I couldn't quite figure out the crowd, but I gathered that most of them worked at an advertising firm where the unseen host, William, was also employed.

I hadn't known the nature of the party when I'd been asked along, and I was a little underdressed. People noticed, and it brought me a lot of attention because I didn't look like any of the rest of them. I could tell they were trying to figure me out.

The question was always the same: "Do you work with William?

When I explained I did not, and I had come with a friend who knew William, people seemed to accept me as part of the party. But more than that, I sensed I achieved a kind of accidental vantage over the others by not really belonging to their group. I gathered there was a good deal of gossip going on in the room, and by being a stranger, these people that picked me out seemed to take pleasure in trying to fill me in. It seemed there was something the matter with William.

"William's always fancied himself something more than a commercial artist," one woman explained to me, "But lately things with William have been more out-of-proportion than usual."

"William takes it too personally," someone else said, later. "This is commercial art, and there's nothing wrong with that. But William seems to think he's Van Gogh. He seems to think he's doing something 'higher."

"William has too many ideas," said still another, "But there are limits to what William's job will allow him to do. He's not painting the ceiling of the Sistine Chapel, you know?'

I nodded into my drink, unsure of what it was all about. I had the feeling William had a good job, but he was exploring, trying to meet a need to express himself creatively beyond the requirements and outside the restrictions of his job as a commercial artist.

I was thinking about it when I finished my drink. Then I set down my glass and wandered toward the back of the house, in search of a bathroom.

Pushing open a wooden swinging door, I was overwhelmed by the smell of butter and popcorn from within the next room. I let the door close, then hesitantly, holding my breath, pushed on through.

It was a kitchen. A man stood with his back to me, facing a counter on which at least four popcorn poppers stood. Each popper was on, producing popcorn which poured into bowls sitting under their spouts. It might not have seemed so strange, except I could see the counter was literally covered with bowls of already-popped popcorn. There was more popcorn in the room than I thought any number at any party could ever eat.

I approached the counter slowly, then spoke softly to the man. "William?" I asked.

The man turned quickly, nervously. "Hello," he said, "How are you?" There was nothing particularly striking about this man liam, that he wanted to be more of an artist besides the circumstances of the kitchen in which he stood. He looked like any man might look, whether he was a commercial artist or a painter.

"Are you okay?" I asked.
"An experiment," William explained, motioning to the popcorn poppers and the bowls of popcorn on the counter. "You see: unpopped kernels." He produced a jar half-full of unpopped kernels and held it out to me. "No matter which machine I use," he explained, "There are unpopped kernels. I've been keeping them here.

I took the jar, unsure what to do with it, and tared into it until he spoke again.

"You see," he said, "I'm saving them. It's like those." He motioned to a row of paper bags that were lined-up on one side of the room. Each had a word written in black magic marker on the side: paper, plastic, glass. I could see William was recycling things. But I still couldn't see the connection to the unpopped kernels.

"Reusable," he tried to explain, taking back the jar. "I'm going to fill up this jar with unpopped kernels, then I'm going to pop them again and none will go to waste. None of the machines pop them all, but if I save them, then sooner or later I'll find a way to make them what they're supposed to be."

I remembered what I'd learned about Wil-than his job allowed him. And suddenly it all seemed to make sense. Maybe it was just the overpowering smell of the popcorn in the room, maybe I was just delirious, but in that state I seemed to understand the unpopped kernels. They were like the ideas he had, the impulses, that had never fulfilled their purposes. Each machine, it seemed, was a different means of popping the kernels and making them what they were supposed to be. William seemed to think if he saved them, recycled them, eventually he'd find the machine, the right means, to pop them all.

William's was an unusual manifestation of the idea, but it hit home for me. Doing commercial art was not enough for him; William wanted to do more. William wanted to produce great art, but his job did not allow him the means to fulfill his needs, as certainly as none of the popcorn poppers could seem to pop all of the kernels. He was saving those kernels, saving his ideas, so someday he could use them, so someday he could find a machine, a means, that would let them be the things they were supposed to be.

ur ideas require the right circumstances in which to correctly manifest themselves. It's the thing William was discovering. I hope William someday finds the means for which he searches.

Campus should realize K-State is just another Harvey endorsement

In a few days, this University will be fortunate enough to have former President Jimmy Carter as a guest and Landon Lecturer.

This is quite an honor for K-State and promises to be an interesting address. But, what may be just as honorable and perhaps more interesting would be a Landon Lecture by the University's most recognized flack. That's right kids, Paul Harvey.

Harvey recently voiced across the far-reaching radio waves of his pseudo-news-plug-o-rama show the bargain education that K-State provides to its students. He cited the tremendous number of scholars and a national champion debate team to sell his opinion. In between several endorsements, he gave K-State an endorsement of its own, lauding good lole' K-State over Harvard and other premiere universities across the nation.

If the Landon Lecture committee would find it in its heart — and pocketbook — to invite Harvey to campus, it would be a Landon Lecture like no other.

Stand by for plugs.

As President Wefald would introduce Harvey, he would surely stroll towards the podium vacuuming the dust off McCain's stage with the Dirt Devil. His lecture would begin with a swig of coffee made fresh in a Bunn Coffee Maker tucked away in the lectern.

After a little beverage, he would share a little background information about his trip to Manhattan and the great sound from those Bose Speakers on the plane. Suddenly, a quick pause and before anyone knew that the voice had stopped, a speedy plug for a water heater or perhaps a Schwinn aerodyne bicycle for ailing hearts and aching bones would bellow across the auditorium.

Finally, the real speech would squelch the chatter of capitalism at its finest. But, the address would not go without some form of advertisement.

More than likely, he would apply a thick coat of True-True Value Paint to the side of the podium while praising the educational system at this fine University.

With a little luck and the proper alignment of the planets, the commercial announcements and endorsements might cease and Harvey would actually give the capacity crowd something to listen to.

Nah, it would never happen. Harvey would always endorse something, no matter who or what he talks about.

And that's the rest of the

Brady waiting period may save your life

Editor,

Contrary to popular belief, the Brady bill will not "make life safer for the criminal, not for the law abiding citizen," nor will it deny citizens their rights to bear arms. The Brady bill will only require a seven-day waiting period for a background check of would-be handgun purchasers. This will not only prevent criminals from purchasing guns through legitimate channels, but it will allow for a "cooling-off period," helping prevent crimes of passion or revenge.

Opponents of this bill cite increasing violent crime rates in states that already have a waiting period as proof the waiting period is a failure. This is untrue. California's waiting period stopped 1,793 people with criminal records from purchasing guns in 1989 alone. The benefit is being overshadowed by crime attributed to the increasing drug trade.

Opponents also say the waiting period would be deleterious for those needing a handgun immediately because of dangerous or severe circumstances. However, the bill provides for instant background checks to supercede the seven-day waiting period under these circumstances.

nience. Even if only a few handguns could be may reach me to discuss contract possibilities kept from the wrong hands, lives would be saved. Is a seven-day wait too much to ask? It may save your life.

Awareness Week campaigns for donors

MELANIE SCHOENBECK

Collegian Reporter

Signing the organ release form on the back of your driver's license may save someone's life. The Kansas Department of Health and Environment announced that April 21-28 is National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week.

Lesa Bray, of the KDHE office in Topeka, said she hopes people will take the time to review the organ donor option because it can benefit others in need.

Individuals can make a difference, Bray said. It is as simple as signing the back of a Kansas driver's license.

In the United States in 1989, about 13,400 transplants were performed. In the same year, about 1,800 potential recipients died while waiting for a transplant. In December 1990, about 22,000 individuals were on a national transplant waiting list, according to a press release by the KDHE.

"The nationwide organ and tissue shortage is indeed a concern," said Dr. Stanley Grant, acting secretary of KDHE in the news release.

"KDHE encourages all individuals to pledge their vital organs and tissues in honor of National Organ and Tissue Donor Awareness Week. This can be easily done as organ donation has been included on the back of Kansas driver's licenses," Grant said.

It is important to increase public awareness because of donor shortages, said Cindy McIntyre, regional director for American Red Cross Tissue Services in

When awareness is heightened, the number of donations increase, McIntyre said. The learning process allows potential donors and families to become more comfortable with organ and tissue

McIntyre said misconceptions exist about organ and tissue donations. People sometimes believe an open casket will not be possible if donations are made. She said, however, viewing the body is not a problem.

The Red Cross does not focus its attention on public awareness during any designated week. It does place emphasis, however, in the professional medical staff field. McIntyre said.

The main target of the Red Cross includes staff members of 60 hospitals in Kansas, McIntyre said. Through the information provided, nurses become more willing to talk to families about the possibility of organ and tissue donations.

She said family members want to see something good come from a tragedy, and she never hears of families that regret taking part in the donation program.

Donors tripled last May after the awareness week. McIntyre said she did not know if it was coincidence or not.

This year will determine whether or not heightened awareness makes the difference.

In a move designed to enhance leadership in technological innovation, the K-State College of Education has purchased new computer equipment for faculty, staff and students.

Michael Holen, dean of the College of Education, said the equipment purchase is part of the college's strategic planning through 1995.

According to the plan, teacher training lags significantly behind in the use and understanding of technology, he said. Faculty and students must have reasonable access to modern computer hardware and software and training in their use.

The goals of the plan are to provide every faculty member with an appropriate computer work station, which includes software, networking and training. Readily accessible computer laboratories will also be provided for undergraduate and graduate students.

House approves Brady bill

By the Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The House Judiciary Committee approved a seven-day waiting period for hand-gun purchases Tuesday, paving the way for debate by the full House on a measure supporters say will help stem the nation's crime epidemic.

The panel approved the so-called Brady bill on a 23-11 vote after rejecting an alternative proposal to require point-of-sale checks of computerized criminal records.

The bill gained momentum last month when it was endorsed by ex-President Reagan, who had long opposed the measure.

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh reiterated that position Tuesday.

'Cats look to even score against Creighton tonight

ERIC BROWN

Sports Reporter

When K-State's baseball team plays No. 9 Creighton for the second day in a row, they can't ask for a better effort, only better results than they experienced in Monday's 7-4 loss. They also hope to find that the home field advantage is worth more than three runs.

Last night in Omaha, Neb., the Wildcats' Dave Christensen held Creighton, the nation's top hitting and scoring offense in the nation, scoreless through the first five innings. However, the outing was rewarded with a loss, dropping his record to 4-5 on the year.

Creighton ran its record to 34-10

The action started in the sixth, when K-State scored two runs in the top of the inning. Jeff Ryan started the rally with a single, was safe on a fielder's choice and scored on Brad Rippelmeyer's Blair Hanneman knocked in the other Wildcat run in the inning, putting K-State ahead 2-0.

The lead wouldn't stand up, however, as Creighton came up with five tallies in the bottom of the sixth. They added to their lead with two more in the seventh. The Bluejays had five doubles in the game.

Both teams had eight hits each as Eric Kennedy posted the win for while K-State fell to 27-21 on the Creighton, making him 4-4 on the season. Kennedy worked 6.3 innings for the victory.

A bright spot offensively for K-State was Craig Wilson, who picked up his 39th career double, setting a new Wildcat record.

Brian Culp and Rippelmeyer each had two hits in the loss.

Tonight's game with Creighton, originally scheduled for 2 p.m. will now be played at 7 p.m. and will go nine innings.

The rematch was caused by last Thursday's rainout in Omaha.

The Wildcats hope to get back on the winning track after dropping three of their last four ballgames, all to Missouri Valley opponents.

District foe New Mexico won the team title with a score of 953 followed by league rival Nebraska with 965 strokes. K-State outlasted Wyoming, another district opponent, 979 to 1.004.

The Wildcats never seemed to get untracked after Monday's adventure through rain and wind. However, Denise Pottle, a freshman who has been the team's No. 5 player all season, provided the team with some much needed guidance. Pottle led the team by placing sixth overall.

"It was a great tournament for Denise," said assistant golf coach Mark Elliott. "She gained some confidence going into the Big Eight Championships and gave the team a much

New England Patriots all-time leading passer Steve Grogan said that after 16 years with the team, it appears his career is finished.

The Ottawa native said he has been told by the team that he no lonwill not be asked to return to training

Grogan said he has considered approaching other teams, but concedes that his days in the NFL likely have come to a close.

"They (the Patriots) pretty much told me that I'm out of the picture there," Grogan said to the Kansas manager. Grogan hinted that the idea City-area press while in Ottawa this weekend for a Chamber of Commerce promotional event.

"They've had a lot of changes in the front office and the coaching cause I know I can still play," Grogan staff. They're heading in a youth direction and they more or less told me that I m not going to be a part of their

"I'm doing some checking around the league — about three teams is all I've contacted - but right now it could go either way," Grogan said when contacted by the Collegian. "I could be in football next season or be entirely out of it all together.'

Grogan joined the Patriots in 1975 after graduating from K-State.

He threw for 26,886 yards and 182 touchdowns, and is only the 26th player in NFL history to have thrown for more than 25,000 yards.

At K-State, Grogan is currently No. 7 on the single-season total offense charts with 1,422 yards rushing for 372 yards and throwing for 1,050.

On the 'Cats career charts, Grogan stands at No. 5 on total offense with 2,798 yards and No. 6 on the passing charts with 2,213 yards.

In 1985, when starting quarterback Tony Eason went down with an injury, Grogan guided the Patriots to six straight wins during the middle part of the season. Then when New England reached the Super Bowl, Eason got knocked out with an injury ger figures into the team's plans and in the second quarter and Grogan came on to finish the game.

This season, though, injury and the emergence of rookie quarterback Tommy Hodson left him on the bench for most of the second half of the season.

In the off-season, the Patriots hired a new coach and a new general of leaving football was not resting well with him, but the prospect of doing something else seemed just fine.

'It's kind of disappointing besaid. "I played really well early last season before I got banged up and our offensive line got banged up.

"But if nobody wants me to play, that's fine," he added. "I'm kind of excited about looking at something

Grogan said he has considered coaching, but is also interested in business opportunities near his home in Sharon, Mass., a suburb of Boston, and in Ottawa and Kansas City.

"I knew eventually this time would come, and I made it last longer than I ever thought I would," he said. "I got to do for 16 years what I truly love to do."

And if the opportunity of coaching at K-State arose? "Well, I'd certainly look at it," he said. "I've got a lot of family back in that area and I haven't seen them in a long time. It certainly would be nice to get back there."

Patti Hagemeyer watches players warm up at volleyball practice Tuesday afternoon in the gymnasium in Ahearn Field House. Hagemeyer is the new volleyball coach at K-State, succeeding head coach Scott Nelson. She comes from Southern Illinois University.

New vollevball

BILL LANG

Sports Reporter

It's not an easy job, but she's up to the task.

Patti Hagemeyer was recently tabbed to succeed former K-State volleyball coach Scott Nelson, after he guided the team for 10 years.

'As far as replacing someone who's been around a long time, I have no problem with that," Hagemeyer said. "When I got to South-ern Illinois, I had to follow someone who had been there for 13 years. It's a little scary, but I feel I can do it."

Hagemeyer said the switch to the Flint Hills scenery should be a smooth one, though.

'When I first got to SIU, I was trying to figure out what head coaching was all about even though I had been in it for awhile," Hagemeyer said. "I now know what's expected of me. I was happy with what I had done there. I was able to take a team and turn things around and get them on the right track. And I'm hoping to do the same here."

After arriving in Manhattan April 7, Hagemeyer had her first team meeting, which lasted about two hours. Since then, the team has been practicing five days a week for two to three hours a day.

"We've been just getting the basics down," Hagemeyer said. "We're not setting any offensive plays yet. We're just working on getting the basics down and doing the proper techniques. Hagemeyer, though, said she felt she wasn't a top candidate for replacing Nelson, who resigned in January.

"I was actually looking at being at SIU this fall," she said. "I was just asked to toss my name in the hat, per se.

"However, when they chose me I was more than happy to come here. Hagemeyer, in her two years at SIU, was 30-27, going 18-11 in her first year at the helm. She said although there are a lot of players coming back, it doesn't automatically relate to success.

"Success might not mean a big change in the won-loss totals," Hagemeyer said. "What we're looking to do is, that when people walk into the gymnasium next fall people will know that this is a different volleyball team.

"When we step on the court next fall we might not be a different volleyball team. But we will look like a different team."

Lady Cat recruits outstanding

David Svoboda

Sports Editor

For the Lady Cats, it's time to open a new chapter. And maybe it's time to burn a few old books.

The Lady Cat program has been rocked by scandal since the middle of the 1989-90 season. But that story appears to have reached its end.

Logically, a new story is beginning to unfold in the offices in the southeast corner of Bramlage Coliseum, and it appears to be one capable of producing a happy ending.

Coach Susan Yow has signed a total of seven players — five in the early period and two this spring who appear, on paper, to be worthy of a great deal of praise.

The class of five high school players signed during the early period includes players from Kansas, Oklahoma, Ohio and Minnesota.

To say that this program fails to recruit on a national level would be a misstatement and an obvious one at

The five are Jomoree Grattan of Cleveland, Michelle Johnson of Midwest City, Okla., Dana Pollock of Havensville, Pam Stoltz of Albert Lea, Minn., and Joey Ward of Burnsville, Minn.

Grattan is a 6-foot-2 forward from John Marshall High School. She led her team to the conference title as a junior and was named the league's defensive player of the year.

During her senior campaign, she averaged 15 points and 15 rebounds a game and was 2nd team all-region and a member of the Cleveland-area all-star team.

Johnson, a 5-6 guard, is from Star Spencer High School. That's the same place that gave the Big Eight Byron Houston, Oklahoma State's bad boy in the middle. Johnson might be the top guard to run an offense in Oklahoma preps over the past two

She was named the MVP of the Oklahoma High School Tournament of Champions as a junior and has played on two Junior Olympic AAU teams that placed fifth nationally.

As a senior, Johnson averaged 12 points, seven rebounds, seven assists and seven steals. She was a 1st-team all-state performer and MVP in the Class 4A state tourney, which her team won.

The Sunflower State product joining the Lady Cats in the early period was Pollock, a 5-8 guard. Though playing at just the Class 2A level at Onaga, she has earned All-State honors and has spent time in K-State's summer camps.

During her senior campaign, Pollock averaged 25 points and nine rebounds and was named 1st-team allstate and was the Kansas Sports magazine player of the year in the state.

Yow, following the lead of former Lady Cat coach Matilda Mossman, hit Minnesota hard for recruits. The result of that effort was the signing of Stoltz and Ward.

Stoltz, a 6-1 forward, earned allconference honors as a junior and averaged 18 points and 12 rebounds as a senior.

Ward, another 6-1 forward, was an all-conference and honorable mention all-metro performer as a junior, and was a 1st-team all-state performer as a senior. She averaged 16 points and six rebounds.

The two late-period signees were Jamie White, a 1st-team junior college All-American, and Nicole Brown, a teammate of Johnson's at Star Spencer who was voted the team's MVP following her senior campaign.

All-in-all, quite a group. And Yow is convinced she can take a K-State team to the NCAA tournament by recruiting and playing midwestern

After that, the next step is to hit recruiting hotbeds outside this general

But for now, this is a very nice first step down the long road for Yow and comapny. And hopefully, this chapter will end a bit more pleasantly than did the last.

Hoop squad signs another top player during spring period

From Staff and Wire Reports K-State Lady Cats' coach Susan Yow has signed her second recruit in as many days. Yow announced that Nicole Brown, a 5-foot-9 forward from Star-Spencer High School in Midwest City, Okla., signed a letter on Tuesday.

A first-team all-stater last year, Brown averaged 16.4 points, 10 rebounds, five steals and four assists. She was also named her team's most valuable player. She enters K-State with a 3.75 grade point average. "Nicole is a player with tremendous potential who we plan to redshirt next year," Yow said. 'She has quickness and leaping ability. She's just a great allaround athlete who needs to develop her perimeter skills." Brown will join her high school teammate, 5-6 point guard Michelle Johnson, who signed with K-State last November during the early signing period. The two led Star-Spencer to a 4A state championship and a 24-3 record.

The total number of signees for this year's recruiting class has now reached seven. Brown and Johnson join high school signees Jomoree Grattan of Cleveland; Dana Polloc of Onaga; Pam Stoltz of Albert Lea, Minn.; and Joey Ward of Burnsville, Minn. The other recruit, junior college all-American Jaime White from Utah Valley Community College who signed her name on the dotted line Tuesday.

Yow said she hopes to ink one more junior college player in the next seven to 10 days.

Brown chose K-State over twotime defending Big Eight champion Oklahoma State, Oklahoma, Clemson, Texas and University of Texas, El Paso. She heavily considered Oklahoma State after her visit there.

"Nicole liked both places (K-State and O-State), but she chose K-State because of the visit she had there," said Brown's high school coach, Jan Johnson. "She plans to study pre-law, and she was impressed with the program they had at K-State."

CLEVELAND - Storm Davis got a little spoiled during his twoplus years with the Oakland Athletics. He's just now learning to adjust to a different style of baseball.

Davis, using a new delivery he developed during spring training, pitched his first shutout since 1985 Tuesday night as the Kansas City Royals beat the Cleveland Indians "In Oakland, I was able to pitch up

Temple offers tribute

Music has identity

Collegian Reviewer

A startling new album has just been released by a band that doesn't even exist.

Temple of the Dog is actually made up of a bunch of musician friends from the power-rock capital of the world, Seattle, Wash. The album of the same name was recorded following the untimely passing of Andrew Wood, lead vocalist for Mother Love Bone. Only weeks before the release of their Polygram records debut, Wood died of a heroin overdose at the age of twenty-four. Wood's former roommate Chris Cornell, vocalist for Soundgarden, was moved to write some songs about his friend, and soon other friends joined in on the project. Ex-Mother Love Bone guitarists Stone Gossard and Jeff Ament latched on, along with Soundgarden's drummer, Matt

The project started as a tribute to Wood, but as time progressed, more songs evolved from the jams and it became more of a celebration of life and friendship than anything else. The songs sound like neither Soundgarden or Mother Love Bone. Instead, they take on a identity of their

"Say Hello To Heaven" was the first song Cornell wrote, and it proves to be the most emotionally stirring. His voice reaches incredible intensity without becoming annoying like most "metal" screechers. The song has a wide range of ups and downs as Cornell recounts how he dealt with Wood's death.

It expresses the futility of trying to understand death, and how people never know how to handle the loss of a loved one. "Say Hello To Heaven" overflows with brutally honest sadness and hope. "I never wanted to write these words down for you," Cornell cries, "With the pages of phrases of things we'll never do."

Temple of the Dog's music is hard to describe, but it's everything good rock 'n' roll should be. The guitar sounds a lot like the Black Crowes. And as an extra added bonus, the lyrics are mature. On "Reach Down," Cornell laments about the shattered dreams of his friend. He dreams of Wood sitting at a bar saying, "This is where I'm gonna sit and buy you a drink someday."

"Wooden Jesus" finds Cornell speculating on Wood's possible holy background and offering an ironic tribute with, "Wooden Jesus, I'll cut you in/On twenty percent of my fu-ture sin." And on "Times of Trouble," he sympathizes with the way Wood lived, but sings "If somebody loved you and left you for dead/You got to hold on to your time until you break," which seems like the end until he adds, "through these times of

Most of all, Temple of the Dog makes you feel certain emotions. So little rock these days is still able to achieve this that it must be celebrated when it happens.

It's amazing what can happen when people write songs for music's sake rather than for airplay.

Dots Will Echo has all the simplicity and spunk of a local band. Their music is hard-edged pop. The trio's style is just as easy as their threesome is simple.

These guys, Nick Berry, Bob Albanese and Steve Meltzer say they, "Don't remember what world this is, but it looks like heaven's gate to me."

As the song, "Everything In The World" says, the group has a firm hold on reality while at the same time assuming it to be a sort of transcendence. Their lyrics border on the philosophical and expound the poetry of the real. This song continues with, "Let's find a place to eat," and, "Just got thrown through a window."

Other songs, like "Someday," find us believing in the vague hope of hope itself as vocalist Berry says more than sings, "Someday, someday, you ain't gonna be afraid." The music is easier to believe than his

Dots Will Echo is carried by their musical talent, even though the lyrics cannot be discounted. The diverse backgrounds of the members and their individual tastes are incorporated in the variant styles of music on

Reviewer says "Simply spunky"

Most of the songs are distinctly post-punk rock. Others include folk, blues, rock, new acoustic and nearly reggae. Actually none of these styles is purely presented. Dots Will Echo adds their own blended personalities to the different sounds to create a constant style of their own.

"Rain" combines deep melancholy tones with a beat reminiscent of a Native American rain dance. "Someday" allows Berry to yodel on to the folky melody. "Science Fiction" is more lively postpunk folk rock, and there is more blues in "She's Never Lonely."

An "Elvis Costello/U2" duo is in "She's A Girl," and "Heartland," and the title cut, "Dots Will Echo," get back to rebellion, violence, electricity and rock guitar.

That's the album in a nutshell, although a nutshell might actually add another dimension of sound that the simplicity of Dots Will Echo couldn't take. These musicians are clearly interested in making music. The results of their talent and efforts give us an album that is easily appreciated. The music is a reminder of the commonality of the human race.

Dots Will Echo may be the minstrels of the modern age. The melodic guitar, the energy and the simplicity of this album guarantees its success. The group was discovered for just these qualities.

"Faculty are giving to the institution all the time," he said. "Part of the University's reputation has been earned by faculty who have been willing to stay at K-State for the long haul during some pretty darn lean times. So in that regard, the faculties have already contributed to the University substantially."

Jake Mosier, Director of Developmental Affairs for the College of Veterinary Medicine believes students will not likely be targeted for contributions, at least not until they have donned their caps and gowns.

"They've got enough problems right now," Mosier said. "We focus most of our efforts on those of our alumni who are 55 or older."

Mosier said he would like to students in the habit of giving something to the University and will start with a goal program for graduates.

"We will ask each class to establish a lifetime goal of giving back to the college, and we suggest $1 million as a class," he said. "Not everyone will be able to give, but those who can, we hope will give."

That plan's success rests with Jake Mosier. Kent Sedlacek, the Foundation development officer for the college is confident he's the right man for the job.

"Jake has been at the college a long time and probably knows about 90 percent of the graduates," Sedlacek said.

Mosier has worked with alumni, corporations and foundations for years, and he's always been able to find funding, Sedlacek said.

The college, like the colleges of Business Administration and Engineering, has made an effort to aid the of the University library system it will help the academic status of the University

"We think by designating a fairly large dollar amount for the library, we are enhancing the overall library concept on campus," Lorenz said.

Additionally, the college had seeked funds for instructional support and capital equipment. That goal was met with a $1.7-million contribution to establish the Hill's Center for Veterinary Practice

"Scholarships are the easiest to raise because people feel good about helping someone at the beginning of their career, knowing that they will benefit another whole generation," Mosier said.

The college has been quite succesful, but new contributions have

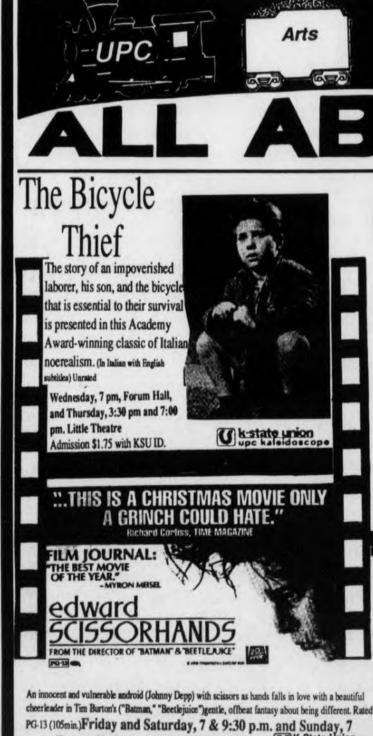

"For several months, we were the University libraries. The college has lead college in percentage of contripledged $1 million toward the Veter- butions and now we have been sitting inary Medicine Library, and as part on a number for about four or five months, without a lot of growth,' Lorenz said. "We've done a lot of work, and we're waiting for some things to develop. The seeds have been planted."

Tornado spotters protect city

Volunteers watch for severe weather

1015 N. 3rd Manhattan

LISA NOLL Collegian Reporter

When most people see dark clouds, they take shelter against tornados, but volunteer tornado spotters go right to the heart of the storm.

Volunteer tornado spotters are a group of self-trained and self-motivated individuals who go to specified locations in Manhattan when there is threatening weather, said Pat Collins, Riley County emergency preparedness coordinator.

The spotters' eight predetermined locations are concentrated in the heavily populated areas of Manhattan, but they provide information to all of Riley County, said Bill Fogerson, coordinator between the spotter group and the Riley County emergency department.

Fogerson said the group was started about 30 years ago, and it is one of the oldest in the nation.

"Originally it was just a group of amateur radio hams in 1961 who formed a group and went to the weather bureau," he said.

The spotter group was not wellaccepted at first. Once they became more established, they did demonstrations for the city, and people became more comfortable with the spotters' work, Forgerson said.

The tornado spotters for Riley County consist of about 20 volunteers. Their office, the emergency operations center, is located in the basement of the Riley County police department, Collins said.

When there is threatening weather, the National Weather Service will send a message to the Manhattan station via teletype. The volunteers are alerted and told to go immediately to their assigned positions, Collins said. The volunteers watch the skies and report back to the police station and the National Weather Service.

Earl Slagle, volunteer tornado spotter, said he immediately goes into action when he hears an alert. He and other spotters use radar equipment to look for cells in the sky alerting them to threatening weather.

"Usually, in daylight you can see the cells in clouds," he said. "At night, you can see them in the lightning."

By pinpointing the cells and bearing every five minutes, the spotters can monitor the speed, direction, height and potential of the storm, Collins said.

To become a spotter, a volunteer has to go through an extensive training procedure and be an apprentice to the program for one year, Fogerson said.

"We have to know the person is reliable," he said. "A lot of people find out it's work, and they're gone."

out it's work, and they're gone."
Fogerson said there are four things a person must have in order to be a volunteer tornado spotter.

"They have to have a desire to do it and be willing to go through the training session," Fogerson said.

The person also needs a job that will allow them to leave at the spur of the moment. The individual is also required to buy all of their own equipment, he said.

Even though the spotters are in the midst of the storm, they often fear for others more than themselves, Slagle said.

"It makes me more concerned that I can't fail in my duty, or someone will get hurt," he said.

It is so important to know when not to warn, as well as when to warn, Fogerson said.

The volunteers enjoy what they do because it helps the community, but they all admitted it can be scary.

"We are a small group that spends an awful lot of time out there for nothing," Fogerson said. "There are a lot of times I would like to stay and hide in the basement with everyone

Youth Service Day honors volunteers

JODELL LAMER

Collegian Reporter

As part of National Youth Service Day, several K-State and Manhattan area service organizations participated in an information fair Monday in the K-State National Youth Service Day is a project designed by Youth Service America, an organization based in Washington, D.C. Its purpose is to recognize all the great things that youth are doing across the country, said Jillaine Patterson, senior in advertising and promotional coordinator for the Community Service Program at K-State.

Community Service Program is an organization that sponsors eight different projects at K-State. The organization invited service groups to participate in the fair.

Patterson said this is the second year for recognizing National Youth Service Day and the first for having the fair at K-State.
"We are trying to recognize project and service activities that people are doing in the state of Kansas," she said. "A lot of people on campus aren't aware of these things.

National Youth Service Day has only been recognized nationally since 1988. This year, Gov. Joan Finney and Manhattan Mayor Richard Hayter have both signed proclamations for Youth Service Day.

Patterson said part of the reason for recognizing youth service is to encourage people to get involved in some form of service project.

As part of the recognition, volunteers in the community Struc-tural Assistance Volunteer Effort will be going to Winchester Saturday and build a sand volleyball pit in the park, Patterson said. The group participates in several projects throughout the year.

"The purpose of Community Service Program is to link K-State to volunteer programs throughout Kansas," she said.

Lynda Bachelor, graduate student in public administration and student coordinator for the Volunteer Clearinghouse, said the clearinghouse serves as a local link between organizations and volunteers.

"Last year, we contacted more than 30 organizations in Manhattan and asked them if they needed volunteers," Bachelor said.

"This is really changing at K-State in that a lot of professors are really getting into community service - they require it or want students to do it.'

Contest to promote Kansas art

Postcard artists to compete in 14th annual competition

JENNIFER HOFFMAN

Collegian Reporter

Behind the picture on a $.25 postcard is hours of work and artistic talent. Several Kansas artists are trying to create a unique scene for the Kansas Artists' Postcard Series competition that takes place this summer.

The Association of Community Arts Agencies of Kansas is sponsoring the 14th annual postcard competition. The contest is open to artists all over Kansas.

This is to promote the Kansas artists," said Regan Blanchard, program coordinator of ACAAK. "Not all the scenes are Kansas scenes like most people think. Instead, the best work of the artist is entered." The artists can create the postcards from anything but photographs or

"The reason is because in the original work there is a depth that can't be seen when it's reproduced," Blanchard said. "We've had just about everything else, though, including woodcuts, pencil, etching and textiles.

oils, just to name a few." The artist has to enter a postcard with the dimensions of 4 1/4 by 6 inches. They can mount the postcard in the center of an 8-by-10 inch piece of flexible material.

The competition is judged by an independent, out-of-state juror so people can't say they knew the work of the artist, Blanchard said.

"We just want to make the competition fair," she said. "We even have a separate committee that chooses the juror."

The juror this year will be Richard Michels, art director for Midwest Living Magazine.

From the more than 150 entrants that usually enter, Michels will choose 16 artists to receive $100 cash, 250 reproduced copies of their postcard and a set of the postcard series. He will also choose 10 artists as the Juror's Choice. They will receive $50 cash and a set of the postcard

The work of the 26 winners will form a traveling exhibition that will tour all over the state, Blanchard The deadline for the entries is June 1. The entry fee is $15 for the first postcard and $10 for the second and third. 'The opening will be in October at Washburn University in Topeka,"

It will be the largest collection of postcards by contemporary Kansas artists including unique winners from the past 14 years, she said.

Blanchard said.

In the past there have been students and faculty that have entered the competition, said Karen Schrader, secretary at the art department.

"Sometimes the pieces can take weeks to create because they get so intricate," she said.

Earthquake hits Costa Rica, Panama; devastated nations fear aftershocks

By the Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica - Rescuers searched the rubble of buildings and international aid began pouring in Tuesday for victims of a powerful earthquake that killed at least 74 people, injured more than 800 and left thousands homeless.

The Monday night tremor, measured 7.4 on the Richter scale.

Officials said there were at least 50 confirmed deaths in Costa Rica and 24 more in Panama's remote Atlantic province of Bocas del Torro, which had not registered an earthquake since 1916.

Bridges and roads throughout Costa Rica were destroyed or damaged by the earthquake, making it difficult to assess the extent of deaths and damage. Neighboring Nicaragua

Bartenders fill skies to help fund MS study

LAURA BIRRELL Collegian Reporter

One night a local group of people were sitting around wondering what they could do as a new and different fundraiser for Multiple Sclerosis.

Somebody had the idea of jumping out of an airplane.

The Jump-A-Thon is only part of the statewide "Ugly Bartenders" contest, which raises money annually for M.S. The Jump-A-Thon is through My Place Tavem - a bar that placed second in the tavern division last year.

The other division is the alcohol division. Contestants are judged by the amount of money they raise for M.S. The contest is throughout the month of April, with many weekend

Dave Smith, a Jump-A-Thon participant, knew Paul Sodamann, instructor for the K-State Parachute club. He approached Sodamann with the idea of the Jump-A-Thon.

Nobody in the group had ever jumped before, so Sodamann approached the parachute club with the idea, since everyone jumping would have to go through eight hours of schooling. The members of the club said they thought it sounded like a good idea, so they agreed to school the participants of the Jump-A-Thon.

The participants will be paying their own jump fees and will have people sponsor them to make money for M.S. The 15 participants with the most pledges will be the ones who will take the schooling. The participants are competing for the most money in pledges, and the winner receives a trophy.

"Only eight or nine people may actually jump. We're jumping because we want to, nobody is going to make you jump," Smith said.

The K-State Parachute club consists of 50 to 60 members, and of those 10 to 15 are active. The club has five jump masters and one instructor. It is one of the oldest existing clubs at K-State; it has been in existence since 1968. The club consists mainly of students but also has some faculty and community members.

The club jumps every weekend. Trained students can jump as often as they want. They jump at the Wamego Airport and welcome spectators.

Beginning jumpers will be jumping at 3,000 feet, using a static cord that opens the chute. The plane takes up five people at a time - three jumpers, the pilot and the jump master. The jump master is there for the safety of the jumpers.

"We train classes all the time, about 10 a year, but we've never done one for a fund raiser before," Sodamann said. "I think it will be a fun atmosphere with a lot of people, and it's for a good cause."

The Jump-A-Thon will be at 2 p.m. April 27th at the Wamego Airport. It will last about four hours.

"Be there and have a good time," said Gordon Smith, participant of the Jump-A-Thon.

Budget problems endanger jobs

GFs make classes unique, fun for students at K-State

SUZANNE BROWN

Collegian Reporter

When budget cuts occur, faculty members get cut, and programs often dissolve. A special program in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies is one of these programs that faces this risk.

"You're always at risk when budget cuts occur," said John Murray, professor and department head of human development and family studies. "Our problems are with protecting part-time faculty with special skills.

The Introduction to Human Development class is a unique program on the K-State campus. The class consists of two lectures a week and one recitation group meeting. The uniqueness comes into play with the recitation meetings. These groups are led by undergraduate group facilitators, referred to as Esther Gray, instructor and coordinator of group facilitators, said GFs are required to have successfully passed the Introduction to Human Development class, have experience working with people and an interest in human development.

Gray said the duties of a GF include working with the group, leading two recitation groups a week, keeping roll and grading homework assignments for the two groups. The GFs also attend introductory and mid-semester workshops, as well as GF classes that meet twice a

Why do undergraduates who have other classes to worry about accept these responsibilities?

Susan Bullock, senior in hotel and restaurant management, said the experience she gained when she took the course had a lot to do with her decision to become a GF.

"My GF had a real knack for making people feel important and like they mattered," Bullock said. 'That was something I really wanted to do. I think it's really easy to come up here and get lost and to feel like nobody cares. You don't feel that way when you're in human development."

Traci Whitten, junior in journalism and mass communications and a GF, said she thinks students can relate to undergraduate facilitators better than an older person.

"I think they share so many personal things, and with an older person, they may feel intimidated," Bullock said she also feels that someone older may not know or relate to students as well as undergra-

"We have to fill in the blank a lot, when a student is trying to express something, a younger or older person may not be able to do that as well," Bullock said.

No matter how much time it takes, or the energy put forth, GFs said they agree the benefits are

"I think what's often skipped about this program is the opportunity for us as GFs," Bullock said. "This is a tremendous opportunity for us to learn planning, time management and written evaluations."

Whitten said the experience made her appreciate teachers. "You hear everything - all the excuses, everything." The GFs also said they feel the program structure is beneficial to the students. Linda Ackerman, senior in consumer and family economics and GF said, "They definitely learn more becuase they get hands-on experience. A lot of students don't like coming to class in the beginning it's kind of like your first speech class, when you don't know anyone but then after a while, they look forward to it and become friends."

'They learned things they hadn't counted on learning; they learned about life instead of school," Bullock said. "They can't believe they are learning because it's fun."

Jennifer Theel, sophomore in interior design, is currently enrolled in the course.

"I think it's a good idea, because students get to express their feelings and ideas.

Gray said this is not the only group on campus where undergraduates are leading groups.

"I am under the impression that our undergraduates have an instrumental role in shaping groups,' Gray said. "They can do their things, and we can basically document the things they are accomplishing."

The GFs said they have different ideas about what they would like their students to have gained when the course is complete. Whitten said she hopes her students have learned a lot from each other and about what others have been through.

"I want them to know they mattered," Bullock said. "They deserved to be heard, and they aren't the only ones that have been through some of the experiences they shared."

Ackerman said she would like her students to have become comfortable with others' differing opinions.

"It's important that they can accept people as they are," Ackerman

Lecia Retter, graduate teaching assistant for the course, said she hopes the GFs will remember what they learned, and that this will benefit them later in their lives.

"I remember the first semester after the course had a new instructor; the GFs felt like guinea pigs," Retter said. "The current students and the current GFs have input on what happens in the future and we take that seriously. A lot of times, students don't feel their evaluations have any effect on the course, but revisions have been made every Retter said she was able to learn a lot in her position with the course.

"It's been fun to have a course that I have learned to teach in, where I'm not restricted to lecturing in any certain style," Retter said. "I appreciate that I had the opportunity to learn I love to teach, as long as I'm not hooked into any certain

Murray said the course depends on people with special skills to run and maintain it.

We strongly support the course. It's important for us and the students in human development," Murray said. "We're going to work very hard to maintain it.

"Palestinian Human Rights"

DODGE CITY - Five teen-age boys remained in custody Tuesday pending charges in the random shooting death of a Dodge City man

Police have recommended all five boys be charged with first-degree murder, but Ford County Attorney Leigh Hood had not decided by midday whether to charge them all as adults.

Only one of the youths fired the shot that struck Bruce A. Romans, 28, in the head April 16. But Capt. Mary Chambers, chief investigator, said the boys all were involved and had "decided they were just going to shoot somebody.

"It wasn't an accidental shooting, but he was a random victim," she said. "They weren't angry. They weren't saying, 'The world owed us.' I can't find a thinking person's answer as to why.

Romans and a friend, Carl Allen, were walking home about 1:30 a.m. after stopping for a beer when two shots were fired. Romans was shot in the head once.

The youths "had a little to drink and smoked a little marijuana" in the hours before the shooting, Chambers

Brice Hobrock Decades of inadequate State funding have left KSU Libraries well below Big Eight and national collegiate standards. Kansas State ranks eighth among the Big Eight libraries, with more than 400,000 fewer books than the next

"A couple of weeks earlier they'd stolen a gun and that night as they talked, the conversation got around to shooting someone," Chambers said. "Romans was killed only because he was walking at the wrong place and wrong time. Wilbur A. Rodarmel, 82, said authorities told him a .22-caliber rifle that had been stolen from his house was used to kill Romans. Chambers said, however, it cannot be verified the rifle was used in the shooting until ballistic tests are complete. "We still aren't sure that it was the gun. ... We won't know until ballistics are done on it. We won't stop searching for the gun until it is found," she said.

Some of the boys arrested were attending Dodge City Senior High School, where the arrests were a major topic of conversation.

"The students who apparently think they are in the know are questioning how this could have happened," said Richard Branstrator, school superintendent.

"You always wonder if there is something society could have done to prevent this," he said.

Colleges to have separate ceremonies

LORIE BYSEL

Collegian Reporter

Commencement ceremonies for the spring semester will be May 17 and 18 at Bramlage Coliseum and McCain Auditorium.

This year there will be no All-University ceremony for May exercises, as in previous years, said Robert Kruh, vice provost. Instead, the colleges will split into nine separate exercises.

Each college is responsible for its own cememony. Guest speakers will appear at some exercises; others may have the dean of the college speak.

Previously, the University has scheduled a large ceremony where degrees were awarded. But because of length, Kruh said it was decided to forego an individual ceremonies.

There are about 2,000 students who will be walking through commencement this May.

"We would probably never get into one place. And if we did, it would take four to five hours to get through the ceremony," he said. Kruh said having the ceremonies separate will help make the most of the occasion. 'We want to recognize the students, faculty and the families," he said. "This is the highlight of the President Jon Wefald is sponsoring a reception in the backyard of his ## Personal preferences used for graduates to determine which way to spend money

Guidelines can help with decision-making

SHANNAN SEELY Staff Reporter

College graduates will save or spend their graduation gift money depending on personal preferences

If they decide to spend their gift money on large purchases like a car or apartment furnishings, graduates may need to know some guidelines before they shop.

For graduates who plan on buying a car, the first step is to decide whether they want a sportscar, four-door, truck or convertible, said Creig Alger, sales manager of Briggs Jeep-Eagle.

Once graduates know what type and how much they can spend, they need to start shopping as soon as possible, Alger said.

Sometimes, when shoppers visit several dealers, they may settle for a bad offer because they become tired.

The fourth or fifth dealer will try to catch you when you are tired," Alger said. "You need to be fresh." The best deal will probably be the first dealer a shopper visits, he said.

Learn about the vehicles by reading consumer information like Consumer Reports magazine and test-driving vehicles on several lots. In addition, visit the dealership and notice how courteous the salespeople are, Alger Alger said walking through the service department would also be helpful in the decision-making process.

When buying a car, it's important that where you buy it is a place you enjoy doing business with," Alger said.

Other smaller purchases are good investments when spending gift money.

Mark Harms, a recent K-State graduate, said if he did not receive a briefcase for graduation, that would be something he would have bought for himself.

A bookshelf instead of crates to hold textbooks would be a good idea, he said. He said he spent his graduation money on a television and a gas grill.

"I spent more money on the gas grill and I have used it a lot," he said.

Furniture, appliances and entertainment systems are important to everyone, but it depends on what a person already has, Harms

He said some of his friends bought K-State alumni memberships. Memberships are available to May graduates at half-price, $10.

Initial expenses, deposits create need to budget funds

DAVID PRITCHARD Collegian Reporter

Sixteen years of preparing for the real world are coming to an end, and now college graduates are faced with how to manage their money. One of the first problems graduates face is the initial expenses they must pay, said

Ali Fatemi, associate professor of finance. "It's a planning process that students should prepare for starting in their senior year," he said. "A graduate should plan to spend $1,000 to $2,000 upon graduation." One of the most important items a graduate should budget for is clothing, Fatemi said.

"Business suits and dresses aren't worn on campus but will be worn at work," he

Another expense graduates face is a security deposit for a place to live, and that's not always an easy thing to come up with, said Gil Sabatka, certified financial planner for Sabatka Financial Advisory Services Inc.

"If a person doesn't have the money at his disposal or any family resources, the ideal thing to do would be to hit some kind of emergency credit," Sabatka said. "You might be able to get an advance from your new employer or arrange something like

Coming up with deposits is not an easy thing to do for people who are just entering the job market, said David Frey, personal financial planner for IDS Financial Services Inc.

"A good consumer should be aware that they'll need money to start off," Frey said. "It's pretty difficult. That money doesn't just fall out of the sky."

One type of credit graduates should try to stay away from is credit cards, Frey

"Young people tend to get in trouble with credit cards," he said.

Credit cards give a person a false perception of what their budget is, Sabatka

"It actually gives a person the perception they are earning more money, because they are spending more," Sabatka

Credit cards are typically a a very expensive means of purchase, Fatemi said.

"People buy more than they can afford and don't pay it off within the grace period, so they end up borrowing at high interest rates," he said.

Savings is another priority graduates should put high on their list, Sabatka said.

"In theory one should always have enough money in savings to live on for two to six months, and keep it there," he

Being prepared is the best way to handle problems that may arise in managing your finances, Fatemi said.

Renting options should be researched

Checklists helpful before signing lease

LORIE BYSEL

Collegian Reporter

Spring is here and the time is right for apartment hunting.

There are several things to look for before signing a lease, however. According to a packet about what to do before renting, provided by the Codes Inspection Office, when looking at an apartment, students should talk to the people that live there presently.

They should ask who the landlord is and how to contact them. It is also important to inquire what the place is like, if the landlord makes repairs and if there is a bug problem.

When meeting with the landlord, students should examine the contract or lease carefully. If there is any part of the lease that is not understood the Consumer Relations Board in the SGA Office at the Union can be contacted for interpretation if needed.

Also, according to the inspection packet, a checklist of the condition of the rooms and the furnishings should be made to go over with the landlord before moving in. The Code Inspection Office also holds its own inspections of apartments, and they look for the things that most people wouldn't think about, said Brad Claussen, code inspection officer.

"When we do an inspection, we check that the interior and the exterior is structurally sound," he said. "We check for adequate plumbing and that the fixtures aren't leaking.

The apartments must be wellventilated, the electrical system must be installed safely and must have appropriate emergency exits, said Roger Stewart, fire inspector.

"When we inspect an apartment, we look for working smoke detectors and fire extinguishers that are in good shape and have been serviced," he said. Some older homes have a problem with using a lot of extension cords and poor emergency exits, Stewart said.

"We check the fire alarm system in bigger apartment complexes, and we have just started checking for sprinkler systems in new apartment complexes of 16 or more units," he

Brad Claussen, City of Manhattan code inspection officer, said most of the housing inspectors' workload comes from student housing. Students house-hunting can get help on what to look for and what to stay away from in leasing from the Code Inspection Office.

Graduates offered special deals

Manufacturers provide unique automobile finance programs

DARLA GOODMAN

Collegian Reporter

"Finance companies really want to finance college graduates because statistically, college graduates never go bad," said Richard Nettles, business manager at Elkins Motor Co. Nettles is referring to the special deals offered to college graduates by many auto manufacturers.

The deals, which are available to anyone who can provide proof of graduation and employment after graduation, barring a bad credit history, offer such features as deferred payments, capped interest rates and

The GMAC program is available to a student up to six months before graduation and one year after, as long as the buyer has accepted an offer of employment.

The Ford program, which is in effect until December 1991, is available to those who have earned their degree since October 1989.

Graduate students are also eligible for most of the programs as long as they have a suitable source of

The college graduate program is designed to allow the graduate to purchase a new vehicle before they start a new job," said Wayde Houghtaling, salesperson at Dick Edwards Ford-Lincoln-Mercury.

Both Nettles and Houghtaling estimate their dealerships make 40 to 50 deals each year, but the number can vary greatly.

The programs offer payment deferral programs in which a buyer can take possession of the car, but not have to make payments for three or four months, depending on the program. With some programs, however, interest is charged during that time.

If buyers finance their purchases on a 60-month loan, and defer payments for three months, they will make only 57 payments. The amount of the deferred payments will be averaged into the other payments.

The programs also have interest rate caps, setting a limit on the interest rate that can be charged. For example, the GMAC program cap is 12

Houghtaling said the interest rates depend on the credit history of the buyer, the length of the financing agreement and the type of job and income to be earned. More economical cars also eam lower interest rates.

Another method of financing the purchase of a new car is to go through a local bank.

The biggest difference between bank financing and the financing programs is bank interest rates may be typically a little lower, but more money is required for a down payment, said Steve Riebel, vice president of Kansas State Bank.

He said through the finance programs, a buyer will typically finance a higher amount of money.

What I tell everyone who comes in here is to check out all your options and figure them out mathematically," Riebel said. "Whatever fits their needs is what I tell them to look Riebel said the finance programs work best for some people, while bank loans work better for others.

Rebates of $500 or more are offered as incentives to college graduates thinking about buying a new car. Some programs require the rebate to be used as part of the down payment on the car, while others allow the buyer to take the money as cash to spend.

Nettles said the program is really between the buyer and the finance company. The dealer plays only a facilitating role.

"The responsibility actually lies between the buyer and the finance company. We just facilitate the ap-

Nettles said approval of the fi-nancing deals is often received in just

He said this is because of the good record of college graduates in the financing program.

Since college graduates are often first-time buyers and are inexperienced, they are a little afraid sometimes to take advantage of the deals, Nettles said.

He suggested people looking to buy a car should do three things: go to the dealerships and collect all the brochures and information they can, decide what kind of car they are looking for and find a dealer they trust to tell the truth.

Nettles said buyers can use books and periodicals at the library to research what dealers pay for cars. If buyers know that, they can make a legitimate offer and know if the sales person is being honest with them.

Houghtaling also suggested potential buyers visit the dealerships and talk to an experienced sales person

Popular vehicles purchased through the GMAC program include the Pontiac Grand Am or Grand Prix and GMC trucks, Nettles said.

Adjusting to new community easy with involvement

DAVID PRITCHARD Collegian Reporter

Getting involved in a new community is easier than most people

"You just have to be assertive, and do it," said Randy Martin, president of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce. Most communities offer a wide range of activities for a person to become involved in, such as community theater, art classes and special events, Martin said.

"It will kind of depend on what the person is interested in, but most communities have a softball team, a church or some kind of organization to get involved in," Martin said.

"If a person wants to concentrate on work, he may be able to get involved in some kind of program at work," he said.

The chamber of commerce or parks and recreation office can be contacted if a person wants information such activities, Martin

"Many communities have leadership programs," said Rosemary Crilly, president of the Wamego Chamber of Commerce.

The leadership program con-sists of seven to eight classes that discuss what leadership involves, whether it be political or civic, and how to address the needs of the community, she said.

"This is a good thing to get involved in, because it looks good on your resume," she said.

Also, many communities usually have some kind of restoration project in which anyone may take part, she said.

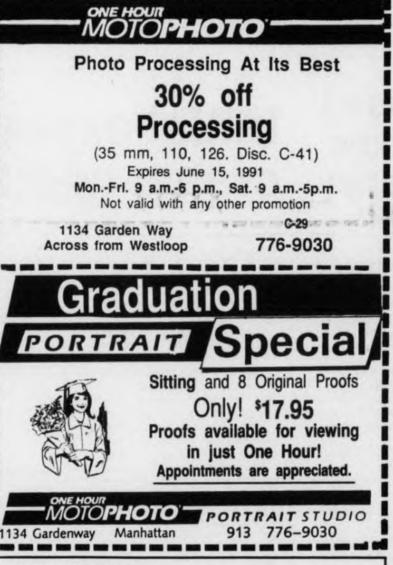

"A lot of communities are doing things such as Adopt-A-Highway or park clean-ups," she Volunteer work is one of the easiest ways to get involved in a new community and is an essential part of most communities, Martin said.

"Most volunteer organizations welcome people to help," he said.

Services, convenience counts in bank choice

JODELL LAMER

Collegian Reporter

Choosing a bank that is right for the individual is not as easy as it used to be.

Choosing the right bank has become an increasingly important issue since the early 1980s, said Jinwoo Park, professor in finance.

The deregulation of the banking system in 1980 had two major effects on the way banks operate. The first was the elimination of interest-rate ceilings on deposits.

"Before this time, there were almost no differences in the interest rates that banks paid," Park said. "Now, most banks are engaged in price competition. As a customer, you must shop around to get the biggest yield.'

The second effect of this deregulation is the increase in the number of failing banks in recent years.

"From 1940 to 1980, there were less than 20 bank failures per year.

In 1980, there were almost 150 failures," he said. "In 1987, there were almost 200, and it's getting

One way to evaluate the safety of a bank is to consult the Bank Safety Directory, which is available in many libraries, Park said.

The directory uses information about the bank's assets and equity compared with information on problem loans to make a safety index rating. The higher the index number is, the more solvent the institution is considered to be.

Depositors should choose accounts insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. An FDIC insured account is covered up to $100,000 for one account per person at each institution, Park

"Even if an account is insured by FDIC at a failed bank, it still may take a while to get the money from the account," he said.

Food stamps aid students

Department of Agriculture provides alternative supplemental incomes

PAUL NOEL

Staff Reporter

For students with low incomes and graduates who have not found a job, food stamps may become an alternative supplemental income.

The Department of Agriculture provides food stamps through the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services in Manhattan.

Kim Davis, income maintenance supervisor for Riley and Pottawatomie counties, said there are many students who receive food stamps, but single student families are rare.

"Most are family groups," Davis said. "Husbands and wives with and without children, and single parents are the majority of students who apply for food stamps."

Most students are not eligible to receive food stamps unless the nonparent student works at least 20 hours a week, or is on a federal work-study program and meets the maximum income requirements.

Davis said there are many students who qualify for food stamps, but do not apply for them.

Students are certified each semester, she said, and residents are certified every six to 12 months.

A student not enrolled in summer school who attended school in the spring and is enrolled for the fall semester, Davis said, is still considered a student. Also, any financial aid a student receives is considered

Many desposits on apartments and houses are withheld because of damages to the walls, ceilings and carpets. Sometimes students can repair those damages without losing their deposit.

CLEANING

BETH PALMER

Collegian Reporter

Moving out of an apartment can be a stressful event. Getting repairs made on the walls to get the maximum deposit back can make the day even more stressful.

Damages to the apartment and costs for cleaning carpets are the primary reasons deposits are withheld.

"I've been real reasonable for most students," said Don Cooper, owner and manager of five apartments. "On the average, people have been really good.

Cooper cited the main types of damages as holes in the walls and doorways, which usually stem from people getting angry and punching the wall. The next most common form of damage is simply leaving the place in a general mess.

I had one student who made damages that took me 80 hours to fix," Cooper said.

If there are damages made, the main concern of students is whether to repair it themselves, hide it or let the landlord know.

'I put a hole in my bedroom wall in my old apartment, and I never got it repaired," said Jared Gregoire, junior in history and English. "My roommate and I covered it with a mirror when the landlord came to check us out, and he never looked."

Joel Gittle, graduate student in music education, worked in carpentry for two years and gave a basic description of how to repair holes in the walls.

If the hole is larger than two inches, it should first be covered with a netting material, Gittle said. You should then fill the hole with caulking material and paste it over with anything flat.

The netting material makes the job shorter and catches any material before it falls down inside the wall," Gittle said.

The next step is to smooth it over with a fine grain sandpaper until it is even and smooth with the wall. Once it hardens, you should take a damp rag and wipe the wall down. It is then ready to be re-painted.

Some people prefer not to take chances on doing it themselves and hire professionals to repair the

"We had a Nerf basketball game get out of hand a couple of years ago and a little damage was done. Somebody's butt went through the wall," said Brad Kirmer, senior in criminal justice.

"We hired someone to repair it, and they put a new wallboard in, replastered and repainted," Kirmer said. "I know other people who've tried to cover up damages and have done a shoddy job."

The question of what is the cheapest alternative is now most important. This depends on the extent of the damage and how much skill in repairs you have.

"It would probably be cheaper to do it yourself if you're responsible for the damage," Kirmer said. "Landlords would probably charge you more for the labor.

Gregoire agreed and said, "They're usually pretty strict and try to keep as much of the deposit as they can. If you can redo some of the damages you did, do it yourself because you'll save a lot of money."

Cooper disagrees and would rather have his renters let him know about the damage so he can handle it personally.

Exit talks for loan pay-back required

KEVIN CARROLL Collegian Reporter

Paying back student loans is a main concern of students who are about to graduate.

"One of the most important things for a student to do when graduating is to continue good communication with their lender," said Annita Huff, interim assistant director of financial aid. "Sometimes students think that the situation will just take care of itself, and they find themselves in default on their student loan."

According to the March 29, 1991 report from the Department of Education, K-State's default rate is 4.6 percent, Huff said.

"This is an excellent default rate," she said. "We have always managed to have a low default rate here at K-

Huff said there are a couple of reasons for the low rate.

The federal government requires students to view a 10-minute preloan interview that has information concerning repayment of the student loan, Huff said.

K-State requires all graduating seniors, who have student loans, to attend an exit interview with the financial aid office.

"The interview will contain information concerning monthly payments, loan consolidation and various reading materials concerning student loans," Huff said.

Judy Bonjour, student loan representative for the Kansas State Bank, said the Stafford loan has a sixmonth grace period, providing time for the student to find a job.

More recent loans students are now paying back now have an interest rate of 8 percent, Bonjour said.

She said if a student were to borrow student loans through four years in college, they would have a total of about $13,250.

VICKI KNIGHT Collegian Reporter

There are many things to consider when moving out of an apartment. One of the biggest decisions for students is whether to do it themselves or hire a professional mover.

Gary Wilder, moving consultant for Coleman American Moving Services Inc., Manhattan, said they move students anywhere in the country and within Kansas.

Cost is based on weight and distance, and prices vary according to whether the move is interstate or intrastate, Wilder said.

Prices are set by the Interstate Governance Commission, Wilder factors, he said. Supply and demand is taken into consideration in the U-Haul business.

If the truck or trailer is going to be dropped off at another location, the prices can vary depending on whether the location needs equip-

Trailers are from one-fourth to one-third less expensive than a truck, Hunter said.

"For many college students, if not going very far, it is cheaper for them to do it themselves since they don't have enough stuff to justify a professional mover," Hunter said.

The last few years, however, car sizes have been reduced to the point where they are often unable to pull trailers, he said.

Hunter said after paying the costs for a hitch and trailer, it may be easier to just rent a truck.

Students need to make reservations early for the trucks and trailers, since this is this is the busiest time of the year for most moving companies,

Majors, experience sometimes unrelated for college graduates

JODELL LAMER Staff Reporter

Some K-State graduates may soon be working in jobs unrelated to their academic major. Faculty advisers attribute this to a variety

"It's hard to say who really took a job that's actually related," said Jim Akin, director of career planning and placement. "The only thing you can do is ask the student if he or she thinks it's related."

He said a student may graduate with work experience in a certain area and may decide to continue working in that area, even though it may not exactly coincide with the student's major.

Problems in finding a job can be caused by several factors. It may be a poor year in that particular job area or the student may have started late in the job search.

"As far as the actual job search for that first job after graduation, we think that everybody should get involved at least in the beginning of the next to last semester," he said. "So if you're graduating in May, we suggest getting started at least by August.'

Akin said the office provides workshops around campus on jobsearch strategies.

"We would encourage students at any level to attend these and start getting a sense for what goes on a resume - even when they're a freshman - and what kind of job search strategies might apply," he

"We try to make as many opportunities available and provide as many resources as possible to our students to help them market themAkin said the office helps stu-dents who are having trouble finding a job by suggesting unexplored avenues or other possibilities for employment.

"Much of the success really has to do with what the person has done while he or she was a college stu-dent," he said. "Doing more than you have to do and doing it better than you have to do is very vital."

Andrew Barkley, assistant professor in agricultural economics, said most students in the College of Agriculture are able to find jobs related to their major after graduation. Barkley has been doing research concerning the employment of graduates from the college.

"If a student does not get a job related to their major, it is typically for personal reasons or a voluntary choice," he said.

To graduate school or not to graduate school? That is the question many students ask themselves after they receive their bachelor's degree. Many students think some of their job offers are inadequate, and graduate school is the most logical option.

"I didn't get a job offer that I liked," said Clint Eads, graduate in electrical engineering. "I was faced with the option of either going home or returning to school and furthering my education."

He said it would be more beneficial for him to be here at K-State hunting for a job rather than sitting idle at home.

"If I get an offer this summer, I will probably take the job," Eads said. "If I don't, I will go ahead and finish my master's."

Bill Casey, graduate in agricultural economics, said after graduation he wasn't sure what he wanted to do, but he did know that higher education was important.

"I really didn't look that hard for a ob after graduation," Casey said. There were jobs out there, but I decided that graduate school would help me receive a better job."

Casey said if he were offered a job in his first semester as a graduate student, he would have accepted.

"I am glad I decided to go on and finish because in my curriculum, I have received some valuable on-thejob training," he said.

According to Jim Akin, associate director of career planning and placement, 20 percent of K-State graduates choose to go to graduate school. This figure is an average of all of the colleges," Akin said. "For example, this figure might be 5 percent for students in architecture and 35 per-

Nathan Hemman, graduate in mechanical engineering, said the job market was poor when he graduated. "The mechanical engineering department had an opening for a GTA, so I decided to take it and start graduate school," Hemman said.

Steve Warren, graduate in electrical engineering, said he planned to finish up graduate school from the very beginning because of the

"I wanted to gain more experience in science," Warren said. "Master's students are better candidates for management and executive positions."

He said he has learned more in his two years as a graduate than he did in five years as an undergraduate.

"Graduate school is an excellent opportunity to take something other than all the required courses," Warren said.

Students design apparel for exhibition

LAURA BIRRELL

Collegian Reporter

Students in apparel design modeled garments Wednesday evening for a pre-judging show to determine which garments will be in the Collegiate Couture Apparel Design exhibition Saturday.

About 40 to 50 designs will be chosen from this show for an exhibition from 4 to 9 p.m. in the McCain Auditorium lobby.

'The show Saturday encompasses a semester's worth of work on the computer, talking to people and working on your own designs," said Angie Lacey, junior in apparel design and vice president of Apparel Design Collective.

This exhibit is set up like an art exhibition. We spend a lot of time on our clothes, like an artist spends time on their art work," Lacey said. "When the garments are displayed in this way it is easier for people to see the detail in the clothing."

To enter a design in the show, a student acquired points through joining Apparel Design Collective and helping to organize the exhibition, said Janice Huck, assistant professor of clothing and textiles.

"It is a good experience to organize the exhibition, because they might set up fashion shows in their careers," said Artyce Hedrick, instructor of apparel design.

"Some of the judging is done by people in the industry. One year, a student was offered a job by a judge on the spot," Hedrick said.

Awards will be given for the best of eight categories - such as tailoring construction, commercial pattern, fashion illustration and original design.

"There will be men's, women's and children's clothing," said Betsy Johnson, senior in apparel and design. "There will be illustrations of hats at the exhibit, also.'

The wide variety of garments is just a sample of what apparel design students do, Lacey said.

"The show offers a place for us to show everybody what we do and how we spend our hours," she said. "This is a good way for people in the community to see what we do and that we deserve to be here."

The exhibition is free and open to

Campus safe in tornado

SUZANNE BROWN

Collegian Reporter

Kansas has a claim to fame with the story of Dorothy and Toto and the Wizard of Oz. Kansas has also been referred to as Tornado Alley. So, when severe weather strikes, do students know where to go?

John Lambert, director and associate professor of public safety, said every department and facility on campus receives a set of severe weather procedures every March.

'We ask that this set of procedures is posted," Lambert said. "Essentially, it advises people to go to a basement if one is available, and if there's not, to go to an inner corridor and get away from windows." Lambert said, in the event of

Civil rights complaints long process

Process often may take years before settlement reached

DAVID FRESE

Staff Reporter

After about two years, the May 3 hearing on Luis Montaner's civil rights complaint against Bushwacker's will find a settlement the two parties have been unable to reach.

Many may think the 1989 San Juan incident is just so much water under the bridge, but the Kansas Civil Rights Commission's process for resolving complaints is a lengthy one.

If it would've been possible to find a settlement in the case, it's probably safe to say it would've been found by now.

A person with a complaint must telephone, write or visit the offices in Topeka or Wichita within six months of the incident. After that, the office staff helps draft a complaint.

The commission then investigates the incident in a nonadversarial position - that is, it must investigate the complaint objectively.

After conducting interviews and investigating the incident, the investigator must rule whether there is a "probable cause," which is a finding that an act of discrimination did occur.

If the commission can find no proof the respondent acted in a discriminatory manner, the commission must find no cause.

In the Bushwacker's incident, probable cause was found and steps were taken to move toward a conciliation.

At the conciliation stage, the commission staff attempts to settle the matter. Both parties are contacted and asked if a settlement can be reached based on the results of the probable cause determination.

This settlement would include measures such as compensation to the complainant and an assurance that the same type of act does not happen again.

If the conciliation process fails, the commission's legal staff examines the investigation and advises the investigating commissioner as to whether a prima facie of discrimination can be presented.

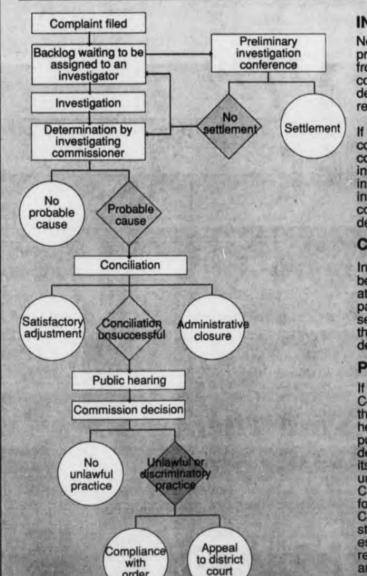

The matter is then taken to a public hearing.

Once the evidence proceeds to a public hearing, the case is heard by a state hearing examiner, who will ultimately issue a proposed finding that illegal discrimination did or did not occur.

A favorable ruling for the complainant would lead the commission to order the defendant to pay the complainant; in the Bushwacker's case, an amount not more than $2,000 to Montaner for pain, suffering and humiliation.

The steps are basically the same in every discrimination or harass-> ment case.

Civil Rights complaint investigation process

INVESTIGATION

Nearly all complaints initially go to the preliminary investigation unit. Staff from this unit attempts to set up a conference with both parties to determine the facts of the case and to resolve the complaint.

If the preliminary investigation conference fails to resolve the complaint, the case is assigned to an investigator for a complete investigation. At the completion of the investigation, the investigating commissioner makes a probable cause determination.

CONCILIATION

In cases where probable cause has been shown, the Commission staff attempts to conciliate the matter. Both parties are contacted and asked if a settlement can be reached based on the results of the probable-cause determination.

PUBLIC HEARING

If conciliation is unsuccessful and the Commission's legal staff determines commission's legal staff determines that the case has merit, a public hearing is scheduled. Following the public hearing, the hearing examiner's decision goes to the Commission for its approval. If there is a finding of unlawful or discriminatory practice, the Commission may award up to $2,000 for pain, suffering and humiliation. The Commission may also issue orders to Commission may also issue orders to stop discriminatory practices, to establish and maintain employment records, to rehire the complaintant and to clear the complaintant's employment record.

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) - A judge Wednesday derailed a plea bargain in the $1 billion settlement of the Exxon Valdez oil spill, saying a $100-million criminal fine was insufficient punishment for the damage Exxon did to Alaska's environment.

A separate proposed settlement of civil claims provides $900 million in restitution to clean up the Alaskan shoreline. With rejection of the fines, Exxon could withdraw that agreement.

Leaders ask legislators for time

TOPEKA (AP) - American Indian leaders asked legislators Wednesday to give them time to work out an agreement with the state on whether sales taxes will be collected on goods sold on reservations.

The House Taxation Committee has before it a bill that would prevent the state Department of Revenue from attempting to collect state sales taxes on transactions on reservations for one year. Indian leaders appeared to show their support.

However, Steve Cadue, chairman of the Kickapoo Nation, also told the committee the bill should specifically say the state recognizes the right of reservations to levy taxes because tribal taxes provide revenues to support services.

The tax status of goods sold to non-Indians on reservation land has become a legislative issue this year. Because the reservations are considered independent nations, tribes are not required to remit the sales tax on goods sold on reservations.

"We're proud of what we're doing," Cadue said. "We are trying to utilize our own resources and our own government to become self-sufficient."

Cadue said lawmakers should not lump the four Kansas tribes together, either. The reservations of the Iowa, Kickapoo, Potawatomi and Sac and Fox nations are in northeast Kansas.

13-year-old found shot to death

GRAIN VALLEY, Mo. (AP) - An essay in which a girl expressed concern about guns was read during a memorial service Tuesday, as a special investigating squad continued efforts to find Beverlie Tracy, 13, had been shot to death, and her legs were cut off at the hips. Her body was found April 15 in the Missouri River in Lafayette County.

More than 400 people attended the memorial service at the First Baptist Church in Grain Valley. James Tompkins, the principal at Grain Valley Junior High, read from an essay that Beverlie wrote last summer.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Metro Squad that began working on the case Saturday said investigators plan to question a prison inmate who is believed to have been in the Grain Valley area when the girl was last seen.

The Metro Squad also reinterviewed Debra Tracy on Tuesday about the disappearance of her daughter. Police would not discuss the interview.

Neither the mother nor the prisoner is considered a suspect in the slaying of the girl, Detective Rick Pilgrim said.

Police said they believed the man was in Grain Valley when two witnesses saw Tracy April 4.

As K-State ambassadors, Amy Hiett and David Shepard have gone from wearing an occasional purple sweatshirt to wearing purple dress clothes and having dinner with President Wefald.

Shepard and Hiett said they are very excited about their roles as this year's ambassadors.

"We have to be neutral toward K-State and promote it in a positive way. We feel this is important in that we are able to listen to what others have to say," Shepard, junior in pre-law, and Hiett, sophomore in psychology, said.

'We are also attracted to purple clothes. I own three to four purple dresses and even have a pair of purple shoes," Hiett said.

"We got to talk informally with them and heard some great stories. In working with the president's office, we have been able to meet people on more of a personal basis and get to know them more as themselves," Hiett said.

"I like being able to observe people in power. We have seen that these people are just as normal, kind, considerate and humble as others. We feel it is possible for us to accomplish this as well," Shepard

Another part of the ambassadors' duty is to escort people. Hiett and Shepard had the opportunity to escort parents to the president's awards banquet.

"The president's award is the highest honor for alumni. Alumni donate money as well as time to the University," Shepard said. "We drove people in the University vans to Harry's Uptown for dinner."

Summer is a very busy time for the ambassadors because they attend two or three barbecues a week. The cookouts provide a chance for them to meet the area's K-State alumni and speak to prospective students.

"We have our own personal stationery so if a student has a question that we can't answer at the time, we can write them back with an answer. This personal touch makes them

"All the traveling we do is through the Alumni Association and is paid for by them also. Once we had to fly to Wichita and used K-State's jet," Hiett and Shepard said. 'Anytime our trip takes over two hours, we fly."

An adviser from the Alumni Association office sets up the two ambassadors' schedules. President Wefald's secretary, Shelley Bunker, helps them out as well.

Along with being ambassadors Shepard and Hiett are also full-time students, members of the Greek system and involved with other campus organizations.

We feel that it is important to remain well-rounded as far as interests go. We have learned to make sacrifices, but our duties as ambassadors come first," Shepard and Hiett said.

Being an ambassador isn't the easiest thing in the world, and Hiett and Shepard have made their fair share of mistakes, they said. Although they have addressed someone incorrectly, taken their backpacks to a luncheon, and forgotten proper table manners on occasion, with practice, they have become more relaxed in their position.

But the night they were chosen as ambassadors doesn't seem that long ago - it was a cold and stormy Saturday afternoon, during halftime of the K-State vs. Oklahoma game.

"The weather made the moment very memorable," Hiett said. 'When I got out to my parents' car later, my feet were so swollen from being wet and cold, I couldn't even get my shoes back on."

"Despite the weather, I was very happy that I had been selected. I was so happy that I jumped up, which surprised my escort," Shepard said.

The process of becoming an ambassador began by simply filling out an application, Hiett and Shepard said. The application consisted of essay questions concerning K-State and the individual's pride toward the University.

Next, the applications were screened, and the applicants were interviewed by a panel consisting of the student body president and other student leaders.

Before going on with the rest of the process, each applicant had to give a brief presentation on the 1990 Homecoming theme, "I like the State in U," and what it meant to them. Shepard said the reason for this was to put the applicant in a public speaking role.

Applicants were then interviewed by a panel of faculty members from the Alumni Association, KSU Department of Intercollegiate, Anderson Hall and department representatives from each of the colleges to provide a broader focus.

Sexual violence often learned in childhood

grandfather died 13 years ago on Christmas Day of a heart attack, and even though I was 22, it was one of those inescapable events in life that shake you.

His death was even more painful to me personally because we were close. For a period of about three years during my adolescence, my grandfather filled a void in my life created by the accidental death of my father when I was four. My mother eventually remarried, and as a result, we moved away. Little did I know then, that the sudden separation from my "Papaw" would repeat itself one day with

Since his death, I have had many dreams involving my grandfather. The dreams usually involve some normal family activity in which, at least for me, he is always the central

What has always amazed me regarding these dreams is the intense and joyful sensation that I feel in his presence. The mind is a remarkably deceptive organ in its manipulation of reality and our perception of it. In a strange sort of way, I could almost look forward to having one of these dreams. If it were not for the equally intense and familiar loss I feel when I awake, I am sure that I would. To my relief, experts in such phenomenon indicate this is a normal process many people go through during much of their lives in dealing with the death of a close family member. I suppose, too, there is a certain amount of longing for what might have been. For inchildren. More importantly, he never saw any of my children. He never saw me finish college (the first time), or any of those other "nevers" that could have been had he lived just a few years longer.

The truly special thing about my grandfather, and the memory I hold onto more than any other, was that he loved kids. Just about anyone who knew him would mention how much my grandfather loved kids. I can recall many happy hours of games, and tickling, and horseplay that he would initiate just before bedtime with very little resistance from

I received an unpleasant phone call from the oldest of my three sisters a few weeks ago. I suppose her call was stimulated by the large amount of news coverage recently concerning the victims of sexual abuse. It has been shown that sexual abuse usually happens to children, who in turn grow up to pass the problem on to their children, who in turn grow up to pass it on ....

My dear sister, out of genuine concern not only for me but also for my children, felt compelled to inform me that my grandfather -my "Papaw" - had sexually abused (over an extensive period of time) our mother, our aunt, a female cousin, and lastly - our little sister — when she was only nine years old.

Certainly, never once did I suspect that such a monstrous thing was occurring to anyone I knew. Nor did I suspect that such a monstrous thing was being perpetrated by someone I knew. There was never a time in the 22 years I knew my grandfather that such a thought entered my head regarding his actions, much less actually have reason to suspect something. And I am the most skeptical person I know.

Yet, sadly ... undeniably, it did indeed

One of the things I would like to know, and yet will probably never know, is "why." Was my grandfather a victim also, in a long, never-ending progression of victims to some distant malignant source, or was he the malignant source?

A petition is circulating this campus asking for signatures demanding the removal of "Penthouse" and "Playboy" magazines from the K-State Union Bookstore. In a Collegian article last Friday, Riley County attorney Bill Kennedy was quoted as saying these magazines encourage men to treat women as sexual objects, and pornography begets violence and a lack of respect for people.

I would like to believe that such a simple thing as removing sexually explicit materials from bookstores will then reduce violence against women, sexually or otherwise. If what Kennedy says is true, then the small sacrifice in individual freedom would be well worth the gain in the diminishment of human suffering (assuming we could reach some consensus as to what constitutes pornography).

I cannot say I completely disagree with Kennedy's assessment, because there is some evidence within the last decade or so (i.e. D. Zillmann, 1979, "Hostility and Aggression." Hillsdale, NJ: Erlbaum; D. Zillman and J. Bryant, 1984, "Pornography and Sexual Aggression." Orlando, FL: Academic Press.) that indicates that people (men and women) massively exposed to sexually explicit films tended to trivialize rape and were more accepting of promiscuity and male sexual dominance. One important conclusion reached by Zillman in a follow-up report (1985) is that pornography produces sexual discontent and dissatisfaction with one's sexual partner. He also concluded that viewing pornography may foster an appetite for more and stronger pornography - that people become, in a sense, "desensitized."

However, I fear it goes much deeper than that. I believe pornography, by any definition, and as it applies to the individual consumer, is a manifestation of a more fundamental problem. I think the "encouragement," as Kennedy calls it, is rooted in each man's conditioning and training in early childhood.

I believe the type of aggression my grandfather exhibited is founded in behavior taught to all men (and women as well). Despite all the achievements in equality of the sexes during the last century, I believe we still live in a society that places a premium on men in very subtle, yet significant ways. A society that encourages men, at a very early age (and without the aid of magazines such as "Penthouse" and "Playboy") to regard women as of lesser value, lesser importance, and whose needs and ideas are of little or no consequence.

I am relatively certain, and all of my family concurs in this, that my grandfather neither used or kept such materials at home or elsewhere. As far as we know, they played little if any role in determining his unfortunate choice of action involving female members

Sexual violence, like racism and other hate crimes, is to a large extent learned in childhood. So it must be that the solution to stopping these crimes rests in the knowledge and understanding we impart to our children.

still love my grandfather. Real love is hard to come by, and once realized, even harder to change. However, I am glad he didn't live to make contact with my children.

And, sadly ... I don't think I will be having anymore dreams about my grandfather.

Do-nothing session can now only hope to build for future

Failure is the one word that including taxing professional aptly describes the 1991 Legislative regular session.

Kansas' severe tax and budget problems. With this in mind, the only chance for success the Legislature has is to leave the wrap-up session with something to build on for next year.

In January, skeptics said the Legislature and the new governor lacked knowledge and leadership. This has proven true for this session. Let's deem this session as the do-nothing session and Joan Finney as the dormant governor.

In a sense, the do-nothing activity of the lawmakers may not have been all bad for the state. Most of the proposals introduced this session - services and restoring the inventory tax - would have The lawmakers couldn't solve only made the state's economic problems worse.

> During the wrap-up session, the Legislature will have to make a decision. They must pass a budget. Let's hope lawmakers are sensible and won't put the state in worse shape than it's already in.

The Legislature and the governor should learn some lessons from this session and should resolve the problems before next session.

Unless something exceptional happens, this session will be a failure. Lawmakers' only hope now is to leave something positive for next session.

Why peace is so important and why we will never get it

stay at peace for very long. I mean males. War serves a very vital male purpose. War reinforces the belief that physical strength and the knowledge of how to take life is more important than psychological strength and the knowledge of how to give life. I'm afraid there will always be weights to lift and people who want to lift them, so long as there are butts to kick and people who want to kick them.

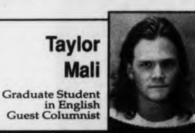

There are too many women in the world; that's the problem. It sounds idiotic, but look at it in terms of the law of supply and demand. The overabundance of women has decreased their value as a sex in general. Ask any woman who wants a boyfriend but can't find one; there just aren't enough men to go

Guys know, or discover as they get older, the advantages of being in the minority. The ratio is in our favor; there are women all over the place. You can always find another girlfriend. You can always find a younger wife. You never have to look too hard. For every woman who says "No," you can always find two more who will say "Yes, please." It's depressing, but it's true.

And it shouldn't be this way. Nature never intended for relations between the sexes to be this bad. Nature intended for men to outnumber women — bigtime. Contrary to popular belief, there are more boys born every year than girls (I think the ratio is about 52:48). My father told me the lack of males was because men, in addition to being struck down by more diseases, tend to get killed off in robberies, car wrecks and wars. I think he was only half right. I think men help nature kill other men off, so they will seem more important. They want to make sure years of peace don't allow their sex run rampant.

Men are not nearly so important as their sparse numbers seem to make them. The truth is the world would be a much better place if men were a dime a dozen, and women were wonderfully rare.

Imagine a society in which men outnumbered women a hundred to one. Women could pick and choose their mates more freely than men do now. Perhaps we would become polyandrous. Think of how the quality of men would suddenly improve. Men would sit up straight and be more careful about how they looked and acted. They would develop at least as arduous a morning routine for "looking good" as many women have Men would try to figure out what women really wanted in a man and then do everything they could to make it look like they had it. They would invest a lot of time and energy in exhibiting to women how good a compan-ion, or father, they could be. Wife-beaters, alcoholics and lazy bums might as well give up; they wouldn't have a chance in hell of getting

Women have outnumbered men ever since men realized it would be better that way. Always better to be in demand. And because there aren't enough men to go around, people feel justified in condemning homosexuality among males as a threat to posterity. Some say, "We can't have men wasting their time with each other when there aren't enough to go around in the first place. It says so in the

What does the Bible say about women laying with women? Not much. In fact, the Bible is pretty silent on that topic. Why? Ask any typical American guy, and you'll get you answer: "If I was a girl, I would definitely be bisexual. Definitely.

Bisexuality would become more socially acceptable if men greatly outnumbered women. Men would have to learn how to be emotionally supportive of ech other. At the very least, men would not be so deathly afraid of physicality. Nowadays, unless it is a punch, block, handshake, backslap or the occasional I-don't-care-if-people-look-at-usfunny hug, heterosexual men rarely touch each other.

There are many reasons why men should get together and talk. But nowadays, unless it is under the auspices of a fraternity (those unassailably masculine organizations), any flier advertising a "men's meeting" or "men's rap session" is avoided like the plague by every self-respecting homophobic male. The discrepancy between the number of men and the number of women affects us in subtle ways.

Look at how the overabundance of women in the world has affected the English language. There is no male equivalent for slut, even come close). There are no male equivalents for chick, wench, vixen, harpy, slattern, termagant, shrew, virago, beldam, meretrix, harridan, demimondaine, siren, lamia etc. Literature always seems to find reason to create more derogatory words for women. Is it because there has always been so many more of them? Like the Eskimo's 27 words for snow? A misogynist is a woman-hater; a misanthrope hates mankind; is there a word for a man-hater? Would it be misandrist? I can't find it anywhere.

The truth of the matter is all men are insanely jealous and always have been of women's ability to give birth. I'm not saying they will hop at the chance to artificially carry a child (as is medically possible now), they just wish they had more to do with the process in the first place. Why do we see so many male gods giving birth (out of their heads, thighs, belly-buttons, etc.) in mythology? Why was the abortion issue ever brought into the political arena? Why are we a patrilinear society? Men want to leave a part of themselves on the earth when they die. They can either build some massive erection, or they can father a child. But to father a child, they desperately need a woman. Women are the middlewomen. And they do all the tough work. So when the child is born, the man is afraid the woman may say the child isn't his anymore. And, of course, it may not be.

And men are afraid of women's sexuality as well. Why else was the brutal practice of clitoral excision practiced in cultures too far apart to have ever come into contact with one another? If women had been given free reign over their bodies, they would never have had to hide away during menustration. In fact, they would have long since recognized menustration as the safest time to have sex and not get pregnant. Perhaps they would have started a kind of natural birth control. And when their husbands and lovers said, "Yuck!" they would have said, "Get over it."

lot of violence toward women in America is due to the fact that women still hold the power of rejection. We haven't killed off enough men to preclude the possibility of being rejected by a woman. I'm not sure what we should do now. Maybe we shouldn't do anything. Just freeze a couple of thousand years' supply of sperm and let the men keep fighting it out until they kill each other off. Just get it

Athletics on target for Essential Edge

Feel-good donations stem from football

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

Intercollegiate Athletics has worked to overcome a stigma of being money-hungry and has used its vast exposure and team nature to raise 69 percent of its $15-million

Rusty Andrews, Essential Edge Campaign associate director, said he feels athletics gets its fair share when it comes to campus finances.

"Some people and, unfortunately, some people on campus, feel that when it comes to fund raising, athletics gets all the money," Andrews

"But, comparing their goal to the overall goal of the campaign, you see that it is not a major percentage of the overall campaign. Most of this cam-paign is academic," he said. "In fact, in terms of dollars that come in annually, a very small percentage goes to the athletic department.'

The athletic department, however, is one of few entities on campus that has its own development staff to raises money for its programs, said Athletic Director Steve Miller.

That development staff works to cultivate alumni and friends of the University. The perspective donors are targeted for contributions. The cultivation of athletic department donors depends largely on the mood and success of athletics at K-State.

"Success of the football team has made an enormous difference," Miller said. "Simply because people give when they feel good.

"Just as the basketball season has hurt us a little bit. The people who normally have given may have been a little more restrictive this year because of that." Howard Sherwood of Wichita, Intercollegiate Athletics volunteer project chairman, said the correlation is not that cause-related.

"We've had a pretty good effort to date on fund raising," Sherwood said. "Yet, we finished last in basketball and towards the bottom in football. If you use that correlation, we wouldn't have had any success at

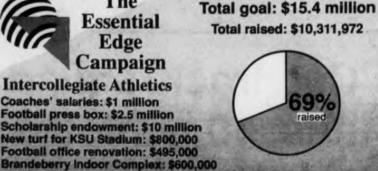

Regardless of the season standings, there is still a financial connection with an emotional victory.

"There is an instant gratification and an instant response mechanism," Miller said. "When we go out and beat Oklahoma on a Saturday, Sunday I make some calls.

"I take advantage of those highs and lows, sometimes daily, sometimes hourly. I'll stop somebody right after a game. If you lose, the pitch is if we had more money, we would win. If you win, you say your

"You do your homework by talking to tax people who are willing to give you some information. You may do it by talking to a lawyer, or the best way to do it is to talk to similar people in their crowd."

That friend-based, fund-raising approach is what drives the Essential Edge Campaign.

When I have to raise $1,000 from people, I have $1,000 donors identify other $1,000 donors for me," Miller said. "They help you get other donors because they don't want to be the only ones out there giving.' Athletics, by its nature, has an easier time finding and cultivating donors becuase of its team mentality.

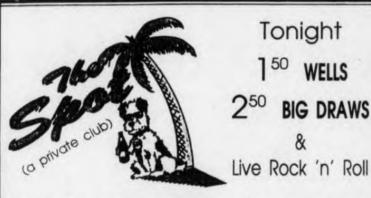

Andrews said, "Athletics is something a lot of donors take a lot of pleasure being involved in. They enjoy being part of the team.'

The athletic department has made efforts to use its fund-raising capabilities to benefit the whole University.

We give our proceeds from Midnight Madness to the library and Unted Way," Miller said.

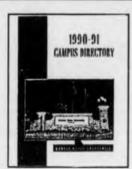

"I go out and speak for agriculture and engineering all the time. I'm also asked by the Alumni Association to speak at student recruitments."

The athletic department receives most of its funds in endowments, which allow the recipient to only use the interest, not the principal, Miller

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN SPORTS

'Cat track squad inks 10 athletes to letters of intent

From Staff and Wire Reports

Ten new track and field athletes will be wearing purple and white next season.

Coach John Capriotti announced the signing of five junior college All-Americans and five high school athletes. Some are expected to become forces to reckon with right away.

"A couple of these people are capable of winning Big Eight ti-tles next year," Capriotti said. Here's a quick look at a few of the newest K-Staters: ■ Brian McAlpin comes to K-State as the NJCCA runner-up in the 600-yard run and with three years of eligibility after one year at Coffeyville Community

■ Anthony Williams took national runner-up honors in the 1,000-meters his freshman year at Butler County Community College and was the Indiana state cross country champion as a senior in high school.

Aaron Larsen, a prep standout in the javelin, won the state title as a junior at Concordia and returns as the nation's fourth-best javelin thrower. He currently leads the state of Kansas with a throw of 216-0.

Mark Kimbrough, a native of Pittsburg, currently holds the record for the best junior college long jump of the outdoor season at 26-0%. Kimbrough represented Neosho Community College as the national runner-up in the long jump during the indoor season. Capriotti said he is expecting big things from these newcomers.

"Marc Kimbrough and Aaron Larsen are as good as anybody in the Big Eight right now," Capriotti said. "Brian McAlpin has run a 1:10 in the 600, and that time won the Big Eight Indoor meet this year. I also think Anthony Williams can be in the thick of things in the 800 and 1,000."

Rounding out the men's recruits are Mike Becker and Derek McClinon.

Becker, a two-time cross country All-American and runner-up in the 1991 NJCAA two-mile, hails from Downs. In addition to being a high school cross country champion, he also won four gold medals in the state track meet as a McClinon will add depth to the middle distance ranks. He won the Indiana state title in the 800 his sophomore year and was the runnerup as a junior.

Fewer women were recruited because the team is losing only one performer, All-American Angie Miller, to graduation.

The women will welcome a trio of distance runners and a javelin thrower to the squad.

Two 3A rivals, Jeanene Rugan and Lesley Wells, will contribute to the Wildcat distance corps. Rugan won the 3A state cross country title last fall while competing for Elinwood High School. She owns the state's fastest times so far this season in the 3,200 and Wells, a product of Cheney High School, was a three-time gold medal winner (800, 1,500 and 3,200) in the state track and field meet as a junior and runnerup to Rugan in the state cross country meet last fall.

Martha Pinto, a native of Anaheim, Calif., took second as a junior in the 3,200 in the California championships with a time of

Baseball team beats Creighton

Homers by Rippelmeyer, Culp lead win over Jays

JENIFER SCHEIBLER Sports Reporter

Nine innings of solid baseball may be all it takes.

Nine innings were played by the K-State Wildcat baseball team last night in a 6-2 win over ninth-ranked Creighton at Frank Myers Field.

The win might be just what the 28-21 Wildcats need to get on a roll heading into the final portion of the Big Eight season.

Coach Mike Clark said Wednesday he finally saw his team give good offensive efforts.

"The hitters are doing their jobs," he said. "I thought we really put four or five quality at bats together for the first time in awhile."

Clark also attributed the win to his team's aggressiveness. "That aggressiveness is what I'm looking for," he said. "That's the little thing we need to get us going." The Wildcats turned the tables on the Bluejays, who had beaten them 7-4 on Tuesday in Omaha. Left fielder Brian Culp got things rolling in the first inning when he hit a two-run homer to put the Wildcats up 2-1 and extend his five-game hitting streak to six. The Bluejays later countered and tied the game 2-2 when third baseman Scott Stahoviak hit a stand-up double to right and scored on a Chad McConnell single.

K-State took the lead for good in the fourth inning on Larry Peddy's crash play at home plate and held Creighton at bay for the remaining innings.

The Bluejays threatened to score in the fifth with runners on first and second when a double steal attempt was foiled by the Wildcats.

A three-hit Wildcat seventh inning was highlighted when Brad Rippelmeyer took a Mike Heathcott pitch deep to left for his eighth homer of the season.

Heathcott picked up his first loss of the season, as his record drops to Again the Bluejays threatened by loading the bases in the eighth. But Brett Bock, K-State's third pitcher of the evening, got McConnell to pop to right for the third out.

Sean Pedersen (5-1) earned the win for the Wildcats in three innings of work, after coming in for starter Dan Driskill in the fourth.

Clark said Pedersen's performance has been exactly what the team is looking for in a reliever.

"In relief, Sean has done a great job of coming in and throwing strikes and just getting after people," Clark He added that a win like this one gives a team some confidence confidence his team needs heading into a four-game weekend series with Nebraska. 'We've been struggling a little bit," he said. "We're not necessarily playing bad ball - we're just not able to put things together at the right

Clark said hopefully the win is something to build on for the upcoming series with a conference foe.

Yes, the history of Wildcat golf isn't the most tradition-filled. Coach Russ Bunker and first-year women's coach Mark Elliott still have their hands full, but at least they're no longer tied behind their backs.

The men's team has finished in the cellar of the Big Eight for 13 years in a row. The women haven't dazzled the golfing gods either, having never finished outside of last place since the inaugural Big Eight Championship, a span of 15 years. In the 1989 and 1990 seasons combined, the teams placed in the top half at a meet

At last, there may be greener fairways for the Wildcat golf teams. Still, because of past history, K-State will head into the Big Eight next Monday, reminding most of that old cartoon character - no, not a bird or plane or even a frog - yes, Underdog.

The men have emerged after early season finishes of 14th and 16th to post impressive finishes to end the regular season, placing fifth and

The women have been consistent all season, placing either third or fifth, regardless of the number and quality of teams competing. Three times this year the women's team has turned in rounds of 322. Before this season the school record was 323.

Bunker's men's team has finally set itself on a five-man squad. The five are junior college transfer Bill Graham, sophomores Jim Brenneman and Richard Laing, junior Brett Vuillemin and freshman Will

The five have proven competitive as they've never established a top-tobottom order. However, Graham has proven the most consistent finisher. Seibert was added to the five-man squad at the mid-point of the year.

The women, on the other hand, have had less intrasquad competition. They have finished in the same order in every meet except last Tuesday's Husker Spring Classic, in which Denise Pottle led the team. Sophomore Valerie Hahn, Big Eight golfer-of-the-month, had been in the team's top spot all season.

Behind her are proven veterans junior Adena Hagedorn, senior Chris Adams. Junior Theresa Coyle and Pottle, a freshman, have filled the void in the fourth and fifth position giving the team a solidified roster.

Conditioning questions arise

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

A schedule of four intense practices each week is putting the offseason conditioning work of the football team to the test.

Under the direction of strength and conditioning coach Jerry Palmieri, the squad participated in a program of running, agility training and weight lifting over the winter to prepare for the spring season.

Head coach Bill Snyder said prior to the opening workout of the spring that while he was generally pleased with the effort put forth by the team, the true measure of development would come in competition.

After a week of practices, Snyder said he didn't feel a sufficient amount of progress was achieved.

"I think we're not where we need to be at this point," Snyder said. "I can see where we have made some progress, and it shows that we have been able to maintain a higher level of intensity."

Snyder said he is particularly concerned with the physical condition of the squad's linemen.

"I'm always concerned about their conditioning because they're bigger players and need to carry more weight to compete," Snyder said. "Conditioning at that position is an aspect we can definitely improve upon."

One member of the Wildcat football team whose conditioning isn't in question is sophomore defensive back Thomas Randolph. As well as participating in spring practices, Randolph is preparing to compete in the Big Eight Track Championships May 19-20.

Randolph earned All-America honors during the indoor track season in the 100-meter dash. Last Saturday, while his football counterparts practiced in Manhattan, Randolph was competing in the KU Relays in Lawrence, where he helped the 880-yard relay team to a first-place finish and placed second in the 100-meters.

Randolph saw action in eight contests at defensive back for the football team last season and returned a blocked punt 36 yards for a touchdown against New Mexico State.

Randolph hasn't run into a great deal of conflict between the workouts of the two sports, Snyder said. The coach said Randolph's participation in track has been encouraged by the football coaching staff.

"It's good for Tommy, and it's good for the track team, and it's just fine with us," Snyder said.

Golfers receive academic honors

K-State's golf team has received yet another honor in this standard-setting season.

The 1991 Phillips 66 Academic All-Big Eight Golf Honor roll has been selected, and the Wildcats are represented on both the men's and women's squad.

Sophomore Richard Laing and junior Theresa Coyle were named to the first team and sophomore David Sedlock was a second-team selection.

Laing, a business major, was one of the nine men golfers on the first team with his 3.06 grade point average. Laing, team leader and varsity standout, has a scoring average of 77.8 strokes through 12 rounds of play. Last season, he became only the third golfer in K-State history to qualify for an National Collegiate Athletic Assocation regional qualifying tournament.

This honor exemplifies what Richard has brought to K-State in his two years here," said Coach Russ Bunker. "He's a great individual, a great player and a true student-athlete."

Coyle, a 3.19 GPA business student, joins the academic team for the second straight year. She has been a consistent performer as the women's number four player. She carries a 86.7

"I am very happy for Theresa," Bunker said. "It's amazing she has enough time to study with as much time as she dedicates to her golf game."

Sedlock, also a business major, carries a 3.63 GPA. He has seen action in one varsity meet this year and posted a respectable 79.7 stroke average. "It's a great honor for David," Bunker said. "In my mind, he is well-deserving of first-team honors as hard as he works in

Basketball banquet on Friday

The K-State men's basketball team will put the final touches on the 1990-91 basketball season this Friday with its annual awards banquet and dinner.

The event is scheduled for 7 p.m. in the Big Eight Room of the K-State Union. Ticket cost is $12 per person, and tickets may be obtained by calling the K-State Ticket Office at (913) 532-7606 or Barb Howe at the Basketball Office, (913) 532-6531. The athletic department asks all arrangements be made in advance by noon Friday.

Featured speakers include K-State President Jon Wefald, Athletic Director Steve Miller and Coach Dana Altman.

Wildcat netters honored

Senior Thresa Burcham and sophomore Suzanne Sim of the tennis team were selected to the 1991 Phillips 66 Academic All-Big Eight Tennis Honor Roll.

Burcham, majoring in fine arts, earned a 3.04 grade point average to earn the honor for the second-straight year. Sim, majoring in business, has the highest GPA on the squad, recording a 3.42 mark.

"It's a great honor for our program," Coach Steve Bietau said of the awards accorded the players. "I think it confirms something about these girls. They're good students and good people, as well as being good tennis players."

Burcham and Sim have played key roles on the court for the Wildcats this season. Sim has occupied the No. 2 position on the team most of the season, while Burcham has played primarily in the No. 4 spot.

tied the game with a two-out, two-run homer in the ninth inning, and Gary Thurman won it with an RBI single in the 10th as the Kansas City Royals beat the Cleveland Indians 4-2 on Wednesday night.

Russ Morman led off the top of the 10th with a single off Doug Jones (0-1) and Kurt Stillwell sacrificed him to second. Thurman singled home Morman for a 3-2 lead and continued to second on the throw to the plate. Thurman stole third and scored on Terry Shumpert's sacrifice

Gibson's homer off Jones tied the game and spoiled a brilliant effort by Indians starter Greg Swindell.

Swindell retired the Royals' first 14 hitters before Morman lined a single to right with two outs in the fifth. Stillwell singled Morman to second, but Swindell struck out Thurman to end the inning.

It was the fifth time in his career that Swindell has reached double figures in strikeouts and the first since he struck out 10 against Texas on July 15, 1989. Gibson's homer cost Swindell his first win of the season after three straight losses - the worst start of his career.

Jeff Montgomery (1-1) got the win, working out of jams in both the eighth and ninth innings.

Bret Saberhagen, who beat Swindell in the season-opener, allowed two runs and 11 hits in seven-plus

The Indians got four of the hits but only one run in the first inning. Alex Cole led off with a single but was picked off first base. Singles by Mike Huff, Carlos Baerga and Chris James produced the run.

Plan would limit alcohol at greek houses

CINDY BRIGGS Collegian Reporter

A policy proposal that would greatly restrict alcohol use at K-State's greek houses was presented to a panel of Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council Tuesday.

The policy, which was presented by a joint task force, is to ensure uniform alcohol regulations for all chapter houses registered through IFC and Panhellenic. The task force was formed because of a growing concern among chapter presidents that they will be liable for any accidents or illegalities that might arise from chapter-sponsored drinking, said Johnny Gaffney, president of IFC.

"The purpose of the policy is not to make chapter houses go dry, but instead it's to reduce the liability of the chapter and make them act responsibly," Gaffney said.

Currently, chapters establish and enforce their own alcohol policy. Because of varying regulations enforced by the differing insurance companies, some houses have stricter rules than others. Gaffney said by adopting a universal policy, it will put all chapters on an equal level.

If adopted, the policy will prohibit kegs from being present at any social event but will allow beverages to be brought to the premises individually or bought through a licensed cash bar. There will be no alcohol allowed at philanthropic events or at events planned, organized or funded by two or more member chapters where members do not have guests.

The policy also states chapter treasuries will no longer purchase alcoholic beverages, and open parties with unlimited access will be banned. Sororities which co-sponsor an event at a fraternity will also be held responsible even though the function is not on their chapter

To ensure compliance if the policy

Committee consisting of eight fraternity and eight sorority members will share the responsibility of attending all social events. They will oversee the event and fill out an evaluation of the chapter based on its compliance.

President of Panhellenic Council Jenny Barenberg, senior in biological science education, said the SRC will make sure the proper steps are being taken to reduce liability of the chapter houses. She said it's up to the chapters to enforce policy among its members.

"The power of review rests with the individual councils," she said. A few chapter presidents expressed concern over the prohibiting of philanthropic events in taverns. Joe Grossnickle, president of Delta Upsilon fraternity whose philanthropy is held in a tavern, said if this passes he doubts his fraternity will be able to hold the Delta Upsilon Calendar Girl Contest next year.

"Our ability to raise money for our philanthropy will be hurt severely," he said. "I doubt we will be able to continue having it."

Kevin Sichra, president of Phi Delta Theta, said the policy won't lessen the risk of liability on chapter presidents.

"I knew when I took the office of president I would be held liable," he said. "I don't think the policy will reduce the risk. Whether it's a social event or not, the president will still be held liable.'

Task force member and president of Pi Beta Phi, Jada Kohlmeier, said it was hard not to get defensive during the meeting because of all the work the task force did.

"We knew we couldn't write a policy covering every situation," she said. "We needed to have this meeting, so we could clarify our stance."

Kohlmeier said she was disap-pointed with the idea of tabling the issue until next fall. 'We could debate this forever. The precedence will be set by the judicial council," she said. "You can't write into law every hypothetical situation. We need to make a decision now."

BIKE organized for awareness

Improving campus cycling a goal

CANDY MCNICKLE

Collegian Reporter

Students and community members interested in bicycling can now be involved in a new bicycle advocacy group.

Bicyclists Influencing a Kinder Environment was started four weeks ago by Mike Adams, Manhattan resident, and Philip Cook, research assistant in forestry.

BIKE's goals include promoting bicycles as safe, healthy and environmentally sound, improving surrounding facilities for bicycle use and increasing cyclists' awareness of rights and responsibilities.

Current membership is 20 members, and the meetings have an open-door policy.

"Our club is not solely for students. We want the community to get involved too," Adams said.

BIKE has been meeting every Tuesday night to get organized. These meetings are devoted to discussion of issues of concern to

"We feel cycling is not seen as a serious means of transportation, and making others aware of the responsibilities of bicyclists is important," Cook said.

Members said they feel the current bicycle situation at K-State needs improvement.

"There are some unsafe riding practices and conflicts with pedestrians, but the two should be able to work together," Cook said. of enforcement.'

"Inadequate bike racks are a problem on campus," said Antony Cherin, freshman in pre-law and president of BIKE.

The rack design does not enable one to lock an entire bike, Cherin said. Many bike models have a quick-release mechanism on the tires, allowing a thief to take the rest of the bike also.

Other members voiced complaints toward the bike racks. The lack of good lighting makes it easier for bikes to be tampered with and bike racks are not secured to "BIKE hopes to improve conditions for cyclists around the Manhattan area and also those on campus," Adams said.

To promote bicycle safety, members said they would like maps of current bike lanes and bicycle rules to be made available to those interested. BIKE members said they want to promote what is available and encourage bicyclists to use it.

To work better with the campus police, it has been suggested that an officer patrol campus on a bicycle. This would give the officer a bicyclist's perspective.

"This would give the police a form of cycling experience and hopefully encourage needed feedback from campus cyclists," Cook said. "Currently, we feel no threat

Rock critic to discuss obscenity

DARLA GOODMAN Collegian Reporter

The emotionally charged issues of free speech, sexism and obscenity and their relationship to freedom and responsiblity in American life will be examined by Tim Riley at 7 p.m. Thursday in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Riley, a rock critic and author of the book "Tell Me Why: A Beatles Commentary," will discuss current controversies such as the regulation of popular music lyrics, Robert Mapplethorpe exhibits and flag burning.

His multi-media presentation, titled "Find the Cost of Freedom: Sex, Satanism, and Flag Burning At the Dawn of Censorship," is sponsored by the Union Program Council's Issues and Ideas committee.

The Issues and Ideas committee is one of nine UPC committees. The 14 members work to bring speakers on a variety of public issues to campus. Committee head Vince Reece, senior in finance and marketing, said the committee brings one major speaker to campus each year.

"The good thing about Tim Riley is that he uses a lot of audio-visual aids," Reece said. "It won't be just a boring lecture."

Last semester, the committee cosponsored a lecture on date rape, and it brought Greenpeace to campus in the spring of 1990.

Reece said he researched what speakers and topics were available and the committee chose the topic it felt the student body would be most interested in.

Senate to debate bill that supports education program

By the Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Senate is expected to debate by Friday a bill setting up community-based education programs that supporters hope will reduce the number of teen-age girls who become pregnant.

Anti-abortion groups oppose it because, they claim, it actually would encourage sexual activity among teen-agers and lead to more abortions.

The Senate Judiciary Committee endorsed the bill on voice vote Wednesday, sending it to the Senate for debate during the Legislature's wrapup session. It has passed the House, and a bill appropriating $105,000 in state funds to implement the program has gone to Gov. Joan Finney.

The bill creates the communitybased teen-age pregnancy reduction program, which is patterned after a program in South Carolina. Supporters said it has been successful in reducing the incidence of teen pregnancy in that state.

The program involves schools, churches and local communities in teaching youths that abstinence from sex until after high school graduation is the surest way to avoid getting pregnant. But it contains a provision that says if they won't abstain, they should be taught the risks and bene-fits of different methods of contraception.

It is that provision that drew the opposition of Right to Life of Kansas and Concerned Women for America during a hearing prior to the committee's approving the bill.

Pat Turner of Wichita, representing Right to Life, said public programs tried so far in this country have done nothing but promote premarital sex and have led to increases in the number of abortions performed on teen-agers each year.

"The facts are indisputable," she said. "They clearly demonstrate the failure of the public programs and the justification for their termination. The notion that teen-agers can be deterred from becoming pregnant by more and easier access to contraceptives and abortions is like expecting people who are given free gasoline to reduce their driving."

our weather is upgraded from a watch to a warning, the phone system has a direct line to the plant and the KSU police department. This notifies people on campus.

Collins said the siren could be activated when a storm was moving in that could cause severe damage by Rosanne Proite, assistant director of housing and dining services, said the residence halls have an informal process in the event of severe weather due to the large number of students involved.

"Within a hall, students are directed by staff members to the lower floors and asked to stay within the corridors rather than their rooms," Proite said. "It is much safer in the corridors with the doors shut, than to stay in the rooms near windows."

Proite said in the event of severe weather, the campus police call several reception desks, and the desks, in turn, inform other reception desks in their vicinity.

"A committee has been formed on safety issues that may develop posters and things like that. But, my feeling is that we need to be prepared at any time of the year, not just in a particular season, such as tornado season."

In the event of severe weather when students do not reside in organized living groups, Collins said it is best for persons to seek shelter in the lowest level of a building.

'We recommend to try and find a small room or interior hallway," Collins said.

"I know there are buildings on campus with basements and some hospitals and churches are also good."

Vicki Saenz, sophomore in public relations, and Rob Rawlings, sophomore in pre-law, are dance partners during one of the various Spanish dances as Roxana Ortiz, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, looks on. The dance lessons were sponsored by HALO.

Housing stressful

Apartments often on yearly leases

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

Thursday, April 25, 1991

Finding an apartment can become a stressful process for seniors graduating in December.

Most apartments in Manhattan are leased on a yearly basis, which leaves few alternatives for the December graduates.

One alternative, though, is to move into a residence hall.

Bob Burgess, assistant director of housing and dining, said there is a provision in the application for a residence hall room for a student who will not be enrolled the next

Hix said he has inquiries about six-to 10-month leases but never offers them. Contrary to its name, Hix said most of the clientel at Campus East are non-students.

Red Bud Estates and Park Place Apartments are a few places in Manhattan that offer leases on a less-than-12-month basis.

Park Place offers a 10-month lease for $10 more a month than a 12-month lease would cost, Shelly Reeves, manager of Park Place, said.

Aggieville business sells live mouse traps, recycled paper

JODELL LAMER Collegian Reporter

Dolphin-print wrapping paper, live mouse traps, water-saving devices and recycled paper products are a few of the items that can be found in The Earth Store, which opened Wednesday.

Thursday, April 25, 1991

Manhattan residents Laurel Nichols and Mitchell Leggs opened the store at 1128 Moro to provide an outlet for recycled products.

There's a growing awareness of what people call a green movement or environmental awareness," Leggs said. "There's no single outlet for these products in Manhattan."

Leggs said a lot of people have been ordering the products from catalogs for a long time. The store carries products ranging from household cleaning supplies to pet

Several businesses in town carry products made from recycled paper and other environmental products. A similar store was opened in Lawrence, but it is much smaller and carries mainly recycled paper products, Nichols said.

"A big difference between us and the other stores is that their products are usually packaged in plas-tic," Nichols said. "We try to use minimum-impact packaging, such as biodegradable paper."

Nichols and Leggs said they went through environmental magazines and catalogs for suggestions on what products to carry. "We really investigate the packaging," Nichols said. "A lot of packaging is biodegradable, but only under certain conditions.

There are a lot of products out there. We have to make sure they tested on animals."

Nichols said there is a problem in getting people to use the recycled paper products.

Everyone recycles, but people don't realize you have to buy the recycled paper products for it to work," she said. "People are always hesitant to change. Some of these products require a minimal change, but they are changes that will have to be made eventually."

Leggs said the products made from recycled paper are slightly higher in price because of a lower demand for the products.

"As the demand increases, the price of these products will go down," he said.

The store is also trying to collect information about environmental awareness and make it available to customers. The store carries several different magazines, Leggs said.

Persuasion students research, propose campus shuttle service

LORIE BYSEL

Collegian Reporter

A team of students in a persuasion class have come up with an idea that might help curb the age-old parking problem at K-State.

In 1987, a consulting firm hired by K-State to look into the parking problem came up with the idea of a shuttle bus service.

The firm figured about 15,000 to 20,000 pedestrian trips were made to campus each day, and by starting a shuttle service, they could meet three goals. A shuttle system would increase the access to campus, meet campus access interior circulation needs of off-campus residents and help the parking problem. The persuasion group dove into the archives to find this information but was unable to find out why the idea was never adopted by the University, said Kirk Howie, senior in accounting. The group of students is doing a research paper on the problems existing today and have revised the old proposal.

The group suggested using the parking lot at Bramlage Coliseum as a place for students, faculty and staff to park their cars and wait for the shuttle bus, Howie said. Each student would be required to pay somewhere around $5 or $10 during enrollment to cover the cost of the bus.

"I think more people would be likely to use the system this way," Howie said.

"There are so many benefits to a shuttle service. It saves the environment, the trees, helps the students, faculty and staff and creates less traffic on the streets," he said.

It also means getting to class faster, not having to look for a parking space and reducing problems caused by driving in bad weather. It is adapted for future needs and conditions, Howie said.

"It is apt to increase enrollment,

"We found people were upset because the University used a consulting firm instead of our own civil engineers," he said.

There are so many benefits to a shuttle service. It saves the environment, the trees, helps the students, faculty and staff and creates less traffic on the streets.

> -Kirk Howie senior in accounting

However, they aren't sure if this is a reason why the proposal never went

"This idea would move K-State toward the future," he said. In 1990, a proposal was made to put a four-level parking garage south of the K-State Union.

The old stadium would be raised, and two towers would be saved and placed at the entrance across from the filling station to enhance the garage's appearance. Eventually, a new hall would be built to house an art museum and the enrollment and computer centers.

Again, for some reason the proposal was not approved, Howie said.

Now it would not be economically feasible to do this because of the recession, Howie said.

The shuttle service is cheaper than parking passes, a parking garage or making new parking lots.

The parking problem has been around since 1924," said Dawn Haines, senior in social sciences and speech.

"We decided to call the shuttle bus system 'The Cat," Haines said.

Osage City unit welcomed home from Saudi Arabia

BETH GAINES

Collegian Reporter

As a military cadence echoed inside the metal hangar, family, friends and loved ones welcomed home several units, including the 129th Transportation Unit from Osage City, late Thursday evening.

Spec. Loren Laird, of the 129th, was among the procession. Laird was enrolled at K-State in hotel and restaurant management before being called up to active duty in the Laird was welcomed home by a large gathering of his family, including two sets of grandparents and his girlfriend of four and a half years, Kim Skinner, sophomore in accounting.

Skinner said it had been difficult to wait for Laird to come home. "Right now, I am so excited I just can't sit down," Skinner said.

Alberta Huber, Laird's mother, had been corresponding with Laird for the entire period he was in Saudi Arabia and said the mail was sometimes very slow.

"In the beginning, letters would get to Loren in about eight days. But from January through March, letters would take three to four weeks, and packages up to five weeks," Huber

Huber said she is extremely close to her son and sent many items to Saudi Arabia for him.

"I sent some shrimp, canned of course, smoked oysters and beef jerky. The jerky was by far his favorite," Huber said.

Skinner said she is also planning a homecoming for Laird.

"My grandmother sent me some money, so I am going to take him out for a really nice dinner; probably Red Lobster," Skinner said.

Being called to active duty can create much confusion in a student's life. Laird was sharing an apartment with Brad Elmore, undecided sophomore, when he was called.

In addition to withdrawing from school, there was also the problem of his apartment lease. "Loren has kept paying rent," Elmore said. Huber said the landlord hadn't been cooperative in the situation.

Huber said K-State and the financial aid office have been very helpful.

'I am just glad he's back so he can take care of his enrollment and financial aid business," Huber said. 'So I don't have to.'

When the formal welcome-home ceremonies were finished, a flood of families, balloons and flowers surrounded the soldiers.

The first to reach Laird's side was Skinner, soon followed by a smil-

Not only was Laird glad to be home, but his entire family echoed those sentiments.

"Even if we can't keep him, it is a relief to have him back in the States," said Dan Huber, Laird's step-father.

Skinner said she intends to make the most of Laird's homecoming. "This way, he can help me study for finals," Skinner said. Huber said she believed soldiers would receive a 12-hour pass, be at Fort Riley for three days and then be released, but those plans were yet to be finalized.

Parking spaces lost to planned traffic signal

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

Before the installation of the new traffic signal at the intersection of Denison Avenue and College Heights Road is finished, 100 feet of parallel parking on Denison will have to be removed.

Abe Fattaey, University engineer with Architectural and Engineering Services, said the parking spaces along Denison will be removed to widen the street for a turning lane.

Turning lanes will be installed on both sides of College Heights and Denison, Fattaey said. The University will also lose one parking space near Durland Hall to make room for a new curb.

The service the traffic signal will give outweighs any losses in parking it may cause, he said. The project has been something the University has been advocating

The Union Governing Board met at 5:30 p.m. Thursday to discuss smoking in the K-State Union, expansion of various departments within the Union and the budget.

There was an hour-long debate on adopting a new policy for smoking in

"We eventually want to become a smoke-free building," said Dennis O'Keefe, UGB chairman and sophomore in business administration.

The Union developed a smoking task force to develop proposals to be voted on by the governing board. The members on the task force ranged from faculty to students with breathing handicaps.

One of the proposed policies was a three-year plan, which stated that each floor of the Union would become a non-smoking area throughout the course of three years. The second floor would be the first to become smoke-free effective May 20.

This proposal went head-to-head with another proposal suggested by Dennis Marstall, student member and sophomore in political science. His proposal was for the entire Union

Burglar pigs out, hits piggy banks

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) - First the burglar pigs out, then pilfers from piggy banks.

In about 40 recent burglaries, residents reported that the culprit drank beer and soda pop, ate potato chips, leftover pizza and anything else readily available in the refrigerator then, piggy banks, purses, jars or cans of coins were looted.

Police said the burglaries began in January and stopped recently. In some cases, up to $300 was taken, but not televisions, videocassette recorders or other electronic gear, Omaha police investigator Bruce Decker said.

Investigators said they do not know why the burglaries stopped.

organizing a clothes drive. "It's the perfect time of year for a clothes drive," said Kymberly Beach, Silver Wings vice president. "People are cleaning out the old to make room for the new." Sivler Wings will collect the clothes at the K-State baseball games Friday through Sunday. A container in which to deposit clothes will be located by the concession stand at Frank Myers

The clothes will be given to the Manhattan Emergency Center. The center will give, not sell, the clothes to people and families who are in need.

FFA members to compete at K-State

Sunday afternoon, more than 1,500 Future Farmers of America members from across Kansas, will be coming to K-State to compete in the State Educational Contests in Agriculture.

Mary Kane, executive secretary for the Kansas Association of FFA, said high school students will be competing in 12 contest areas during the three-day event.

The contests, sponsored by K-State and the College of Agriculture, are an important part of the classroom experience. The contests test the FFA members on practical skills and their knowledge of particular agriculture areas.

Contest areas include livestock judging, dairy judging, poultry judging, meats judging, dairy products, crops, entomology, horticulture, agricultural newswriting and agriculture mechanics.

Health fair to be this weekend

The Riley County Health Department will have its annual health fair at the Manhattan Town Center this weekend.

The fair will be from 7 a.m. to noon Friday and from 7 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Kathleen Adams, directing of advertising and marketing, said it is free to the public.

"However, there is a small fee for some of the various health screens like the blood chemistry test. You get the same quality as if it were done in a lab, for a cheaper price," Adams said. Other health screens will consist of blood pressure and hearing

There will also be various talks and demonstrations, and nurses will give free counseling.

Censorship focus of Riley's lecture

DAVE McCULLAGH Collegian Reporter

Sex, Satanism and flag burning were the topics of Tim Riley's lecture Thursday evening in the K-State Union Forum Hall.

Riley, music commentator for Nation Public Radio and author of "Tell Me Why: A Beatles Commentary" and "Hard Rain," focused on the censorship of art, music, music videos and information.

He said the debate and censorship surrounding the rap band 2-Live-Crew was racially motivated.

Riley said the band would have just faded away if the courts hadn't ever brought up the question of cen-

But, Rana Wessel, junior in animal science, said she took them

"I found them offensive and it should be banned from children," Wessel said. "The week after the album was found to be obscene, it sold one million units," Riley said. "They made a mountain out of what would have been a zit on popular culture." Other than racism, Riley cites homophobia as another reason for recent censorship controversies, such as the works of Robert Mapplethorpe.

Mapplethorpe's works were the "The best thing about 2-Live-rew is they are controversial — result of the gay disco subculture of the late 1970s, Riley said.

"The most controversial subject was the sexual preference of the artist," Riley said.

Riley's next target was MTV, regarding the network's censorship of Madonna's "Justify My Love"

"For MTV to censor Madonna is rediculous; she taught MTV how to dance," Riley said. "MTV without Madonna is like a tootsie-roll without the tootsie.'

Riley said the reasoning behind MTV's actions was the message Madonna was sending regarding a woman's sexual freedom.

Riley commended Madonna for the way she handled an interview on ABC's Nightline regarding the video's racey scenes.

'She came off like a fiesty CEO and turned the tables to bring up the topic of brutality toward women and violence on network TV," Rilev said.

Riley said the songs that were controversial about 20 or 30 years ago are now being use to sell everything.

"I can see a condom ad using Bruce Springsteen's song 'Cover Me' in the future," Riley said.

Riley concluded his speech with a discussion of the information censorship during the Persian Gulf

"We do need to protect information that would help the enemy but we have a right to more information," Riley said.

"I think the censorship during the war was needed and was good," Wessel said.

Riley said it seems like censorship will get tighter in regards to information.

Landfill close

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

Riley County has nine weeks to find a new place to put its trash. The Riley County Solid Waste Management Committee met Thursday night to discuss terms for locatsoon to day night to discuss terms for locating and developing the regional landfill. It voted to recommend to the Riley County Commission a transfer station be built to accumulate larger quantities of trash before it is hauled Dan Harden, Riley County engi-New site needed neer and director of public works, said a transfer station could be quickly built and waste could be taken to other places.

Harden said he would ask the Kansas Department of Health and Environment to allow an extension for the present landfill until a transfer station is completed.

John Sjo, Riley County commissioner, said building a transfer station could give Dickinson County some time to decide if it wants to change its decision and become a member of the Big Lakes Solid Waste Management Compact.

Dickinson County declined the committee's offer to join the compact earlier this month, but said it would zone the Walker Quarry site to accommodate a landfill. A lack of representation was the reason the compact's offer was declined.

"Dickinson County has got a serious political problem if they don't get the landfill," Sjo said. "They have to clean that area up.'

It is in the best interest of Dickinson County to turn the abandoned rock quarry into a landfill, Harden

"It's taking a negative and making positive out of it," he said. Harden said the owner of the site, David Walker, wants to sell it, and Waste Management America is negotiating to buy it. "There is a gentleman's agreement tween David Walker and Waste Management (America)," he said. The committee debated if representation in the compact should be given equally or financially.

Sjo said agreeing with Dickinson County's idea of equal representation would cost the compact in flexibility.

"We're negotiating away our investment and our long-time planning and turning it over to the people who have spent the least time with the project," he said. "But we are gaining something. We're gaining the Walker site.

The committee also discussed the continuation of recycling efforts in Manhattan. The one-year pilot program, ending this month, has been extended until July 1.

Voters must remember Reagan-Bush 'deal'

"People do what their national interest tells them to do, and if it means lying to a friendly nation, they're going to lie thorugh their teeth." — General Alexander Haig, Secretary of State for the Reagan Administration ith former President Jimmy Carter in town today for a Landon Lecture (which, by the way, will be at 10:30 a.m. in Bramlage Coliseum), I could think of no better time to address another so-called dead issue. I'm referring to Ronald Wilson Reagan's self-initiated hegemonic Republican vanguard policy in dealing covertly with Iran.

Before anyone screams "Overkill!" I want us to look further back than the 1985 cut-off set by the near-sighted Tower Commission and further than the Congressional pseudo-investigation ever dared to squint an ethically categoried ever

I'm talking about Reagan-Bush and Carter-Mondale cutthroat campaign days. As usual, mudslinging, bandwagoning, high-priced black-tie meals and balloon animals were the mainstay of both parties. As you may well remember, however, one over-whelming issue dominated the election of 1980 — the Iran hostage crisis.

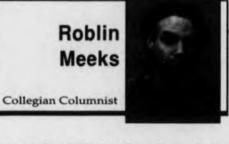

Fifty-two Americans were being held hostage in the embasssy in Tehran, and Carter had little success to speak of in trying to negotiate their release. After the tragic failure of the Eagle Claw rescue effort, the president's popularity was, perhaps, at its all-time low. Reagan-Bush, both hands filled with political mire, didn't hesitate to openly chide Carter for his foreign-policy ineptness in dealings with Iran. The Reagan-Bush campaign was so adamantly anti-Carter that it seemed it would do anything to win the election.

And, looking back, it seems they did just that. I remember watching Reagan's inaugural address on television many years ago and hearing that same day, actually during his speech, the hostages were being flown back to America. At the time, I thought little about the painfully coincidental timing of Reagan's waltz into the oval office and the hostages' first few steps back on American soil.

In fact, the whole thing appears more clandestine than John Sununu's vacation transportation. Just in the past few years, people have begun to take a second look at the documents, faces, ledgers, various high officials' sporadic fits of amnesia, shipments of arms just two months after Reagan took office and other curious tidbits of circumstantial evidence that make Nixon's antics look like nothing more than those of a repentant teen.

The facts are too complex and too numerous for me to mention all of them, but I thought I might want to give a brief outline of some of the more interesting events in honor of the former president's visit.

The Reagan-Bush campaign was wellequipped to deal with foreign policy, as it is estimated that more than 120 foreign-policy officials contributed to the campaign effort, including the highly questionable actions of then CIA director William Casey. (Compare that number with the 65 professionals the government's National Security Council employs.) And Reagan didn't lose in this department by the addition of Ford's CIA Director, and our friend George Bush, to the Republican ticket. Reports from members of the CIA talk of agency walls littered with pro-Reagan-Bush posters, many had the Reagan side cleanly — and conveniently — removed.

Another interesting fact is that the Ayatollah Khomeini, leader of Iran's revolutionary government at the time, made few distinctions between U.S. politicians. He hated them with equal fervor. But, mysteriously, Khomeini became considerably more docile in October 1980. As Mansur Farhang, a former U.N. ambassador from Iran, said, "Khomeini became accommodating, very relaxed about the prospect of a Reagan Presidency." Why?

If you were to ask former Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr, he would gladly tell you Reagan and Bush cut a deal with Khomeini that involved an increase in weapons supplied to Iran in exchange for the release of the hostages after the 1980 election. He cites as proof the secret emissary sent by Hashemi Rafsanjani, one of Khomeini's key advisers, to negotiate a more lucrative deal than was being offered by the White House at the time. The envoy supposedly met with Bud McFarland, Richard Allen and Laurence Silberman — all officials working directly under Reagan.

The many multifarious accounts that echo something found in Ian Fleming books are extremely difficult to wade through, and they are too protracted to give them justice here. But, just for curiosity's sake, a few covert meetings with Iranian officials and independent arms dealers took place in Madrid, Paris and the United States. Some of the more distinguished U.S. officials in attendance were Casey, McFarland, Allen, and yes, you guessed it, George Bush.

But it seems Vice President-hopeful Bush was equally adept at domestic espionage. In September 1980, Carter's hard-nosed dedication to the diplomatic long haul in negotiations were beginning to pay off. Sadegh Tabatabai, one of Khomeini's most influential relatives, urgently contacted the White House with a proposal. The hostages would be released if the United States would free frozen Iranian financial assets, keep out of Iranian affairs and return the shah's property, including the weapons he had purchased. Iraq's invasion of Iran that same month had taken its toll taken its toll.

For reasons unknown, however, two weeks before the election Tabatabai began delaying, whimsically altering demands and eventually abandoned altogether a call for arms. Similarly, he failed to come through on his promise to deliver the hostages by election day

It seems Bush used his intelligence contacts to pilfer a copy of Carter's briefing book. This allowed the Republicans to lip synch all of Carter's speeches if they wanted. Instead, they surreptitiously marred his efforts by dispelling any hopes of an October surprise with false, incriminating media hype. This scandal has its own name. It's called "Debategate."

or the sake of brevity, I had to leave out many important details. Currently, however, we know that the Republicans intended to humiliate Carter out of office by squelching the chances of a hostage release using unauthorized means in trying to develop a plan to accomplish this. We also know Reagan supporters quietly met with Iranian emissaries in October 1980. As a result, the hostages could have been kept an additional 76 days. If you don't believe me, do some research. The information is out there.

So, Carter in 1992? Probably not, but listen without prejudice. Bush in 1992? Well, personally, I wouldn't elect a traitor to the highest office in the nation. Would you?

I would like to give special thanks to Steve Statler for his help.

Future key for session

Students will foot more of the educational bill next semester after the Kansas Board of Regents approved an 8-percent hike for in-state students. That price will increase again in the spring.

K-State is a hidden jewel on the prairie. Its record of academic winners is surpassed by no other public university, but few know about its numerous accomplishments. Including, apparently, the state.

State legislators make a lot of noise about the importance of higher education. They say it's important to the future of the state of Kansas.

But this appears to be just hot air. When push comes to shove, higher education is the first thing cut from the state's budget. One of the things making K-State a winner is its affordability. Less than $1,000 per semester for a top-notch education can't be beat. It affords many students, who couldn't afford it otherwise, the opportunity to go to college.

Increasing tuition yet again will only hinder these students' right to an education. K-State will also be hurt by losing them.

The regents didn't have an option. Money must come from somewhere, and the state may cut the regents' budget still further.

The state can't say students aren't paying more than their share, and now it's the state's turn to follow through on years of promises to fund higher education.

Letters

Economic sanctions placed on Union

Editor,

I would like to respond to Keith Tate's letter to the editor regarding the removal of pornographic magazines as depriving students of rights.

In his letter, Tate states, "It does not hurt anyone, including women, to allow the sale of Playboy and Penthouse magazines in the Union Bookstore." I beg to differ.

Union Bookstore ..." I beg to differ.

Pornography degrades women and children in our society. Due to its exploitative images, pornography can foster an environment in which women receive less respect and are treated as mere objects.

Psychologists have also directly established a link between pornography and an increase in violent rapes and assaults. To a potential rapist, pornography can be just like a shot of whiskey to an alcoholic. In his book, "Men on Rape," Timothy Beneke interviews convicted rapists who openly admit having read or watched pornography prior to committing the rape or assault.

So what does all this have to do with the Union Bookstore? Why do I care only that the Union Bookstore sells Playboy and Penthouse? As Tate puts it, why don't I focus my energy on something remotely important?

Personally, I find that women on this campus have the right to know that when they walk into the Union Bookstore it is a place in which they can spend their money, knowing that it doesn't condone the sale of pornography. Making sure that women and children are not portrayed in a degrading manner seems like a pretty worthy cause for me to spend my time on.

This is not an issue of censorship. It is an issue of money. I pay fees every semester, and a portion of that money goes directly to the Union. As a student, I feel that I have a right to say how that money is spent.

I also have the right as a woman to express my need to feel safe and respected.

The selling of pornography in the Union violates both of these rights, not just for me but for all other students and their families. Until the pornography is removed from the Union Bookstore, I refuse to spend my money there, and I will encourage my friends to do the same.

Hearings provide educational chance

Editor,

Since its inception, the National Organization for Women has addressed issues of racism and race relations as part of its political agenda. We have also worked to strengthen local and federal laws which prohibit discrimination. We have encouraged those people with a complaint regarding discrimination to use the courts of justice in our land to mediate such conflicts when they arise. We believe that a democracy and justice system are only effective when citizens actually participate in them. Therefore, we encourage all Manhattan citizens who care about race relations and the fair hearing of discrimination complaints to attend the upcoming hearings in which the discrimination case brought by Luis Montaner against Bushwacker's will be heard.

This is an opportunity to witness the U.S. system of justice, which is said to be among the most fair in the world, at work. It will also be a time to learn how such cases are interpreted within our constitutional system of law. It will provide an opportunity to experience some textbook learning in action.

We encourage all citizens who want to learn more of how the system really works, to attend the hearings, which are set for May 3 at 9 a.m. in the Riley County Courthouse.

Arab-Israeli conflict on display in Union

Editor

Naser Hidmi accuses me and Yael Carmi of being misleading about the Palestinian display in the K-State Union last week. I know that the "facts" in his letter were distorted and misleading. And I am outraged by the continued name-calling and baiting in which he and many of his fellows engage. I could respond to and refute his distortions point-bypoint, but the debate about the Arab-Israeli conflict can not be conducted through letters to the editor.

Instead, I invite anyone who is interested in learning the full and complex story of the Arab-Israeli conflict to visit the Hillel table in the Union on April 29. We will not display pictures of the results of PLO activities, nor will we stoop to inflammatory rhetoric. We will only offer substantiated data and historical background to help the K-State community become familiar with the issue.

Art museum nears $4 million fund-raising goal

Small number of donors must make large contributions

Collegian Reporter

The proposed art museum is faced with many of the same challenges facing Farrell Library. But, unlike the library, the art museum is well on its way to reaching its $4-million

"Raising money for an art museum or a library are the two hardest things to raise money for," said Art Loub, KSU Foundation president. "It takes a long time to find prospects with the where-with-all to make that level of a contribution.

"For every 100 people who would support an athletic program, you might have only five who might be supportive of an art program," Loub

"It's a numbers game. You have the potential to get 45,000 people in the KSU Stadium to watch a football game. It would be a phenomenal success if you had 1,000 people show up to see an art show.'

Because the art museum attracts a small group of donors, their contributions must be rather large.

The old rule of thumb is 90 percent of the funds will come from 10 percent of the people on an art mu-seum," said Gary Hellebust, Foundation development officer.

'We would never be able to build an art museum with $50 gifts," Hellebust said. "There's not that many people out there who will support an art museum simply because it's not their interest."

Because the art museum has no constituency, donors who have a vested interest in art must be found. The art museum is finding supporters, and there are several large proposals on the table, Hellebust said. The reason behind the construction of an art museum is the 1,500-piece KSU Permanent Art Collection, which has no home. 'We have a lot of fine art - Picasso, Matisse, Dali and the list goes on and on of wonderful art - and they should be able to be seen by people besides me," said Mandy Doolittle, curator of the collection. "It's not really on display; it's hanging in offices," Doolittle said. "It's not a public display. Some of the art is in offices around the campus. Some is in the K-State Union, but places."

There are numerous factors besides a central location for the collection that demand construction of a museum.

Environmental concerns, such as humidity, moisture and dust prove detrimental to the works. Additionally, traveling exhibitions, which are virtually non-existent, would be more frequent.

'We could get much finer quality exhibits if we had a place that was very secure," Doolittle said. "Because when you go out and try to get an exhibit, (other curators) say, 'Do you have smoke detectors every ten feet? Do you have humidity control? Do you have temperature control?' All of these questions, and we have to answer 'no' to a lot of them.' With motivation like the quality of the collection, the art museum committee and the Friends of Art have been helping to secure contributions. "Ruth Ann Wefeld is heading it up, and she is fantastic," Doolittle said. "She's a whirlwind, and she's doing great things.

Things are going so fast. Nobody can believe it. Groundbreaking could be as early as next year. That's what we're hoping," she said. One question facing the museum, though, is its location.

The south side of the old stadium, south of the Union in the existing parking lot, the Union or the east side of McCain Auditorium are all areas Doolittle suggested for the structure. Doolittle said she sees the medium-sized museum used to its fullest. Included in the preliminary plans are three or four galleries for the permanent art collection - Gordon Parks, Regional Artists, American Collection and International Artists, Doolittle said.

Wildcats to battle 'Huskers at home

SCOTT PASKE

Sports Reporter

Never mind the fact that Nebraska occupies the Big Eight Conference basement with a 4-8 record heading into tonight's series opener with K-

Opponents from top to bottom get the same amount of respect from Wildcat coach Mike Clark.

'There's no such thing as a bad ballclub in the Big Eight this year," Clark said. "You better have your game face on each and every game."

Especially when a loss could mean the end of the line for a team. K-State, 28-21 overall and 7-9 in Big Eight play, will attempt to avoid such a disaster in a four-game set against the 'Huskers at Frank Myers Field.

Senior righthander Kent Hipp, 5-4, will take the mound for tonight's nine-inning opener, which is slated for 7 p.m.

The 'Cats can either solidify or soften their chances for a return trip to the Big Eight Tournament in Oklahoma City this weekend. K-State is currently tied for fifth place with Iowa State in the league race, one game behind Kansas.

What makes the topsy-turvy race so interesting is that even Nebraska has not been eliminated from a shot at the title. Missouri leads the Big Eight with a 10-6 record.

This is an amazing race," Clark said. "You can go from first to fourth to last in a matter of two weeks." And two weeks is what is left in the season. Clark said he is glad his team will spend the entire time at Frank Myers Field after playing 17 of the last 20 games on the road.

"It's nice to be home, because that's a big part of it," Clark said. "It's been tough playing on the road and trying to get any consistency established.

The 'Cats will try to keep things steady against the league's hard-luck team. Nebraska was swept by Kansas, but its other four losses have included a pair of one-run games to Oklahoma State, and two losses to Missouri by a total of three runs.

"They've got tremendous speed in their lineup," Clark said. "And their pitching staff will show us a lot of different things.

"You don't see anything hard from their pitchers that you can sink your teeth into. They'll show a lot of breaking balls and finesse-type stuff, but it's effective. They've got one of the top team ERAs in the league."

Fortunately for K-State, things have been going well on the mound in recent weeks. The 'Cats have yielded just 33 runs in the last 10

'We've got our roles on the staff defined a little better now," Clark said. "We had a period where we didn't have a stopper and we really struggled. Now, it's just a matter of doing the job."

Chris Hmielewski and Tim Churchman are slated to start in Saturday's doubleheader, with Dave Christensen scheduled to take the mound in Sunday's finale.

Hahn fires golf team

Valerie Hahn, sophomore in social science and currently No. 1 player on the K-State women's golf team, has been on top of things this season. Hahn was named Big Eight Golfer-of-the-Month in March.

Members of rugby club gain national honors

BILL LANG

Four members of the K-State rugby club received word at mid week they had been selected to tryout for the USA Collegiate All-Star Team.

Steve Robke, junior in industrial engineering; Steve Jackman, senior in political science; Ty Gray, senior in architecture; and Dan Stoltz, se-four members. All four will travel to Boston June 10-17, where they will go through two or three days of training and three or four days of matches being played in order to select the team. Of the four going, Robke received the highest rating. Robke also received word that he was invited to try for the Junior Eagles in Columbia,

"It's quite an honor being selected to this team," Jackman said. "Ty, myself and Dan are kind of playing out of position, but Steve has the best shot at making the all-star team." Jackman said that Robke is the only person who has played his true position all season long. Robke plays on the second row as eight man and is considered one of the better players in country at his position. "He's got to be one of the best that I've seen," Jackman said. "He's got the height, size and strength, and at his position it makes him tough to Stoltz, though, might be going against greater odds of making the all-star team, due to his size.

Stoltz will probably give up about 20 to 30 pounds at his position of loose head prop, but said he feels he can make up for that deficiency with skill and strength.

'At my position, everybody talks about the size," he said. "But I have a nior in construction science are the lot of skill and technique so I think I'll be OK.

"But if they put a guy in there who's a lot bigger and a lot more skilled than me, well, then I might be in some trouble," Stoltz said.

Gray is also in a difficult predicament, as at times he plays out of

"It'll be interesting to see where they put me," he said. "But then if I do good and get selected, then I'll have no problem."

Jackman too felt that size might be one of his drawbacks.

"I know I'm a bit small, but I'm a smarter player than most at my posi-tion and that's helped me a lot," Jackman said.

With all the honors in, the K-State club will take its 7-4 record and travel to Joplin, Mo., for a match with the Southwest Missouri State Rugby Club on Saturday.

Golfer-of-Month adjusts to new role

ERIC BROWN Sports Reporter

If you're aimlessly searching for a list of female golfing greats that hail from K-State, you may be on mission impossible.

Yet, within the improving meadows of Wildcat golf is Valerie Hahn, who has reached an achievement that, until now, was unexplored territory to the women's squad.

Last month, Hahn, a sophomore, was named Big Eight golfer-ofthe-month, the first K-State recipient of such an honor. It was an award that caught her totally off-

"I'm honored. I couldn't believe it," Hahn said. "I didn't realize there was such an award - maybe because K-State had never won it."

But now that she has, expect her to battle for it throughout her career at K-State.

"Now, I think I'll be after it every month," Hahn said.

Hahn, a native of Las Vegas, Nev., has tallied the team's lowest stroke total at every meet this spring, with the exception of the last meet, where she finished second to freshman surprise Denise Pottle.

As a freshman, Hahn was the No. 3 player on the team last year. Her ascent in team position is even more impressive considering the overall team improvement.

"I'm impressed with the play of the team this season," Hahn said. "We pretty much have the same team as last year, so it's hard to believe our improvement.'

However, a large part of the team's better play is due to the larger role played by Hahn.

She gives our team that third leader," assistant coach Mark Elliott said, referring to the play of Hahn, added with Hagedom and senior Chris Adams. "We can anticipate sub-80 scores from all three Although Hahn was relatively unaware of K-State, it was Jim Colbert who influenced her to become a Wildcat. Colbert, 1964 graduate and All-America golfer at K-State, runs the golf course that Hahn works at during the summer.

"I didn't know much about K-State when I came here," Hahn said, "Jim Colbert had a lot to do with me coming here. I visited campus, and I really liked it."

The problem Hahn will face by sitting out next year will be the fact that next season is K-State's turn to be the host of the Big Eight Championships.

"It doesn't really bother me because I'll just keep getting better," she said.

Hahn's goals for the remaining meets are to continue to shoot less than 80 strokes and to always place in the top five. She said she's pleased with how she has played this spring, but admits, "I need to win a tournament."

"I feel like I'm playing OK, scoring OK, but you can always play better.

Elliott and Hahn agree that her lack of experience and her nerves have hurt her this season.
"At the Northern Illinois Snowbird meet, Hahn got second place by one stroke," Elliott said. "She didn't have the big-meet experience, and she could have won that meet had she handled it a little

Hahn wouldn't argue, but only added that she has nerve problems she could probably attribute to only four years of playing.

"I think it's a challenge to play with these people who have been involved for years," she said. "It makes me wonder how good I'll be when I've played as long as they have. I'm just glad I started when I

Her taking up the game wasn't her choice but, on the other hand, she won't complain. In fact, she hopes to make a career out of golf either playing or teaching.

"My dad made my mom start playing with him, and she made me go with her to practice," she said. "I was just a junior in high school, and playing golf was probably the last thing I wanted to do. But now I love it.

Netters to play at Big 8

Is there any question as to the outcome of the Big Eight tennis championship in Oklahoma City this weekend?

"It's over," Wildcat coach Steve Bietau said of the prospects of a conference team upsetting perennial champion Oklahoma State.

The OSU team, ranked No. 9 in the nation, has ruled the Big Eight for the past 10 seasons and Bietau said he doesn't anticipate anything but more of the same. 'Outside of the No. 1 singles and doubles spots, it would take something very unusual for them to have much trouble," Bietau said. "And as you get down in their lineup, they are so deep and so talented, I don't foresee anything too surprising In the past decade, the Big Eight Championship has become a fight for the No. 2 team spot behind OSU. Leading the race this season are Oklahoma and Kansas, who are within striking distance of each other going into the final with scores of 44 and 42, respectively. The Wildcats enter the weekend at 1-6 in the conference and with 23 points to place them sixth. Although the team has struggled throughout the spring, Bietau said he felt the squad was in a position to play its best tennis of the season and finish successfully.

"I feel very good about where we are because what we've accomplished this year is modest," Bietau

"Because of the way this spring has gone, we've had to work very hard for everything we've got. I'm confident that these players can get on this next level and put things together."

Bietau said he anticipated two members of the Wildcat squad would gain spots in the top four seeded positions. Both Michele Riniker and Angie Gover finished at 5-2, good enough to place high in the conference.

Bietau said Riniker's record at No. 1 singles should earn her the third position behind defending champion Eveline Hamers of KU and OSU's Monika Waniek.

During the season, Riniker suffered losses to Waniek and Iowa State's Susanne Pollman. Hamers defeated Riniker 7-5, 6-2 in the fall, but missed the conference meeting this spring due to injury.

Waniek will take the No. 1 ranking in this year's championship because of her win over Hamers last weekend. Waniek, is 7-0 and the favorite to win the No. 1 spot based on her recent play, Bietau said.

Due to unforeseen circumstance, Angie Gover's 5-2 mark may give her the top spot at No. 5 singles Saturday. Last week, one of OSU's top players was removed from the squad for disciplinary reasons.

The vacancy may force several players into higher positions at which they have not compiled a sufficient number of matches to receive consideration for seedings. If that is the case, Gover may be awarded the No. 1 position in spite of losses to Wendy Parker of OSU and Abby Woods of "Angie has made some real changes in the last month or so after coming back from injuries that kept her out much of the season," Bietau said. "She's been playing very well for about a month and I think she's ready to give it a shot this weekend."

For the team, which is 4-20 on the spring, the meet could provide a happy ending to an otherwise nightmarish season. Bietau has found the improvement the team has shown of late to be a cause for optimism.

"We certainly don't want to put a limit on ourselves," Bietau said. "We have made consistent improvement in the past several weeks. Our progress in singles is documented. We have shown we are competitive with most of the people here."

Doubles woes have held the team back in the conference season. Excluding the doubles sweep over last place Missouri, the team has won just one doubles match in Big Eight play. Following Riniker in the lineup is Suzanne Sim at No. 2 singles. Neili Wilcox teams with Sim in No. 2 doubles and has compiled a 14-19 mark at the No. 3 spot.

Senior Thresa Burcham plays in her last conference meet at No. 4, where she compiled a 3-4 mark. Tracy Parker will play in her first conference championship at No. 6 and with Gover at No. 3 doubles.

Today on Lake Wingra in Madison, Wis., the Midwest Rowing Championships will kick off the first of six events on the road to Cincinnati, site of the National Collegiate Rowing Championships and the "final six" - rowing's answer to the Final Four.

Two rowers from K-State who hope to bring home a gold medal are Mike Janzen and Steve Towne. So far this season, Janzen and Towne are undefeated in the open pair races, having gone 4-0 so far this season.

They will begin K-State's participation in the meet with time trials at about 5 p.m.

The Madison event is the first of six regattas which will make up the Champion Collegiate Series in 1991. Throughout the spring, varsity eight crews from all over the United States will race for the opportunity qualify for the championships and receive funding to Cincinnati. The national meet will be June 7-8.

"Steve and I have a good shot this year. We're going up there and hopefully we'll bring home a gold medal," Janzen said. "If we could do that, it would be the first gold medal that we've won at Midwesterns in long, long time.'

This year the Midwesterns will play host to about 1,500 rowers and 29 teams — 23 college teams and six club teams - with teams coming from as far as Colorado, Oklahoma and New York to compete. Winners of the men's and women's eights will qualify to go to the national meet in Cincinnati.

"This thing has gotten bigger and bigger every year," Janzen said. "It'll be a big meet for us and I'm hoping that we can do real Janzen added that this year's crew team we'll be going to the meet not to lose, but to do well.

"Over the past few meets we've come in kind of tight and not relaxed and ready to race. What we need to do is go in there, relax and have some fun with it and hopefully do well," he said.

Two weeks ago at the Great Plains Regatta in Topeka, K-State's eight-man boat was rammed by Texas during the war-mups. The loss was $15,000 and an unrowable boat.

Besides the open pair of Janzen and Towne, K-State will also have entrants in the men's light weight eight, women's light weight four, women's open four, women's novice four and the Manhattan High School four.

The defending champions at the Midwestern Championships are: University of Wisconsin in the men's varsity eight, women's varsity eight, freshmen men's four, freshmen women's four, men's JV eight, men's pair, freshmen men's eight, freshmen women's eight and men's open four; Notre Dame in the men's lightweight eight; Loyola University (Chicago) in the freshmen men's lightweight eight; the University of Kansas in the women's lightweight eight; Grand Valley State in the women's lightweight four; Minnesota in the men's lightweight four; Minnesota Boat Club in the men's double sculls and Michigan State in the women's open four.

Home lacrosse

The K-State lacrosse team, 7-3, will have its first home match in three weeks as it plays host to the University of Tulsa at 1 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Stadium.

A true test is at hand.

The K-State track and field teams will face a barrage of competition from some of the strongest teams in the country this weekend at the Drake Relays, said Coach John

There are a lot of quality athletes at this meet," he said. "The competition will be from some of the best athletes in the country in both individual and relay events.

Capriotti said he expects the Wildcat relay teams to be in the thick of the medal hunt. He named the men's and women's 4x100-meter relays, the men's

4x400-meter relay and both of the distance medley relays as possible medal winners. "I expect all of these teams to be very competitive this weekend," he

Both the men's and women's teams have been plagued with injuries to top competitors all season. Things are beginning to improve, but freshman pentathlete Gwen Wentland and sprinter Michael Sims will not be making the trip due to injuries.

All-American high jumper Connie Teaberry should be back in action this weekend after missing the Kansas Relays last weekend with an injury

'We're slowly getting healthier," Capriotti said.

He said it is important that all the athletes who are currently injured be ready to compete by the Big Eight Outdoor Championships on May 19-20. This means possibly having to miss some meets during the season to assure injuries heal properly.

The meet represents the final leg of a three-relay tour for the Wildcats during the course of the season. It follows the Texas Relays and Kansas Relays.

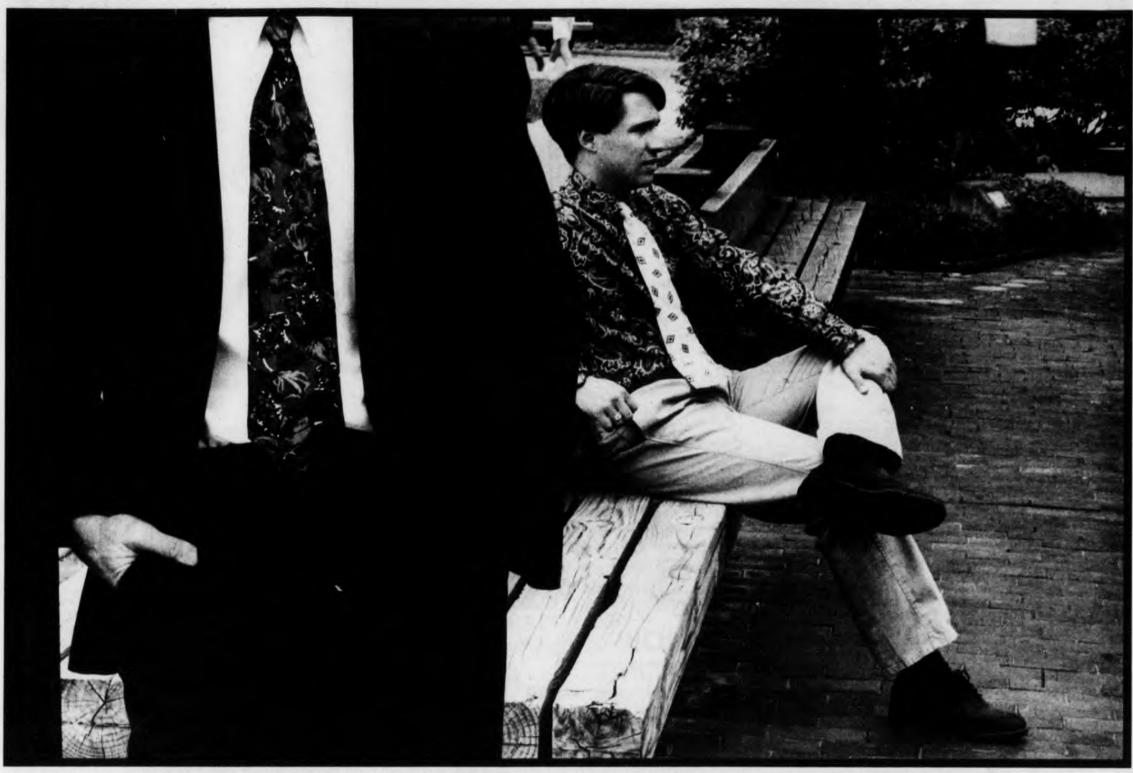

The draws top teams from across the country, not just the midwest, Capriotti said.

Some of those teams competing in the Relays will be Iowa State, Georgia, Alabama, Arizona, Illinois, Illinois State and Nebraska.

Once used by Roman Legionnaires to keep their necks warm in the winter and to wipe up sweat in the heat of summer, men of all ages now use the triagularshaped garments as fashion accessories.

Neckties came about during the 17th century and were made of lawn, muslin and sometimes lace, according to "The Pictorial Encyclopedia of Fashion" by Ludmila Kybalova.

In the last 30 years of the 19th century, the ends of the bows became the long tie as we know it today.

"These new ties are called fashion ties," said Lucinda Schoenberger, extention specialist in clothing.

"The patterns are made of geometrical patterns, flowery patterns, paisleys and sometimes stripes. The bigger the pattern, the better, she said."

Like anything else, fashion goes through cycles, and that's exactly what ties are doing currently.

"I'd say the style of these ties are coming out of the late 1950s and early 1960s," said Beth Dreiling, area sales manager for the shoe and men's departments at Dillard's. "These ties seemed to really hit the stores before Christmas."

All styles evolve. Some may stay for awhile, and some may totally disappear before the consumer knows

"Whether or not a style stays depends on the con-sumer, not on the market," Schoenberger said. "These ties are different and are a change from the ties before.

"Everyone can see a tie, unlike underwear," Schoenberger said. "You need to replace your ties with the new trend if you want to look fashionable today.

> Even though some people refuse to go with certain trends in fashion, these ties seem to be the "in" thing to wear.

"The style of these ties and popularity keeps increasing," said Ray Burry, sales associate for Brentwood. "We have the new trendy ties, and we have novelty ties - such as the design of the flag — that are very popular right now."

As big and wild as the designs may be, it looks like this trend could stay for awhile.

"These are colors we haven't seen for along time," Dreiling said. "There is definitely a difference in coloration, and it's very exciting."

The industry for men's fashion is making it easier for the men of the 1990s to express themselves for all occasions. The wild patterns of ties is just one simple way to add extra flavoring to an outfit.

Modeled after the running business person, the new styles come in all colors, from soft pastels to bright geometric shapes, and the always present paisley. Many of the new ties are 'comebacks' from the late 1950s to early 1960s.

Campus Crusade members to spend summer in Bolivia

SUZANNE BROWN

Collegian Reporter

A recent K-State graduate and her husband will lead a group of 25 K-State students to Bolivia for two months this summer.

Barbara Winkler, 1988 graduate in English secondary education, and her husband, Lewis, are full-time staff members for Campus Crusade for Christ. For the summer, they will travel with 23 other staff and student members to disseminate information on the college campus in Santa Cruz, Bolivia.

Lewis Winkler is the director for the project and said he believes the most challenging aspect of the trip for him will be the leadership

"I am not a leader," Lewis Winkler said. "I don't really seek leadership positions. I'm actually very shy. I like to observe, but I'm going to do this. Even if I don't feel adequate, this is where God has me, and He will enable me to do it.'

The students who will be traveling to Bolivia went through an extensive application process, he said. But staff members can request opportunities for summer positions in the United States or overseas.

"I was chosen director because I'd been there in the summer of 1989," Lewis Winkler said. "Students hear about summer opportunities in conferences or on campus or in their meetings, then they send for applications.

The applications request information about the student's faith, their activities within their church and other religious activities, he said.

They are also required to obtain references from various people. After the application is completed, it is mailed to the Campus Crusade for Christ headquarters in San Bernadino, Calif.

While members of the group are in Bolivia, they won't actually be conducting any physical labor, Lewis

Winkler said. "Many of our activities grow out of what the students desire to do,"

Lewis Winkler said. "There are a lot of homeless children in the city we will be going to. The government doesn't give much support, so the only place they have to go is the church."

He said in years past, the group has tried to assist these individuals in

"Primarily what we'll be doing this summer is working with college students," Lewis Winkler said. "We want to see the country change, and we'll be working in the university because that's where the future leaders are. And that's where the change comes from.'

Lewis Winkler said the people in Bolivia are very receptive to talking about religion, and many are fascinated with Americans.

"We don't go to the campus trying to change their culture or push capitalism," he said. "We try to talk to them about Jesus Christ and the difference He can make in their lives."

Lewis Winkler said a Campus Crusade staff based in Santa Cruz will assist the group in its endeavors and in dealing with the language

"Many of the people going speak Spanish," he said. "But we will pair up members within the group who speak Spanish with those who don't an informal translator situation."

Lewis Winkler also said that since many of the Bolivian students are fascinated by Americans, they know English or will understand it.

Each individual raises his own financial support from churches, family, friends and businesses that support Christian principles, Lewis Winkler said.

Barbara Lewis, a nurse at Lafene Student Health Center, said a big part of why she is going to Bolivia is that Lewis Winkler is the director of the project. But, she said she has a heart for people overseas.

She said she went to Asia on similar projects in the summers of 1984

Lewis said she agrees that providing leadership for the group will be challenging.

"We want to be good examples for them and work with them and become close friends," she said.

Much of his and his wife Rosalynn's lives have been occupied with their work with the Carter Center in Atlanta, Ga., since they left the White House in 1981, he said.

The center, which is also the home of his presidential library and museum, tries to become involved in nonpartisan or bipartisan work no other organization is doing. Carter said another guildline established for work at the center is that it must have an action element.

One of the projects undertaken at the center is a six-year-old task force on child survival, which among other things coordinates the immunization efforts of various other organizations throughout the world, Carter said.

"You might be interested in knowing that five or six years ago only 20 percent of the world's children had been immunized against polio, measles, diphtheria, typhoid, whooping cough and so forth," he said. # Carter questions hostages' release

Possibility exists that Reagan, Bush delayed Iranian action call for an investigation, but said it would be a good thing for President

DAVID FRESE

Staff Reporter

Former President Jimmy Carter began his speech at the 88th Landon Lecture Friday by saying he wasn't a very good storyteller.

"Usually when I give a lecture, I try to tell a funny story," Carter said, conceding that he wasn't very good key to population control, Carter at it. "It turned out, really, that my ■ See LECTURE, Page 8 successor in the White House was a good story teller, however,"

Though Carter made the Middle East the focus of his speech, the former president was asked once during the lecture and several times during the press conference that followed what he thought of new evidence that the Reagan/Bush campaign delayed the release of the U.S. hostages from Iran until after they were in office.

President Reagan's National Security Adviser, Richard Allen, say on television that there needs to be a thorough investigation into the incident. Carter echoed those sentiments.

"The reason I think we need an investigation is to prove that it's not true," he said. "And I hope it is not true. I pray that it is not true."

Carter said he had heard rumors Carter said he recently heard of meetings between the Reagan/

Bush camp and the Iranians during the 1980 campaign. But Carter said he discounted those rumors because it was simply inconceivable to him.

"It is simply nauseating to me that any American would delay the release of American hostages even one day for any purpose," Carter said. "It's a nauseating thought. I never did try to investigate it."

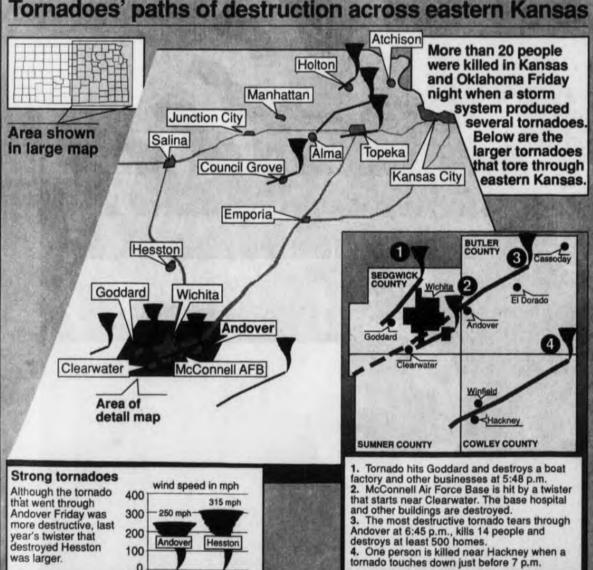

Carter went on to say in his press conference that it was not his role to

Bush to do since he appears to be in it up to his neck.

"It's not my responsibility to call for an investigation," Carter said. "I'd hope that President Bush would want to originate an investigation. Some of the allegations involve him and they certainly involve his

Tornadoes' paths of destruction across eastern Kansas

Community struggles to regroup

By the Associated Press

ANDOVER - The sky over this tornado-devastated town threatened rain and more storms Sunday as people pulled apart the wreckage of a mobile home park, searching for more possible victims.

The death toll fell Sunday to 23 instead of the 29 reported Saturday as authorities identified bodies and discovered some fatalities had been counted more than once. Andover Mayor Jack Finlason said 14 people died in his town rather than 20.

Three people were killed in Oklahoma and the other victims died in Wichita and three outlying Kansas counties as at least 48 twisters ripped across the two states Friday night. More than 200 people were injured and hundreds of homes were destroyed.

Up to 1,500 Andover residents were left homeless by the tornado, the first to strike the town since 1958.

President Bush urged Americans on Sunday to pray for the victims of the deadly tornadoes and promised to "do whatever we can to help." He paused as he left a church in Washington to express his sorrow for the victims.

Fourteen people died when the Golden Spur Mobile Home Park in this Wichita suburb was leveled.

"It's a solid, middle-class, bluecollar bunch of people," said Richard Peckham, one of the owners of the 400-resident, 40-acre mobile home

Foerster to lead area league of women voters

DARLA GOODMAN

Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan/Riley County League of Women Voters voted a man as president-elect of the nonpartisan political organization for the first time April 18.

Bernd Foerster, professor of architecture, will serve as presidentelect for one year, then take office as president in 1992.

Foerster joined the organization in the late 1970s, as soon as men became eligible for membership.

He said he was attracted to the organization because of its strong belief in the citizen's role in government and democracy.

Foerster said he has a tremendous amount if respect for the league because the members research political issues from a neutral, non-partisan standpoint and then decide what position to take.

"I find that they study a matter thoroughly," Foerster said. "When they take a stand, they're right."

Membership in the league is open to anyone over the age of 18, and yearly dues are $35.

Marsha Tannehill, current president, said the local organization has 116 members. There are nine area leagues in Kansas, including Wichita, Kansas City, Chanute and Newton. Tannehill said that as president, Foerster will be a spokesperson for the league.

"The president-elect is there to support the president and prepare for the presidency," she said.

Foerster, who has been at K-State for 20 years, has been active in many community areas. He was chairman of the Downtown Redevelopment Advisory Board, which resulted in the construction of Manhattan Town Center in the downtown area. He is also a member of the Kansas Main Street Advisory Board and the commission for long-range planning in Manhattan.

Tannehill said Foerster's knowledge of the community and his ability to look at issues in the community will bring a lot to the league.

"The league is a proponent of active citizen participation in government, and Bernd will be an outstanding proponent of that for the league," she said.

Foerster said he is sure the office will take a lot of time, but members always come through when help is needed.

Since coming to the United States from the Netherlands in 1947, Foerster has been active in many areas, including the National Trust for Historic Preservation and the American Association of University Professors.

Foerster said he has always loved traveling, and his personal collection of several thousand slides from around the world in the color- and design-coded files on his office wall illustrate his philosophy on teaching architecture.

He said, as a student, he realized his instructors were often speaking about something they had never seen. He said it is important for students to at least get the information second hand.

Korean television reported Sunday.

The pilot, Gennady Osipovich, had told the Soviet newspaper Izvestia in January that Soviet military officials lied about details of the incident. But the report on Seoul's MBC television was the first quoting Osipovich as saying he knew he was firing at a commercial plane.

The account contradicted Moscow's official stand on the downing of Korean Airlines Flight 007. There was no immediate Soviet reaction to the report.

The Flight 007 incident is still a diplomatic issue between Seoul and Moscow, which normalized relations seven months ago. President Roh Tae-woo and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev discussed it in talks earlier this month.

Sept. 1, 1983, the Boeing 747, on a flight from New York to Seoul, was shot down after straying into Soviet air space. All 269

EIN ZHALTA, Lebanon (AP) - One of Lebanon's most important civil war militias began handing over its weapons to the Syrian army Sunday, boosting efforts to carry out an Arabbrokered peace plan.

Man paints Red Army tank pink

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) - The last Red Army tank in Czechoslovakia took on a different hue Sunday.

The CTK news agency reported the tank, a monument to Soviet soldiers who liberated Prague from Nazi troops in May 1945, was painted pink by a young man who showed police a fake slip from the city government authorizing the work. CTK did not identify the man or say whether he had been arrested.

The mayor's office issued a statement condemning what it called an act of vandalism.

It said the World War II-era tank would be covered until the paint is removed, CTK reported.

The Soviet Union is scheduled to complete its military withdrawal from its former Warsaw Pact ally this summer. The last active Soviet tank left Czechoslovakia earlier this year.

FBI says violent crime up 10 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) - Seven American cities recorded more than one fourth of all murders in the United States, the FBI said

Sunday in releasing its annual crime report. Six of the seven cities had more murders last year than in 1989. The exception was Detroit, which had 582 murders, 42 fewer than the year before.

Overall, violent crime - murder, rape, robbery and aggravated assault - jumped 10 percent in 1990.

"The growth in violent crimes is larger than I would have thought," said Alfred Blumstein, dean of the School of Urban and Public Affairs at Carnegie-Mellon University in Pittsburgh. Criminologists, however, don't consider the annual report a reliable indicator of crime trends because it covers only reported crime. A more accurate barometer, those experts say, is the Justice Department's annual survey of crime victims, which shows the level of violent crime has been fairly stable in the last decade.

Charges could be dismissed for police

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Charges against four policemen accused of beating a black motorist should be dismissed in part because four electric stun-gun darts fired at Rodney King are missing, a defense attorney said.

"We have put the prosecution on notice that we are going to move to dismiss the case based on the failure to preserve or the destruction of evidence," said John Barnett, who represents Officer

Theodore Briseno. Records at Pacifica Hospital in Sun Valley, where the motorist was taken for treatment, indicate the darts were thrown out the night of the beating, district attorney's spokesman Mike Botula said Sunday. Briseno, Sgt. Stacey Koon, and Officers Timothy Wind and Laurence Powell pleaded innocent to felony assault charges in the March 3 beating of King during a traffic stop in Lake View Terrace. A resident of the area videotaped the beating.

Trump condos sell for $15.2 million

PALM BEACH GARDENS, Fla. (AP) - Donald Trump's real estate empire crumbled a bit more Sunday as 63 vacant units in twin waterfront condominium towers bearing his name were auctioned for $15.2 million.

"I'm doing what a lot of other people are doing. I'm deleveraging. I'm getting rid of a lot of debt," Trump said as he walked around the hotel ballroom where the auction was held.

Trump made a deal with Marine Midland Bank last week to split the auction proceeds 50-50 to pay off the balance on a $60 million loan. Thirty-five units in the 32-story Trump Plaza of the Palm Beaches were auctioned in December for $8.8 million. It wasn't clear how much of the loan Trump paid off previously.

The units are largely unfinished and the views from some windows are of a stalled redevelopment project in downtown West Palm Beach. But the price on some units was trimmed to $75,000 from pre-auction prices of $300,000.

A 3,840-square-foot penthouse, with a view from the living room of the mansions of Palm Beach and the ocean beyond, went for $700,000 - $1.1 million below its former asking price.

"Set your feet out." "Get out all the way."

These were the first three commands each jumper heard as he made his first dive out of an airplane Saturday for the Jump for Multiple

Friday evening, the group of 13 volunteers started the first four-hour segment of the mandatory eighthour course, which they were required to take before they could jump.

Each member of this group was said. jumping to raise money for Multiple Ea Sclerosis, and it was the first jump for each of them.

Friday, while signing liability release forms, the participants watched an introductory video. As she was watching the video,

Jacki Murrell, a volunteer jumper, said, "That's not what we have to

Paul Sodamann, K-State parachute instructor, paused the video tape several times to give instruction to the students. "One difficult objective for a student is to learn to relax," Sodamann

Each person who jumped from the airplane was required to wear a jumpsuit, helmet, a comfortable pair of tennis shoes and a pair of

A static line was attached to the main parachute and hooked to the plane. When the static line reached its full length, it released the parachute. The jumpmaster hooked each jumper up to the equipment to ensure it was done correctly.

Each jumper's pack had two parachutes and an electronic device that senses whether the main chute has opened and records the altitude of the jumper at all times during the fear." descent.

If the jumper's main chute does not open and the device senses that he was below a certain altitude, it automatically sends impulses that trigger an explosion to release the emergency chute.

The pilot chute that helps drag out the main chute is spring loaded and catches the wind in order to bring the parachute out. When the parachute opens, the static line comes off and stays with the plane.

The chutes the jumpers used are called ram-air canopies. These canopies have a forward speed of about 20 mph and can be turned by lines that pull down on either side to turn left or right.

On the first run in the airplane, a wind-drift indicator is thrown out to see how far and where the wind is going to carry the parachutists.

And, while climbing altitude, the jumpmaster pointed out the altitudes of 200, 500 and 1000 feet; he did it to help the students get the idea of what the airport looks like at those altitudes

"The fear of falling is the only fear we are born with," Sodamann said. "When you jump out of that airplane, you are conquering that

As the parachutists jumped out, they were taught to count - starting with the word "Arch" and then continuing with, "1,000, 2,000, 3,000 4,000, 5,000, 6,000, check."

The parachutists were told to count this out loud so as not to speed up their count when they became nervous.

When the parachutists reach "check," they are to look over their shoulders to make sure their parachutes have opened correctly.

'It usually only takes three to four seconds for a parachute to open, but we have the jumpers count longer because when they jump out of an airplane they tend to get a little nervous. For the first five seconds they usually have brain lock," Sodamann said.

The parachutists are trained to check if the shape of the canopy is rectangular, if they are in a spin, what their speed is and whether their parachute lines are twisted.

'When parachuting, your eyes are the most important tools you have," Sodamann said. "You must make eye contact with your instructor while jumping out of the plane and you must keep checking your parachute for problems."

For the first-time jumpers, there were always jumpmasters on the ground guiding the parachutists down. There were radios attached to the helmets and the jumpmaster had a hand-held radio transmitter. But, just in case something went wrong with the radio, all the students were taught the correct pattern to steer their descent and land safely. Saturday morning, the first-time parachutists gathered for hands-on practice of what they learned Friday

The students practiced getting in and stepping out of the plane, went through fake emergency situations on the hanging harness and practiced landing by jumping off an object a few feet off the ground.

"I'm telling you now that nine out of 10 jumps will have line twists," Sodamann said.

The students practiced emergency situations so they could make decisions from reflex in the sky.

"You have to live or die with the decisions you make," Sodamann

While practicing the emergency situations, other students watched in order to become even more familiar with the procedures.

Carter possesses all mythmaking elements

immy Carter is ripe for mythmak-ing. He has all the elements: romance, war, a calling, intrigue, and a sidekick. Last Friday, my roommates and I went to Bramlage Hippodrome to hear Colonel and Former President Jimmy Carter deliver the 88th Landon Lecture.

I learned many things, and one of my roommates learned a pre-pubescent's phone number. After the speech, as we walked down the grand promenade sidewalk toward the car, I thought about how thoroughly amazing it was that romance could exist in the face of an hour-long ramble by a distinguished southerner. It made me rethink my entire concept of Jimmy Carter. Who is this guy, really?

Could love flourish in the presence of Nixon? Do young lovers hold hands and smile when Gerald Ford passes by?

I remembered watching Reagan's motor-cade speed past me and my high school sweetheart as we stood in the muddy east field of Gage Park in Topeka. We were in the middle of a huge crowd of mostly young people, too young to clearly decide party affiliations. All we knew was that the president was right there in that long, black car in front of us, waving at - I may have been mistaken, but I don't think so - me and my best gal.

When the pope blesses Catholics from his pope-buggy in Rome, when movie stars wave at cameras as they walk up a red carpet to the Oscars, and when God tossed the Ten Commandments at Moses like they were confetti, there tends also to be transferred a sense of warmth, love and grandeur. People are overcome with the urge to hug and kiss, to dedicate their lives to each other or to finding the

But when Reagan waved at us, we got none of that. The only things revealed to me were wet, muddy shoes and her complaints about Reagan's de-regulation of airlines. That was

And there I was in 1991, with the same question; who shall be the deliverance and salvation of our time? But in 1991, unlike 1985, I had an answer.

Jimmy Carter. The story of James Earl Carter contains every minute requirement for him to become a mythic figure. Look at his effect on my roommate's romantic life.

No sooner had Carter strode into the Hippodrome did this young petal of desire, purity and innocence hand a lily-white parcel of paper down through several rows of seated Carter admirers to my roommate. He opened the gently folded note and saw the flowing writing from the maiden's hand, complete with heart-shaped dots over the Is and smiley-faces for zeros.

I can imagine what may have run through the girl's mind. She was probably confused, struck silly by the manliness of my roommate and her own young romantic feelings, her mind muddled by the tumult of the large restless crowd. But then Jimmy Carter, hero, strolled onto the stage, way down on the floor of Bramlage, so far down she could hardly tell who it was. After Jon Wefald's botched introduction, Carter ascended to the podium. Her heart must have been beating as wildly as jungle drums while he recognized the ovating crowd with a firm yet friendly nod.

Carter must have looked like an angel to her, as he did to me. The new black $70,000 curtain, which cut the coliseum in half, looked like heavenly wings attached to Carter's back. The plastic plants in front of the podium looked like flowers from the Garden of Eden. She probably imagined Carter barefoot and wearing a loincloth behind the po-dium. Wefald, Nafzinger, Heitschmidt and all of the Secret Service agents who flocked the former president were more like cherubs and seraphim floating around this beautiful angel of human rights and love. The message he delivered was not quite what I expected from an angel. It rambled a little, and I always expected holy figures to be more focused. But then, I'm told they work in mysterious

The girl a few rows behind me was clearly affected. Her confusion faded away as Carter spoke. Everything was clear to her now. Carter's vision extended into her, and she knew what to do. She scribbled down all pertinent information and passed it down, awestruck by the power of the moment. It was true love. No Republican could affect someone this Driving home, I remembered a book in my father's library - Joseph Campbell's "The Hero of A Thousand Faces." Campbell is a distinguished professor of theology at Sarah Lawrence College. He examined all of the world's religions and found the common threads running through them.

The hero, like Jesus or Darwin, is of humble origins. He receives a calling, something like being alone in a peanut field and hearing a Wilson Pickett song or a choir of angels. He either rejects or accepts the calling, but usually gives in after it happens a few times. One can only handle so many verses of "Mustang Sally" before capitulation.

The hero receives a mission, from which he must never swerve, although the forces of evil will constantly try to distract him (see also John Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress"). The hero has a confidant, who always questions the hero and is around for good luck, such as Darwin's FitzRoy or the sidekicks of movie westerns. Nature is always around to keep the hero's ego from ballooning. He wins in the end, hopefully, although the triumph of good over evil is always at great cost to the hero, as in Spencer's "The Fairie Queen" or Tolkien's "Lord of the Rings" books. And it must make a good story.

Carter has all of it - humble beginnings in Plains, Ga., peanut farming. His mission is, aside from protecting good people and vanquishing bad ones, to ensure a respect for human rights in the world. Evil has always plagued him, in the forms of the Ayatollah Khomeini, Ronald Reagan and inflation. The hostages represent a fall, and a temporary victory by evil, but Carter came back. Nature really got Carter hard in 1978. He was fishing in a swamp when a rabbit attacked him, bit him on the hand, and was shot by the Secret Service (isn't that a name right out of epics?). Carter lost re-election, but has continued to fight for good despite great odds. What a is idea to replenish the Dead Sea with turbine-coaxed seawater, as outlined in his speech, as a way to increase tourism in the holy lands, seemed really silly to me when I heard it, but the man has vision. Perhaps he's right. Who are we to doubt the bringer of romance, with vine leaves in his hair?

Federal flight plan

Public officials take trips, while taxpayers take fall

Imagine paying just a little bit over the average coach airfare for a luxuriously accommodated semi-private jet aircraft. This aircraft is at your immediate beck and call. You can zoom away to anywhere you want - with little thought.

This can only be a too-true description of the wonderful travel benefits given to members of the United States' Presidential Cabinet, and the numerous lackeys or minor functionaries existing within our bloated federal government.

For instance, in the past 27 months, Chief of Staff John Sununu took 77 trips on Air Force planes all across the Continental United States, Canada and the Soviet Union. The trips include 24 "political" and four "personal" trips, in which he paid the nominal rate used.

The federal government was reimbursed a measly $47,044, and Sununu still owes more than $20,000 for political trips to Columbia, South Carolina and Palm Springs, Calif.

This practice is perfectly legal because White House policy allows, but doesn't require, the use of Air Force planes.

It costs American taxpavers about $4,000 per hour to operate the small-passenger jet aircraft used and abused by these individuals.

Taxpayers are being abused by this extremely wasteful practice, and they are being milked out of millions of dollars for air-travel expenditures, which would be more cost effective if regular airlines were

Letters

Editor,

Editor,

I was stunned at the method of seeking justice for our culture's treatment of women recently proposed by Jean Kaeberle in her letter to the editor. There is a large difference between pornography and eroticism, but stamping out societal ills by promoting ignorance through censorship is not going to give soci-

I don't mean to belittle your financial contribution to the K-State Union's operational budget, but your vote should remain valued according to its impact. Coming to terms with personal safety will never be feasible until our media ends the depiction of women as people of value for their reproductive capacity alone. Playboy and Penthouse magazines promote the exploitation of sexuality blatantly and without subversive elements. There are many trendy magazines in the Union that promote women for their sensual impact, and just because Kaeberle doesn't consider that pornography, they are not mentioned.

Male/female ratio an evolutionary fact

False sense of pride masks shame of war

This letter is in regards to Taylor Mali's guest column in the Thursday edition of the Collegian. I have a few questions for Mali. Who is it that commits more crimes, robberies, rapes and murders? I will tell you who. It is men. And you are saying we need more of them? I don't understand. More men to commit more felonies? Please comrade, this must be a joke.

If there were more men and fewer women, wouldn't we slowly be bringing ourselves back to the days where the male sex dominated all? Is that what you want? Do you want women to have to start all at the beginning again, after we've come so far? I would hope

You made some good points. For instance, you stated that men might take better care of themselves, and they are jealous of women being more involved in childbirth. However, I and many others don't agree with your conclusion.

In evolution, species are always changing for better utilization of the evolving environment. So if there are more women than men, doesn't that fact in itself answer why there's an overabundance of women?

You see, changing the male/female ratio cannot be the answer. Doing so would only seem to make matters worse. I don't think any person can know what the answer is, and it is not up to us. As in many cases, mankind simply does not have the power. So, get over Mali, I have never heard a woman say there are not enough men to go around. However, I have heard women say there are just not enough good men to be found.

One for Jim

I, being one of Jim's Journal's biggest fans, look forward every day to what incidental observation Jim has made and found worthy of mentioning publicly. Jim has a dry sense of humor, something many people do not understand, much less appreciate. He takes time to look around and see little things in life, which are quite often humorous.

Indeed, his ability to see humor in others' behaviors is an admirable quality; he is not simply moving along, day to day, without learning about his surroundings. In his own small way, Jim's contribution to the Collegian is large, for as a great person once said, You need to take time to notice the little things in life, because there aren't too many big things."

I dare say many great people got that way with their minds closed to big things or little things, Ralph.

Farrell Library has been able to raise only 13 percent of its $3-million

This lack of fund raising has been attributed to many things.

"The library has no graduates and has a very short fund-raising history," said Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries. "The library does not have a constituency.

"The primary function of fund raising at K-State has been to support athletics.

"How many graduates of K-State do you think remember their experience in the library as one of the highlights of their college career?" he Art Loub, KSU Foundation president, said he thinks that same question is asked by prospective donors.

"If the library is the thing that meant the most to you while you were at Kansas State, you are going to give your money to the library, Loub said. "It's a question of emotional involvement, the process that turns people on to what they are going to support."

Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt said he sees the problem more as a failure of expected state

"Until we get the state to buck-up and say 'This is your responsibility,' we're going to have to do something ourselves," Heitschmidt said. "But, the mindset is just the opposite out there with the donors. They don't want to give to something they feel is state responsibility. Somebody in Topeka is going to have to make some tough decisions."

The Foundation is not planning for the Legislature to take responsibility. Instead, they are solicting donors for contributions to be used for the new addition to Farrell.

The library project has been somewhat renovated. Emphasis has now been placed on acquiring about $2 million to be used for the construction of an addition, Hobrock said. "Right now, three or four major gift proposals have been presented in the million-dollar range," said Mark Moore, Essential Edge Campaign director. "It's a time-consuming process with no on-going constituency. I've talked to a number of individuals who have an interest in the library. But again, some of these gifts take time. It doesn't happen overnight; sometimes it takes a year or maybe two years."

Hobrock said it is necessary sometimes to bring in other people to convince prospective donors of the project's worthiness. Hobrock said he often uses President Jon Wefald.

"We're going to make $3 million, and I think we will make it with a large donation to fund the building, which is not what we originally sought, but things have changed," he

Plans for the addition of the library were not developed enough to be included in the plans for the Essential Edge Campaign when it began about three years ago, Hobrock said.

The looming question is how the new addition will be funded, since the state is hesitant to fund construction.

Bill Manning, Foundation development officer, said, "A position has not been taken by the University administration or the Foundation that student monies will be used for the addition. At this time, we are pursuing private funds to finish that project. State funds will have to come - absolutely."

Hobrock agreed with Manning's resolution about state funding. Hobrock said he feels differently, however, about student input on the new

"In order to build an addition, we must put together a package of state and private funds," Hobrock said. Hobrock said he thought the $3-million goal was appropriate.

But I have no idea what our potential is. Because, who knows? Some angel may fall out of the sky and drop money on us," he said.

That's the only way it can hap-pen," Hobrock said. "I don't have any friends with any fund-raising capacity. They're all poor, just like me."

Rain-soaked 'Cats, 'Huskers split 2

DAVID SVOBODA

Sports Editor

What one giveth, one can also taketh away.

That seemed to be the theme Saturday afternoon at Frank Myers Field, as the K-State pitching staff was rocked in the first game of a doubleheader with Nebraska, but was masterful in the nightcap.

The games Saturday were the only two played by the Big Eight foes because of Mother Nature's untimely and unwelcome visits to the area. Friday night's single, nine-inning game was postponed because of lateafternoon rain, and the schools were set to play a pair of twinbills Saturday and Sunday. The eventuality never came to pass, as rains once again soaked the area Sunday afternoon.

What happened Saturday, however, was plenty entertaining for players, coaches and fans on both sides of the competitive fence.

After being pounded by the visitors 18-7 in the opener, the 'Cats rebounded in the second contest for a 4-2 win and a split of the doubleheader.

K-State, which is now 8-10 in the Big Eight and 29-22 overall, got a great pitching performance in the seven-inning nightcap from starter Tim Churchman and reliever/winner Dan Driskill, 5-3.

"Tim really hung in there," K-State coach Mike Clark said of Churchman. "He was a little wild, but he competed hard and then Dan came in and did a great job."

Churchman went five innings and left after he surrendered a single to start the sixth with the game tied at 2-2. He scattered seven hits and struck out seven before leaving.

Driskill came on with the runner aboard and got a quick strikeout before Tim Seaton reached him for a single. Driskill settled back down and got the final two batters of the frame on a fly out and another K.

Driskill's teammates then came up and got him - and themselves - the

After 'Husker starter and loser Trey Rutledge, 4-4, retired the first batter of the frame, he walked K-State's Chris Hmielewski.

Nebraska skipper John Sanders countered for a second-straight outing with lefty relief ace Dave Matranga, who picked up the win in the wild opener.

Matranga fueled the fire instead of extinguishing it, walking Scott Stroth and surrendering an RBIsingle to Brad Rippelmeyer. He then walked Blair Hanneman and allowed another RBI single - this one on a Clark was fairly philosophical regarding the outcome.

"It's one of those times we had the hitting, but no pitching," he said. "It's the opposite of what we've had a few other times. We've just had trouble putting it together.

"Seven runs would have won about two-thirds of the games we've played in the last two weeks." But it didn't win this one, in large part because of Matranga and the hitting of "Fast" Eddie Anderson. Matranga, 7-5, got the win in relief for Nebraska, going five-plus innings and allowing just five hits. Anderson was but a triple short of

From Staff and Wire Reports

K-State baseball coach Mike Clark has announced the first four signees, from the high school ranks, of his 1991 recruiting class.

Joining the 'Cats are pitchers James Matson of Salina South and Patrick Ralston of Augusta. Two infielders, Thomas Stallard of Crete, Neb., and Kevin McMullin of Wichita's Campus High School have also joined the K-State program.

"These four players give us a great start on the recruiting class," Clark said. "We only lose four seniors, and these kids can help us fill some of those holes."

Matson is a 6-foot-5 lefthanded hurler who posted a 10-3 record on the mound last summer in American Legion play. He struck out 75 and walked just 35. So far this spring, he is 2-0. He also averaged 14 points per game with Cougars' basketball team during the past winter.

"James is a big lefthander with a lot of potential," Clark said. "He can be a good Division I player."

Ralston is a 6-2 righty who was named to the Kansas All-State team as a junior. He entered this season with an 11-2 high school mark and has struck out 93 hitters in 79 innings. He was 8-2 with a 2.89 earned run average during play last summer. Ralston is a strong student and a member of the National Honor Society.

Stallard is a 5-11 switch-hitting infielder. He is projected as a shortstop or second baseman at K-State. Clark said he likes Stallard's fundamentals and work ethic.

"He'll have to make an adjustment to the pitching at this level, but he has some ability," Clark said.

McMullin stands 6-4 and is listed as a shortstop. He has been timed at 4.4 in the 40-yard dash and was an all-state wide receiver for the Campus football team last fall. McMullin is also an honor student

"Kevin is a good lefthanded hitter with range and a great arm," Clark said. "He can come in and help us

In a nine-inning contest like the one that was interrupted Sunday by rain, five innings is enough for the game to be considered official.

But not so fast to pick up the win, Nebraska. In collegiate baseball, nineinning affairs have to go the route. And the Big Eight provides four days for each conference series to be completed, so K-State fans will get an unexpected 10-inning treat today.

The final game of the series, you see, will be contested immediately following the end of the contest in progress, and will be a seven-inning tilt.

What all this means for K-State is that Frank Myers Field will see action Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Only Thursday will the scoreboard be off.

Henderson gets SB, ties Brock's record

By the Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. - Rickey Henderson tied Lou Brock's alltime record of 938 career steals Sunday when he stole second base in the sixth inning in Oakland's game against California.

Henderson, activated from the disabled list Saturday after missing 14 games with a strained muscle in his left calf, stole the record-tying base against pitcher Jeff Robinson and catcher Lance

In the first inning, Henderson led off with a single, but was caught leaning by pitcher Jim Abbott. Henderson broke for second base and was thrown out, first baseman Wally Joyner to shortstop Dick Schofield. It was the fourth time Henderson had been either picked off or caught stealing since stealing No. 937 on opening day.

Henderson singled in the third inning and tried to steal once, but Lance Blankenship hit a foul ball. Henderson struck out in his next at-bat before matching Brock's Henderson was hit in the back by a pitch from Robinson with one out in the sixth. After a couple of bluffs, Henderson took off on a 1-2 pitch to Blankenship and beat Parrish's throw.

A near-capacity crowd gave Henderson a prolonged standing ovation. Henderson pulled up the base and it was taken off the field.

Relay teams continue to perform in school-record-setting fashion

JENIFER SCHEIBLER

Sports Reporter

They just keep getting faster and faster.

Both the men's and women's 4x100-meter relay teams etched marks in the K-State track and field record books while competing in the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa, this past weekend.

The men's 4x100-meter team set a new school record of 39.74 seconds en route to a third-place finish in that event. Team members Thomas Randolph, Tyrone Watkins, John Dedrick and Ernest Greene eclipsed the six-year old record of 40.41 set by Steven Wallace, Veryl Switzer, Jr., Greg Washington and Kenny Harrison.

The third-fastest time in K-State history was turned in by the women's 4x100-meter team of Verida Walter, Nikki Green, Markeya Jones and Trish Joyner. The time of 45.25 earned them the bronze medal behind Texas Southern and Big Eight foe Nebraska.

The men's distance squad got in on the hardware shopping by capturing third place in the distance medley relay. The team of Jason Goertzen, Corey King, Randy Helling and Phil Byrne improved their previous time by 10 seconds by running the event in Coach John Capriotti praised these relay teams, who have consistently placed in the outdoor meets.

"I thought all of our relay teams that reached the finals ran well," he said. "Obviously, I was happy with the school record, and the men's distance medley relay team avenged a loss to KU the week before at the KU Relays."

David Warders captured the silver medal in a 10,000-meter race that ended in a photo finish, Capriotti said. His time of 29 minutes, 52 seconds is his best this season.

Randolph and Greene continue to battle each other in the 100-meter dash. Randolph won the duel this weekend and placed third just ahead of Greene, who placed fourth.

On the women's side, fourth-place finishes were earned by Walter in the 100-meter hurdles in 14.11, her best time of the season, and Joyner in the 100-meter dash in 11.41.

Several Wildcats placed in the ### Old Man' Madden to play offense, defense

Look for these headlines to appear in a newspaper near you this fall: "Madden scores game-winning touchdown, makes game-saving sack" or "Madden stops Madden for no gain."

Thanks to a little switch-a-roo in spring drills last week, a K-State folk hero may have been born. He's football moonlighter Curtis Madden, the newest Wildcat defensive end and veteran fullback. Wait a minute, Coach Bill Snyder. This is 1991, another year in the era of specialization. One guy snaps the ball, one guy throws the ball, another catches it and somebody kicks it. Jim Thorpe and Red Grange are long gone. You can't have a player running over defenders one minute, then pummeling quarterbacks the next minute, can you? "That's an extreme possibility,"

Snyder said. "There will be situations during a game that are made for him to be in there both offensively and defensively, and we will certainly take advantage of that."

Madden, who is rumored to be in line for Coke vendor and season ticket sales openings, has found happiness in his first week on his new job. The fifth-year senior saw the writing on the chalkboard as a blocking back.

"We've got a lot of great athletes in the backfield," Madden said. "I'm really excited about what they can do. Plus, I'm getting up there in age, and I felt like I needed a change. So Old Man Madden, tired of Rod Schiller and Eric Gallon fetching his robe, slippers and pipe after each practice, approached running back coach Tom Grogan. He asked for a move to greener pastures.

With a lack of grazers at the defensive end positions, Madden got his wish.

'A lot of the guys on defense told me, 'Curt, you've got to come play defense, you've got to come play defense," Madden said. "I've really enjoyed it. It's great getting the chance to hit somebody instead of being hit."

Madden's ability to mix it up earned the vote of confidence from Snyder, who hasn't hesitated to use players on both sides of the ball during his tenure. Defensive linemen Tony Williams and Evan Simpson got a chance to show their offensive goods against Western Illinois last season.

"Curtis has got some athletic ability, and he's not afraid to hit anybody," Snyder said. "We've still let him run with the offense, and in the short period of time he's been on defense, he's given us some encouragement.'

For Madden, who has three career touchdowns and was K-State's thirdleading ball carrier last season, the biggest adjustment has been learning to use his hands, a no-no for offensive players.

"It's kind of strange because there's so much reaction involved," Madden said. "The offense has such hungrier because I won't be seeing it an advantage because they know where they're going. On defense, you have to beat the ball carrier to a spot, throw off a blocker and still make the tackle.

"I have a lot more respect for our defensive players now that I've been there."

Madden said he is concerned with learning the defensive ropes for now, but won't forget the enjoyment of carrying the ball.

"I was pleased with the time that I was playing at fullback last year, and I carried the ball harder than I did the year before," Madden said.

"I still thought I could have run harder, though. I feel like if I do get the ball this year, it will make me as much now that I'm working on defense.'

Don't expect Madden, who also changed jersey numbers to No. 2 in the off-season, to be a Heisman Trophy candidate like two-way performer Gordie Lockbaum was in 1988. He's currently behind defensive ends Elijah Alexander and Chris Patterson on the depth chart and trails Schiller and Gallon in the bid for fullback.

Do expect him to have fun with the split roles, however.

"I remember the guy from Holy Cross (Lockbaum) and what a big deal people made out of it," Madden said. "I don't think it's that big of a deal, but it makes me feel good that Coach (Snyder) has shown this much confidence in me.'

Golf teams to tee it up at Big 8 meets

Women hope to escape loop's cellar

K-State's women's golf team goes into today's Big Eight Championships as very possibly a team of The Wildcat women will not only battle the other conference teams. Their fight will be much larger than mere competition.

The overwhelming factor weighing on the linksters' minds is the mental turmoil of finishing in last place at every Big Eight tournament, a slump of 15 years.

"I think the girls particularly feel more pressure going into the Big Eight tournament than they have in any other this spring," said coach Mark Elliott. "They know K-State's tradition in this tournament and do not want it to continue.'

Sophomore Valerie Hahn said there is an added pressure caused by overall team improvement.

"Instead of going to a meet to not get last," Hahn said, "now we're going out and getting thirds and trying to be a lot more competitive.

"I think our team's attitude is better. We're a lot more positive, and I think much of that can be contributed to our new coach. Mark has been an important part of our improvement."

The University of Missouri will be the host of the meet, which will be at the Country Club of Missouri.

Heading into the championship meet, four Big Eight teams are ranked in the top 50 in the nation. Tourney favorite Oklahoma is ranked 20th. Oklahoma State, Kansas and Iowa State are 26th, 32nd and 42nd, respectively, in the lastest edition of the official publication. K-State was 63rd among NCAA Division I schools, a jump of 11 spots from last fall.

Also competing will be Nebraska, which K-State's players will be paired with, and Missouri. Competition should be stiff since Missouri, arguably the conference's weakest team, will have the home-course advantage.

"The girls didn't play well at this meet last year, and they have a bad taste in their mouths that they want to get rid of," Elliott said.

Freshman Denise Pottle, who has been the team's No. 5 player, will compete as K-State's No. 1 player because she finished in that spot at last week's Husker Spring Classic.

The other Wildcats competing will be Hahn, junior Adena Hagedorn, senior Chris Adams and junior Theresa

When Russ Bunker, K-State's men's golf coach, read the Big Eight coaches' poll last week, he couldn't believe his eyes. The pre-conference tourney predictions listed his 'Cats in the league's basement.

"We're anxious to prove it wrong," Bunker said. "We're really, really excited for this chance. We have a lot to prove to ourselves, the public and the rest of the Big Eight."

The conference opponents apparently weighed the 'Cats' 13 consecutive eighth-place finishes heavily. On the other hand, they must have ignored the fact that K-State has defeated the majority of the conference opponents it's faced this season.

When you look at the Big Eight, Oklahoma State is a top five team, and Oklahoma will be up there," said junior Bill Graham. "But we've beaten Nebraska twice and Iowa State once — virtually every team that we've come up against in the Big Eight." Competing for K-State will be Graham, sophomores Jim Brenneman and Richard Laing, junior Brett Vuillemin and freshman Chad Judd, a new face on the varsity squad. Bunker said he is excited about his team's chances to wipe out its lengthy stay at bottom of the Big

"We finally have the third, fourth and fifth spots playing well," Bunker said. "Jim and Bill are really coming on, but there is a lot of burden on Rich and Brett.

"I think they will handle it well, though. Rich and Brett were highly disappointed after coming so close to qualifying last year."

The Big Eight tournament will begin today at Hallbrook Country Club in Kansas City, Mo., with 36 holes.

Tuesday's round will be 18 holes. Graham, this year's most consistent performer, said there were heavier implications to the tourney, outside of ending the embarrassing

"Hopefully, we'll see a change from recent years," Graham said. "I think if we finish fourth, we should qualify for the National Collegiate Athletic Association's regional tournament."

The meet the team has been eveing all year has finally arrived, and the ill feelings may now be ready to be put to rest.

We are definitely excited about competing in the Big Eight Championships," Bunker said. "We have been in a positive frame of mind all week, and I believe we've saved our best performance."

Riniker got by Wendi Kaplan of CU 7-5, 0-6, 6-3 in the opening round. After losing to Hamers 7-5, 6-3, Riniker returned to beat Stacey Bullman of Oklahoma 6-2, 6-1 for the third-place honor.

To earn third place at No. gles, Wilcox had to defeat two players who had beaten her during the regular season. She fought back from a first set loss to Nebraska's Nancy Tyggum to win in the opening round 4-6, 7-5, 6-4. After losing to eventual champ Nicole Kenneally of OU 6-1, 6-0, Wilcox took the third-place match from KU's Chris Bowers 6-3, Suzanne Sim, who entered the final meet with a record of just 2-5, won the consolation bracket at No. 2 singles after losing in the opener to eventual champion Caroline Delisle of OSU 6-4, 6-1. A 6-1, 3-6, 6-1 win against Ann Flannery of NU and a 7-5, 3-6, 6-2 victory over Angie Moore of CU gave Sim the fifthplace finish.

Senior Thresa Burcham ended her career by equaling Sim's consolation championship in the No. 4 singles spot. Burcham also lost to the eventual champion, Sally Godman of OSU, 6-3, 6-3, forcing her to the consolation bracket. By beating Stacey Stotts of KU 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 and sweeping Khristin Dahlberg of Iowa State 6-0, 6-0, Burcham ended the conference season at 5-5.

The Wildcats, who had won just one doubles match against all conference opponents, excluding last-place Missouri, started play in the doubles field in familiar fashion. The teams of Burcham and Riniker at No. 1 and Sim and Wilcox at No. 2 both lost to eventual champs in the opening round, though the No. 1 tandem forced Waniek and Parker into a three set match. Gover and Tracy Parker were downed in a hardfought 6-4, 6-7, 6-3 match with the No. 3 team from NU. Playing in the consolation bracket for the second round, however, the beleagured Wildcat doubles teams continued to toughen. The No. 1 team beat Missouri 6-1, 6-1 to move to the consolation finals. The other two teams fell in three-set matches with CU.

The final round of play saw the Wildcats win more doubles matches than they had in their last four outings combined. In the finals, Riniker and Burcham won the consolation prize, beating the No. 1 team from Iowa State 6-2, 6-3. The No. 2 and 3 teams downed teams from Missouri to take seventh-place finishes.

Schools will debate merits of 3-pointer

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -NCAA men's basketball rules committee will debate whether to move the three-point arc nine inches farther away during meetings which start Monday.

The NCAA and NAIA rules currently draw the three-point line at 19 feet, 9 inches. If the ruling is adopted during the three-day meeting, the line would conform with the international standard of 20-6.

Other changes pondered will be widening the lane from 12 feet; abolishing the rule permitting two free throws on the 10th team foul of each half; and expanding the use of television replays for correctable errors.

Results of the meetings will be announced on Wednesday. A recent NCAA survey of Division I coaches indicated that 51 percent want the 3-point line moved back.

"I've been for leaving it where it is because in the past it hadn't been there long enough to fool with it," said Gene Bartow, head coach at Alabama-Birmingham and chairman of the 12-man committee. "But I'm open-minded this year. It's been in long enough now to listen to those who want it moved,"

Prank can lead to felony charge when plastic milk crates stolen

MARLA ROCKHOLD

Collegian Reporter

Taking plastic milk crates from behind stores may seem like a harmless prank to some, but it can have serious consequences.

Lt. Scott Campbell, Riley County Police Department, said taking crates is considered stealing, and the person can be arrested on misdemeanor or felony charges.

"It is not a daily occurrence to arrest people for stealing crates, but it does happen," he said. Larry Zeller, who works for Stef-fen's Dairy in Manhattan, said they have a problem with people stealing the crates from their loading dock.

"We have to leave them outside because they would take up too much space inside," he said.

Steffen's prosecutes anyone caught trying to take the crates from company property, Zeller said.

The last people caught were trying to take 35 crates, he said. The police arrested them, and they were fined $120 and had to complete 32 hours of community service each. Charles Long, who works for Fairmont-Zarda Dairy in Topeka, said in the 12 years he has been in the dairy business, stolen milk crates have always been a problem.

"Where we lose most is in the college towns like Manhattan, Lawrence and Topeka," he said.

They are so nice to put things in, and they make good and easy shelves, he said.

Long said crates costs the companies more than most people think. The last time he checked, which was four years ago, crates cost $8 each.

Even though the company may lose some money, he said, there is a bright side to having the crates stolen, Long said.

"Some dairies see it as free advertising," he said.

Tuttle race pits bikers against terrain

JODELL LAMER

Collegian Reporter

The hills were steep; the courses were rocky, and the bikes did not always go where intended.

These are just a few of the obstacles mountain bike riders faced in the Tuttle Creek Dirt Fest Sunday morning at the Randolph Off-Road Recreational Area.

About 40 people participated in the event, either as an individuals or team members. The Dirt Fest, sanctioned by the National Off-Road Bicycle Association, was a biathalon consisting of a two-mile run and an eight-mile mountain bike race.

Team entries had one person running and the other person biking in the race.

Tim Thompson, employee of the American Institute of Baking and coorganizer of the race, said there was a mix of both local and regional riders.

"About half of the riders are from Manhattan and about half are from out of town," he said. "Our first place rider is from Lincoln, Neb., and the third place rider is from Colorado.

"A couple of people dropped out early," Thompson said. "They damaged their bikes on the technical downhill part of the course."

The damage to the bikes ranged from bent rims or malfunctioning derailers to one with a broken seat. One racer was forced to push his bike for most of the first lap because his chain was broken, and he was unable to find a rider with a chain tool.

Shawn Stewart, 1985 K-State graduate, finished second in the race, despite having his chain come off twice. Stewart finished in a time of 1:08.59 and said the hardest part of the race was getting up the hills.

"They are so rocky, you can't get any traction," he said. "The weight of the bike also makes a difference when you have to push it up the hill."

Stewart manages Vanderbilt's in Topeka and said he rides his bike to work and on weekends. He also said he often comes back to Manhattan to ride with friends, but had never been to the race site.

This is the first mountain bike race Stewart has entered. He said he used to run cross-country and finished second in the running part of the race behind a team runner.

"There was just one big hill on the run," he said. "Going up the hill was easy - going down was tricky. The rocks made footing difficult.

The course was laid out with a circuit, makin eight-mile biking part of the race. It had to be challenging enough for experienced riders and easy enough for beginning riders to complete.

"I'm just glad it was sunny outside," said Amy Barben, Phi Delta Theta coach and senior in apparel and textile marketing.

Each fraternity and sorority raises money for a national philanthropy.

"It's nice to know we do something for the community and still have so much fun," said Kellee junior in public relations.

The Alpha Xis were more organized this year than last year, Forkenbrock said. They had officals from the Chester E. Peters Recreation Center make calls on the tug-of-war, volleyball and threeon-three basketball.

Also, a member of Alpha Xi wore a head-set while she was timing an event so she could radio the times to the points table.

"It looks as though the Alpha Xis are more technologically advanced than last year," said Tommy Nugyen, member of Pi Kappa Alpha and junior in

Show features students

Collegian Reporter

The K-State Apparel Design Collective had its annual fashion show from 4 to 9 p.m. Saturday in the lobby of McCain Auditorium.

The Apparel Design Collective is a showcase for the originally designed and constructed clothing ensembles of 16 apparel design students

The students displayed 45 separate entries on mannequins, with a variety of designs represented - including evening gowns, childrenswear, dresses, jackets and tailored coats. Some of the designs came from commercial patterns.

There were eight classes of competition contestants could enter. Christie Endsley, sophomore in apparel design, won an award for best construction with a bolero jacket she designed, and Angie Lacey, junior in apparel design, won best-tailored construction for her black tailored coat.

Paula Sulzen, Lanette Enochs and Robin Manderino, seniors in apparel design, won two awards each.

Sulzen won best-of-show and outof-class awards for her childrenswear and a black evening gown.

Enochs won most creative design and best senior collection for a black beaded dress and entire line of 18 garments.

Manderino received an award for most marketable outfit and best fashion illustration for a blouse and split skirt and a purple business suit illustration.

The designs were modeled by the students in a preliminary round on Wednesday evening to decide which designs qualified for Saturday's judging.

In order to even qualify for the preliminary competition, each student had to earn a certain number of points for each entry, said Lacey, who serves as vice-president of Apparel

Design Collective. "You can earn points by simply going to meetings, participating in fund-raising activities and helping set up the fashion show on Saturday,

Lacey said. Lacey said she spent 15 hours a week for six weeks working on her

Carter

And Carter's negotiations with Iran stalled mysteriously in September, after showing great promise.

Carter said he spent his last three days in office awake, trying to do everything in his power to get the hostages back. He said his deputy secretary of state, the Algerian government and eleven other nations were trying to get the hostages back.

Early in the morning on Inauguration Day the negotiations were concluded, and the hostages were loaded onto the plane. Carter said officials in Algiers said the plane was sitting on the runway in Teheran waiting to

"And it sat there and it sat there," Carter said. "It was about five minutes after twelve o clock, when I was no longer president, that the plane finally took off."

Carter said he was so overwhelmed with joy that the hostages were finally free that he didn't think it suspicious at all that the plane didn't take off until after Reagan was the president.

"I would assume, and still do, that the Ayatollah Khomeini during those months just didn't want to do anything to make me look good," Carter said. "I assume that he wanted to punish me by holding the hostages until I was no longer president. That's what I always assumed, and I hope that's true.' But Carter said that not long after he was out of office, Iran's President Bani Sadr said from exile in Paris that the rumors of discussions to hold the hostages between the Reagan/ Bush camp and the Iranian government were true. Bani Sadr's comments were largely ignored, though they were coming from the horse's

Gary Sick, Carter's assistant National Security Adviser at that time, didn't put much merit into the reports

But, in an interview earlier this month with documentary journalist Bill Moyer, Sick said he has turned 180 degrees and now believes that there is a pattern to many of the events in the hostage crisis and the Iran-Contra scandal.

"It's a troubling thing to contemp-late," Carter said. "It is inconceivable to me that in a time when those hostages could have been killed at any moment that any American would tell Khomeini to hold them in captivity."

Last week in Newsweek magazine it was reported that ex-CIA director William Casey, who was then Reagan's campaign director, began negotiating the deal with an Iranian cleric in two meetings in Madrid in July and August 1980.

When I look at the whole of it, I cannot conclude that nothing happened," Sick told Newsweek.

Though Sick said he has at least 15 people from three continents that tell the same story, the evidence is far from conclusive. Two weeks ago a former foreign service member who was held hostage by Iran called for a special prosecutor or a congressional inquiry to look into the ordeal. But in Manhattan Friday, Carter said he has heard of an agreement by the Reagan/Bush camp and the Iranians that the hostages would be held in captivity until after Reagan was elected. This would be in exchange for substantial military supplies which began flowing to Iran for its war against Iraq shortly after Reagan took office.

"There's no doubt that as soon as President Reagan got in office that the arms started flowing," Carter said. "That's been proven. Whether there was a trade I don't know. I think the evidence that there were discussions is quite troubling."

Dukas receives recognition

By the Collegian Staff

Stephen Dukas, assistant professor of finance, received the Distinguished Undergraduate Teacher's Award formally Monday.

Dukas has been at K-State since January 1990, and presently teaches two finance classes. He is also a member of the graduate faculty and does a lot of research on investments, corporate and international finance.

Dukas said, "I was very shocked and happy to hear I was chosen. I enjoy spending time with my students and it makes me feel good to know they think I am worthy of this award.

I guess you could say I haven't assimilated it yet."

Mike Ahern, chairman of the selection committee and last year's recipient said the award is based on nominations by students, teacher evaluations and recommendations from the department heads. There were four people on the committee.

Ahern said the longest process is the paperwork involved, which takes about two weeks.

Dukas will receive a plaque and a monetary award of $500, and he will also be recognized at commencement ceremonies in May.

Weekend storms raise questions of readiness

Codebooks lack shelter ordinance

ERWIN SEBA Staff Reporter

Despite the known hazard of mobile homes in tornadoes, neither the state, Riley County nor the city of Manhattan require storm shelstate officials said Monday. Fourteen people were killed when a tornado struck a mobile home park in Andover, south of Wichita, Friday. Reports in state newspapers and on television have stated the Andover park did not have enough shelter space for its ters in mobile home parks, area and residents. "We don't have any," said Don Berges, senior code inspection officer for the city of Manhattan.

"There aren't any in our codebooks," he said about regulations governing storm shelters in mobile home parks.

Monty Wedel, planning director for Riley County, said the county also does not have regulations requiring storm shelters.

Rich Smith, an assistant Kansas attorney general, said state law requires certain types of tie-downs and anchoring systems for mobile homes, but does not require storm shelters in mobile home parks.

What shelters do exist in mobile home parks are provided by park owners, Wedel said.

"It's up to the owner to provide shelters," he said. "But we don't require it.

"We're going to be rewriting the regulations," Wedel said. "And I think that'll be in there."

A rewriting of the county's regulations governing trailer parks has been under consideration for some time, Wedel said.

"We've been talking about it for ity." Henderson said.

two or three years," he said. "I'd going to give it priority until the commissioners tell me to."

Wedel and Assistant City Manager Jim Pearson said a rewriting of county or city regulations would not cover existing mobile home parks, only new ones built after such a change.

"To retro in existing mobile home parks?" Pearson said. "I seriously doubt it."

But as for new regulations, which would cover new parks, Pearson said, "I'd think that's a distinct possibility."

We've been talking about it for two or three years. I'd like to do something, but I'm not going to give it priority until the commissioners tell me to.

-Monty Wedel planning director for Riley County

Mobile home parks are not "proliferating" within Manhattan city limits, he said. Pearson said he could not recall a request for a zoning change to construct a mobile home park since he joined the city staff 14 years ago. The city limits may, however, expand in the future to include a mobile home park, which is in the county.

City and county mobile home park managers, who provide shelters, said they are often underused by park residents.

Margaret Henderson, comanager of Colonial Gardens, said there is room for 50 to 75 people in the park's shelter, which is located in the basement of the park's office

"We never ever had it at capaclike to do something, but I'm not bile homes in the park, and Henderson said the average number of people living in each unit is between three and four.

"Some of these people have family or people in Manhattan," she said. "They go there."

Ken Otte, manager of Red Bud Estates, said the park's two shelters could accommodate the 1,000-1,200 people living in the Like Henderson, Otte said he often watches people leave the park to go to friends' homes when a storm threatens.

"There's never ever a situation where everybody's home at the same time," he said.

Pearson said the larger mobile home parks, like Red Bud and Colonial Gardens, tend to have storm shelters whereas smaller ones do

One of the smaller parks, Fairmont Mobile Home Park, does not have a storm shelter according to a woman who answered the phone and said, "I just take messages." The woman, who declined to identify herself, said residents either leave the park or use a concrete block laundry room next to the office for shelter. One trend, which may lead to the introduction of more shelters in parks, or in developments using slab-home designs, is their inclusion in planned-unit developments, Pearson said.

In the process of finalizing a PUD's plans, the zoning commission or the developer usually includes a storm shelter, he said.

Berges said mobile homes are susceptible to greater damage in a storm because they are not flush to the ground, and the wind can get underneath them. Also mobile home parks tend to be located in wide, flat areas.

K-State tests emergency sirens to avoid malfunctions

CHRISSY VENDEL

Staff Reporter

Local emergency preparedness officials said all sirens are tested regularly to avoid malfunctions like those reported in Andover after Friday's tornado.

Larry Blake, Physical Plant supervisor II, said the campus steam whistle is blown for maintenance purposes every Monday morning, and also once a month as part of the city's civil defense systemwide test.

The familiar whistle would be sounded in the event of severe weather.

Blake said K-State has no contingency plans whatsoever because there is no chance the whistle would not work in the case of an emergency. "The steam whistle is connected to the boiler, and as long as the boiler is going, the whistle will blow," he

Blake said the power plant whistle is activated manually after a call from city officials.

'We're connected to a red telephone," Blake said. "The city safety preparedness officials call us every time the whistle needs to be blown, whether it is for a practice or as a warning.

Blake said to his knowledge, the whistle at K-State has never failed. Some warning sirens in Manhattan, however, have failed several times during practice.

Julie Eichem, emergency preparedness assistant coordinator, said the city's sirens are tested every Monday, except during ominous weather, which could cause false

"People living near the sirens know the practice times, and if the siren doesn't wail, they call us," she Eichem said every once-in-awhile, maintenance crews have been called out to repair broken sirens. "We'd be in big trouble if they didn't go off during a storm," she said. "Police officers would have to drive around and broadcast to the neighbors that there was a tornado."

The most recent storm to come through K-State was in the early 1980s and was not classified as a tornado.

Blake said no sirens were sounded, but it did a considerable amount of damage to the power

K-State tests BST hormone

SHANNAN SEELY Agriculture Reporter

A controversial hormone that stimulates milk production in dairy cows waits approval by the Federal Drug Administration.

Bovine somatotropin is a small peptide hormone that is produced naturally in the cow's pituitary gland, said John Shirley, associate professor in animal sciences and industry. K-State researchers are currently testing recombinant BST. He said the recombinant BST is derived from the BST-producing genetic material of the cow. According to a brochure "Refreshing Facts About BST," now BST can be produced in commercial quantities, similar to insulin for human diabetes treatment. Shirley said BST functions as a nutrition repartitioning agent by shifting nutrients away from fat deposits to the mammary glands.

BST-treated dairy cows produce 11-percent more milk, he said. The increase also depends on the cow's state of lactation and body condition, along with farm management.

Consumers, farmers and the public have mixed feelings about this technology, despite its safety documented in research.

"Normally, we select genetically superior animals to increase milk production over time and in this process (genetics), we are actually selecting animals that produce higher levels of BST," Shirley said.

He said BST is controversial because it is a hormone. "Hormones are very controversial because of the use of steroids by young athletes," he said. Shirley said there was a difference between steroids and BST. The thing we must remember is that BST is not a steroid hormone, but a protein hormone, and as such is digested by the human digestive system just like many other proteins would be digested," he said.

He said BST is species specific, which means it only affects cows.

Consumers may be hesitant to purchase milk from BST-treated cows, which may cause a decrease in milk demand.

Shirley said the consumer's negative attitude will be short-lived. "Consumers will respond to a reduction in the cost of milk in retail centers," Shirley said. Dairy producers are concerned about how BST'will affect the dairy

Small dairy producers believe BST will have a negative impact on milk prices, Shirley said.

As a result of BST treatment, small producers think they will be placed at a competitive disadvantage to large dairy producers.

"However, economic studies do not seem to justify this view," Shirley said. "Small farmers can utilize BST to increase production without having to make major capital investments.

Sam Jahnke, a Junction City dairy producer with about 50 Holstein cows, said he is not in favor of BST at the present time.

"We push milk as an all-natural product," he said. "But BST kind of takes that away. He said he is getting plenty of milk from his dairy cows with proper feed, management and genetics.

He said he thinks Mexico and other countries should use BST to boost production. "BST would be something to look at," he said. The main concern, however, is if the public will approve milk from BST-treated cows.

"With bad press, it will just ruin our public image," Jahnke said. "Just because the FDA approves it, it really doesn't set by three-fourths of the public once they get bad press."

Legislature unsure of education funds

Both houses struggle to fill monetary gaps

CHRISSY VENDEL Staff Reporter

Neither the House nor the Senate can agree on the fate of higher education in Kansas.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said there are some who believe Kansas should live within the existing budget and others who want to see the services of the state met.

"Nothing is over yet," she said. There are still some of us left who realize we have to have additional money to meet the commitments of Kansas.'

Oleen said the Senate Ways and Means Committee met Monday night to prepare a plan that would cut $100 million from the general fund budget in case a tax plan is not passed this session.

Oleen said the $100-million budget cut is the only alternative for a balanced budget if additional revenue is not identified.

"They keep saying they can cut the money," she said. "I don't be-lieve it can be done."

Sue Peterson, assistant to President Jon Wefald, said the Senate committee actually is going to find another $100 million by making

"They will make $50 million in cuts and find the rest by lowering the required percentage for a rainy days fund and moving the highway patrol to the highway fund," she

Peterson said the cutting plan and proposals for a tax package are happening simultaneously because they are related.

"If taxes are increased, it will lower the probability of cuts," she said. "But if there are no new taxes, the other plan goes into effect."

Peterson said the cuts would put K-State at a serious disadvantage.

"We've already absorbed 3,000 additional students over two years without an increase in enrollment adjustment from the state," she Peterson said the Legislative stalemate seems to be the result of different constituent interests.

"People from Johnson County and rural areas don't want new taxes, but communities with regents' institutions, large state hospitals or high property tax want the additional revenue," she said.

Peterson also said there is a lot of speculation about when the legislators should quit because some want to just pack up and go home, but others want to stay and get something accomplished.

"I think the people making the cuts are very serious about it," she said. "There is also some sentiment in Senate for a tax package.

Students arrested for cheating plot

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) - Thirty-nine students were arrested for scheming to use illegal radio equipment to cheat on a medical school entrance examination, police said Monday.

Police Lt. Col. Anuchai Lekbamroong said the students were arrested Sunday during an exam being taken by about 400 people trying to win one of 30 places at Mahidol University.

He said 11 students planned to signal answers from outside the examination room to 28 candidates taking a multiple-choice test. The 11 had taken the test earlier and memorized the answers, he

The students taking the test had small radio receivers attached to their thighs or abdomens that could receive coded pulses for the answers, he said. Police did not say how the scheme was discovered, but Chatch-awan Apaiponcham, director of Mahidol's School of Medical Radiography, said undercover police check for attempted cheating during such exams.

He said anyone convicted of cheating would be barred from taking the entrance exam for three years.

Judge says leaks may sabotage trial

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Trial for four white police officers accused of beating a black motorist might be delayed, partly because of unauthorized leaks that are jeopardizing the case, a judge said Monday.

Superior Court Judge Bernard Kamins said the law requires a speedy trial, now scheduled for May 13. But someone has been giving secret Los Angeles Police Department investigative reports to the Los Angeles Times in a possible effort to delay the trial, he said.

The reports included details on the LAPD Internal Affairs Division's investigation of the Rodney King beating.

He suggested the leaks might be intended to publicize so much information that it becomes impossible to select an unbiased jury. Kamins also said the prosecution has not turned over all of the required evidence to the defense. He said he would rule May 6 ### on a defense motion to postpone trial. Murder charges against wife dropped

DETROIT (AP) - A judge Monday dismissed a murder charge against the wife of a Persian Gulf War veteran who was fatally shot in an alleged insurance scheme about a week after returning

The judge said prosecutors failed to show probable cause that Toni Riggs participated in the March 18 slaying of her husband, Army Spc. Anthony Riggs.

Toni Riggs' brother, Michael Cato, was ordered to stand trial on charges of murder and felonious use of a firearm.

Toni Riggs, 22, who had been jailed since shortly after the slaying, was released from custody after District Judge Vesta Svenson's dismissal of the charge at a preliminary hearing.

The prosecution suffered a major blow April 9, when Svenson ruled that two confessions given by Cato couldn't be used as evidence against his sister. The Wayne County prosecutor's office is appealing that ruling.

Cato told police he and his sister plotted the killing to collect on Riggs' insurance policies.

Senate overrides more Finney vetoes

TOPEKA (AP) - The Senate overrode three more of Gov. Joan Finney's appropriations vetoes Monday, bringing to eight the total line-item vetoes that have been rejected.

Three of her vetoes were overridden last Saturday. The Senate restored more than $7.2 million to the state budget that Finney had cut out, including $3 million for counties to offset the cost of real estate reappraisal.

The Senate also has sustained five of her vetoes, including $77,000 for operating expenses the state Historical Museum and $50,000 for the Companion Animal program for the Animal Health Department. The program involves state inspections of commercial dog and cat kennels.

Sen. Richard Rock, D-Arkansas City, said the statewide reappraisal was mandated by the state, so the state should share in the cost.

The Senate approved the override 33-5.

The Legislature has not overridden a governor's veto since 1977, when Gov. Robert Bennett was in office. It takes a twothirds vote to override a veto. In the Senate, that takes 27 votes and in the House 84 votes.

The eight veto overrides now go to the House.

Liberal man charged with murder

LIBERAL (AP) - A Liberal man was ordered held on $200,000 bond in the killing of his ex-girlfriend's mother, the Seward County attorney said.

Curtis Young Jr. was charged Monday with first-degree murder in the slaying of Judy Johnson, 49. Her body was found April 8 in a bedroom of her southwest Liberal home.

Young, 27, was arrested Sunday night after police brought him in for questioning and was held in Seward County jail, said county attorney Don Scott. Young appeared in court Monday, and a preliminary hearing was set for May 2.

Scott said authorities believe the killing was sparked by a quarrel over his relationship with the daughter. He said Johnson was killed with a heavy drinking glass.

'Other' project to be catchall

Essential Edge Campaign category has $1 million goal

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

A seemingly catch-all project in the Essential Edge Campaign is termed "Other." The Other project has a goal of $1 million and comprises numerous projects within itself.

Jim Buchheister, KSU Foundation controller, said projects in the Other category include the Alumni Association, the K-State Union, campus beautification such as the Higinbotham Gate, presidential funds, the KSU Vietnam Veterans Memorial, clubs and organizations, the Landon Lecture Series and numerous other gifts.

The category is broad and undefined.

Mark Moore, Essential Edge Campaign director, explained his interpretation of the Other

"Actually, Other would comprise other projects of the University," Moore said.

Buchheister, who organizes the general scholarships, undesigcontributions into the right categories, gave his brief explanation.

"Other includes anything outside the colleges," he said. He said the term also specified things outside Farrell Library, art museum and Intercollegiate Athletics campaigns.

There are numerous campus entities that could fall under the Other category but instead are placed under specific colleges. The K-State Botanical Gardens are reported under the College of Agriculture, and Student Publications Inc. contributions are budgeted under the College of Arts and Sciences because of its association with the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism, Buchheis-

To add to the confusion, there are additional categories that are counted toward the campaign's overall goal, but do not have a goal of their own.

There are three categories - nated and future designation. General scholarships refers to University scholarships that are not designated to a specific college; undesignated refers to gifts that can be used for purposes determined by the Foundation. Future designation refers to gifts that have yet to be designated, but have been counted as campaign contributions, Buchheister said.

Although the Other project has a $1-million goal, it currently has more than $5 million in contributions.

"The Farm Bureau building that was partially gifted to us was worth $3.2 million," Buchheister said: "That would have to be the bulk of it."

The money in the Other category is not discretionary. None of those funds can be used by the Foundation, or anyone else, for

The monies in the Other category do not fund the activities of the Essential Edge Campaign,

"The funding for the campaign comes from the KSU Foundation's budget," he said. "Money that has come in over years and years funds the Foundation.

"Some contributions are designated for the Foundation or for Essential Edge Campaign expenses. A contribution had also been made to help establish a Foundation/Alumni Center."

Art Loub, Foundation president, said that when conducting a campaign of the Essential Edge's magnitude, a large amount of money is needed just to operate.

"You don't enter into a $100-million campaign and raise $13,14,15 million a year by magic," Loub said.

"Less than 10-percent of the amount of money raised is involved in conducting the campaign, which on a national average is excellent."

"Most of the gifts that come in are clearly designated," Buch-heister said. "Its fairly easy, except when some of these oddballs come along."

Waste compact faces confusion

PAUL NOEL Staff Reporter

COUNCIL GROVE - The Big Lakes Solid Waste Management Compact is wrestling with a nebulous bear, said Wilton Thomas, Geary County commissioner.

The compact faced confusion Monday night while debating how usership contracts would be made with Waste Management America.

John Sjo, Riley County commissioner, said if each county were to have its own contract, a good portion of the compact would be nullified.

"We just don't know where we're at right now," Sjo said. "We're going to have to do something right away. "How are we ever going to get all this together again? We've agreed on this once, but if we abandon the compact, we'll have to start over again." Keith Devenney, compact vice chairman, said it is necessary for the compact to see a contract from Waste Management America before anything else can be discussed.

'We've got a problem," Devenney said. "If we want to act as a compact, then let's act as a compact, and we can act tonight.

"Let's have them lay a contract out for us so we can pick it apart," he said. "Once the liability is in black and white, we'll know where we're

He said the compact would not exactly do what it was designed to do. Dickinson County's zoning appeals board would ultimately be the one to allow new customers.

The compact would be a governing board for the operation of the landfill, said Richard Jepsen, Riley County commissioner.

"The governing board would negotiate annually on an increase on fees," Jepsen said.

Harden said dumping fees would be consistent with the exception of Riley County, which would receive a

All customers of the landfill would have equal representation, Harden said. One person from each county would be on the executive committee and would have one vote.

"The compact is the key to the whole thing," he said.

controversy. It seems a guy up here at school has gone on a one-man crusade to have Playboy banned from the K-State Union. He says it's because he doesn't like the degrading image that women in these magazines seem to get stuck with. I think it's because he wants chicks to dig him.

Normally, I wouldn't get to excited about something like this. I've been fighting cen-sorship battles for a long time now and have learned to ignore most of them. But this seems to have the whole campus in an uproar. Some think the magazine should be banned. Some think it shouldn't. Most have no idea what the hell is going on and are looking forward to summer when the bars in Aggieville offer drinks for 50 cents a pop.

It all seemed to start off innocently enough. The guy walked into the bookstore and saw Playboy magazine. He got offended and walked out. I thought that was cool. It's nice to live in a country where you can have las, even K-State is not immune to don't want, you can simply walk away from.

This guy didn't see it that way. He wrote a letter saying no one should be able to buy Playboy at the Union. He said he disagreed with selling a men's magazine at a place (college) where equality between sexes is stressed. I don't know if I really buy that argument. An awful lot of magazines at the Unon are aimed at a female audience, and one of them (Cosmopolitan) has featured male centerfolds in the past. True, the bookstore doesn't carry Playgirl, but they should.

Womyn's Studies (they spell it with a Y) got into the act next. They argued that Playboy results in violence toward women. They said Playboy victimizes women. I thought that if they had ever learned to bake, they wouldn't be worried about stuff like this.

That's a joke. But from a serious standpoint, some of their arguments have major weaknesses in them. For instance, in Scandanavian countries where pornography is legal, sexual violence rates are among the lowest in the world. This is opposed to the United things you like available, and things you States, where Playboy is sold in brown wrappers and sexual assault results in one out of every four college women being raped by the time she graduates.

As for the victimization accusation, I know none of these women are photographed without first signing a release. They make incredible amounts of money. True, they often go on to star in horrible movies with titles like "Breast Beach," but it's done by choice. That's a word Womyn's Studies people don't seem to want to hear.

The scariest aspect of this situation so far has been the people who write in saying to ban Playboy at the bookstore because you can go right down the street and get it somewhere find logic in this type of argument? It's OK to ban something one place and not in another? People, you have to stand for something. At least those who want to ban the magazine are united and focused in their efforts to ban the magazine completely. Though I do hope and pray that they don't succeed, I admire them for taking a stand and making an effort to see their goals achieved. An awful lot of us could take lessons from their devotion.

We better do it awful damn quick, too. Student Senate isn't going to solve this problem. They'll get in this enormous debate about politics, appoint a committee to make a recommendation, disregard the committee's findings and eventually decide to make no decision at all.

Some have proposed that an election take place to decide Playboy's future fate at the bookstore. I doubt this would work. If student body president elections are any sign, nobody really votes. Therefore, a relatively small number of students could decide policy for everyone. Personally, I think the system we else. Are there actually people out there who have now works pretty good. Everyone gets to make a choice every single day.

Even our beloved Jon Wefald won't solve the problem. His flawed introduction of Jimmy Carter has left me wondering if he's secretly suffered a stroke and Ruth Ann is really running the campus. Therefore, even if he likes Playboy, he's not going to be of any Fraternities and sororities can make up all the sweatshirts they want. It's still not going to help. In the end, what's going to make the difference is you going to the Union and telling the person in charge that you like being able to buy Playboy at the Union. Or that you hate Playboy magazine, but support the right of people to read it.

nly then, with the right of the bookstore to sell Playboy assured, will K-State be living up to it's true creed of equality for everyone. Freedom has costs, and one of them may be that you could be offended by something. My advice? Walk away.

Rape Victim's name will never appear in Collegian print

NBC News took the unusual only fair. action of identifying a rape victim last week. Soon, the New York Times and other newspapers across the nation followed in its footsteps.

It was a step in the wrong direction.

Rape victims must face scrutiny by the police, lawyers and a courtroom of their peers in an attempt to receive justice in a system geared to protect the accused. They should not be scrutinized by the media.

Sensationalism is a product of the media and is devoured each day by millions. Everyone loves stories about killer bees and serial murders. It makes us squirm, makes us nervous and makes us glad it wasn't us.

But rape victims must remain an exception to the name-allinvolved rules of journalism.

Michael Gartner, president of NBC News, made the final decision to identify a woman who accused William Kennedy Smith of rape. He later attempted to justify the decision.

First, Gartner said it is against the very business of journalism to suppress news from the readers, and if the media discovers a rape victim's name, it must release it - for the sake of the story.

But journalism is not a sacred art. The importance of the story cannot and should not outweigh the importance of people. If a journalist cannot give accurate facts about the case without using the victim's name, he or she needs to change professions.

Second, he said, editorial decisions should not be made by the victims. No longer should victims be given the opportunity to volunteer their names for publication. That should be the decision of producers and editors, and victims should not have a say.

Yet they should. It is unfair for producers and editors to take the victim's name without asking. It's often the only protection left to the victim after a rape.

Third, if a rape suspect is named, then the woman pointing the finger must also be identified. Gartner said it is Only Smith will get his day in court. He will have the opportunity to clear his name if he is innocent, but the victim will always hear questions in the voices of loved ones and friends, and she will always see accusations written in a stranger's eyes.

Finally, Gartner said, the conspiracy of silence leads to shame.

Wrong. Shame comes not only from being raped, but from hours of questions and accusations following the

"What were you wearing? Did you lead him on? Why did he think he could have sex with you?"

Shame comes from having to justify that rape is a crime.

The stigma of rape will not fade when more women are identified - because fewer women will report the rape.

Studies show only one in 10 rapes are reported to the police. Further studies indicate only one in 200 rapes will be reported if the media begins naming victims.

Gartner said he is proud of the process his staff went through before printing the victim's name. No one knows if the victim is proud of Gartner and his staff for revealing her

A story in the New York Times profiled the rape victim following the NBC report. The story described her as "an unwed mother with a little bit of a wild streak."

Editors of the New York Times claim the article drew no conclusions about the truth of her complaint - but the readers did. Many now think she asked for it, because after all, she was known to frequent bars in Palm Beach.

The victim's name has appeared across the nation in newspapers, tabloid magazines and on the nightly news. For right or wrong reasons, her name will not appear in this newspaper.

Hopefully, for the sake of all rape victims, the path followed by NBC News and the New York Times will not be tread hat if ... it was a dark and stormy night. Most of the semester lay in the past and only finals loomed in the future. Beautiful roommate Belinda stood by the stove, brewing a pot of Darjeeling tea to help her through the long night ahead. During a crash of thunder, Plain Jane slipped in, unheard, from the rain. On silent feet she tiptoed into the kitchen and stood behind Beautiful Belinda, arms upraised. A flash of lightning from the window revealed the ominous shadow standing behind her, and Beautiful Belinda swung around quickly. The sight of Plain Jane, cast iron frying pan in hand, poised to strike, unnerved her so that she dropped her teacup.

Plain Jane smiled unconvincingly and slid the pan into the cabinet above the stove. "Just doing a little cleaning up," she said. Frenzied Freida stopped her studying long enough to offer to make Plain Jane some coffee. Some sixth sense brought Plain Jane to the kitchen, where she discovered Frenzied Freida pouring Roach Killer into a coffee cup. Plain Jane stared, aghast. Frenzied Freida laughed awkwardly. "Sorry," she said,

"I thought it was creamer." Frenzied Freida, dozing in her bath, awoke with a start to see Sensible Sylvia standing over her tub with a hair dryer. Seeing Freida's eyes open, Sensible Sylvia quickly turned the flow of air onto herself. "Just doing my hair," she said, shaking out her perfectly dry mane.

Sensible Sylvia, walking to her car, dropped her keys and paused to pick them up. At that moment, the heavy fire safe where Beautiful Belinda kept her jewels crashed into the sidewalk at Sensible Sylvia's feet. "Oops," said Beautiful Belinda from the balcony above, "it slipped."

The atmosphere in the apartment became more and more strained. The tension hung in the air, so thick you could cut it with a knife. And underneath it all, sometimes whispered softly, sometimes screamed in frustration, lay that great college myth, that rumor of all rumors, that fable of hope ... If my roommate dies, I'll get straight A's.

So the warfare continued. The women watched their backs. They did not confide their comings and goings, but slipped out of the apartment in silence. Foods were fed to unsuspecting woodland creatures before being eaten, and a pile of dead squirrels grew in the yard. Uneasy alliances were formed, only to be disbanded. It was obvious, from the Communist perspective, that one must die for the good of them all.

Soon all pretense of studying stopped. Plans were made and plots were laid. Blueprints and diagrams slipped from people's hands and were quickly recovered. Strange men, the kind that you can hire in any major city but are rarely found in Manhattan, began to lurk around the apartment, holding conferences with this woman or that one. Traps were laid, but sprung by wary victims. They seemed to have reached a deadlock.

The night before finals, on dead day, the four women sat in opposite corners of the living room, eyeing each other warily. Frenzied Freida cross-stitched as though her life depended on it. Beautiful Belinda did her nails. Plain Jane flipped channels, though the television was on mute, and Sensible Sylvia sat with a book in her lap, but never turned a page. Often, it seemed as though one or the other was on the verge of speech, of bringing the issue out into the open, but no words were

At precisely 11:30 p.m., all went to bed. The locks on their doors clicked in perfect synchronicity. But one by one they slipped out into the night, and midnight found them all, unknowing, standing silent in the pitchblack living room, without even lightning flashes to illuminate the moonless night. Suddenly there was a click and then a whirr. As if it were the bell in a boxing match, all four women swung into action. Each pounded or hacked at the source of the noise. Beautiful Belinda wielded her boyfriend's metal baseball bat, swinging in a way that would have embarrassed that ball player had he observed it. Frenzied Freida swung a meat cleaver with terrifying authority. She seemed to have studied in her meats classes, if nowhere else. Plain Jane heaved an axe like a lumberjack. Sensible Sylvia dished out her hits with the very frying pan with which Plain Jane had frightened Beautiful Belinda. From the mess she was making, no one would believe that Sensible Sylvia was just cleaning

The whirring had stopped at the first hit, and all that could be heard now was a series of grunts and thumps as weapons were swung and connected with the victim, who lay as senseless as those dealing the blows. The headlights of a car through the window alerted the women to the fact that there were four women swinging their chosen weapons, not three. In the melee that followed, no one is sure who reached the light switch first and flipped it on.

They stood, weaponry stilled at their sides, and stared at what they had done.

Their victim lay at their feet. Parts were scattered from the sofa all the way into the kitchen. Various bits hung on the curtains and stuck to the walls. The confusion of the innards reflected the confusion in their minds as the women stared in horror at their mutilated mutual friend, the VCR, which had whirred to begin recording a movie that they would never watch.

What if ... at this moment, Rod Serling stepped out of the shadows and spoke. Four roommates, each fully capable of earning their own grades, each set on getting something for nothing. One rumor, innocently started, offering them the success they crave at a price. In many places, the urge would float into and out of the mind, never to be acted on, but things are rarely that simple when you go to college in ... The Twilight hen the theme would play and I would return to my Economics book, my homicidal urges, for the moment, satisfied. But strange things and twists of fate happen everywhere, Zone episodes never reveal themselves to the victim. The VCR never knew it was only a TV show. None of us should feel safe. # Wildcats rally for big victory, lose 2nd game

Sports Editor

It took 261/2 hours, but for K-State's baseball team, it was worth year. The hitters were magnificent." the wait.

Sunday's suspended, nine-inning game ended Monday afternoon with the Wildcats scoring nine runs in the final two innings to grab a shocking 13-12 win over Nebraska.

But shocked though the visitors may have been, they rebounded from a 7-1 deficit to hand K-State an equally shocking 16-12 loss in the second contest on a blustery Monday at Frank Myers Field.

"I wish I knew what to do or what to say," said a K-State coach Mike Clark at the conclusion of the two games, which left K-State at 9-11 in the Big Eight and in need of wins in three of four games in an upcoming series with Oklahoma State.

"We've done this all year long and lost games we shouldn't have," Clark

Thanks to a Herculean effort at the end of the suspended contest, the 'Cats won a game they probably shouldn't have.

Nebraska led 12-4 entering the bottom of the eighth. In the frame, the Wildcats got a pair of walks, had a pair of batters reach after they were hit with pitches and picked up three singles. K-State also benefited from a sacrifice fly, a fielder's choice and a Cornhusker error.

It was 12-10 after eight.

In the bottom of the ninth, two singles, a sacrifice fly, a fielder's choice and Jeff Ryan's game-winning, twoout double told the final tale. It was 13-12 Wildcats. Whew! The comeback made a winner out of walk-on Brett Bock, 3-1, who worked five-plus innings of relief. Bock scattered seven hits and allowed four runs, all earned. He struck out two and walked five. But make no mistake, the Wildcat bats were the story. Ryan had a 3-for-6 first game with three RBIs, and Craig Wilson, Lance Wilson, Brad Rippelmeyer and Christopher Wolf all added two hits. Brian Culp and Van Torian added doubles for K-

"I'm awful proud of our hitters," Clark said. "Offensively, it might have been the best we've done all

The comeback made a losing pitcher out of Dave Matranga, who was the pitcher of record in three of the four games in the series.

In the second contest, K-State rode the emotion of the first outing to a 7-1 lead after three innings of the seveninning tilt. But Nebraska scored five runs in the fourth, four in the fifth and six in the seventh to grab the 16-12

K-State was within one pitch of an 11-10 win in the seventh, but losing pitcher Sean Pedersen, 5-2, failed to escape unscathed. Six runs crossed the plate after two men were out in the inning, and three different Wildcat hurlers were needed to stop the bleeding.

"The way we were swinging the bats, we just wanted to have a chance at the end," Clark said. "It all comes down to pitching.

Clark's hitters gave his team the early lead and got them back into a tie, and eventual lead, after Nebraska went up 10-7.

In the second contest, Ryan had three more hits, Chris Hmielewski had three and Craig Wilson had three hits and four RBIs. Culp and Craig Wilson doubled, and Craig Wilson also tripled. Scott Stroth homered for the Wildcats.

Nebraska's late work in game two Monday made a winner of Matranga, 8-6, who got two series wins - in games one and four - to go with his defeat in game three.

Nebraska, 6-10 in the Big Eight and 32-17 overall, has two Big Eight series' remaining. The Wildcats, 30-23 overall, have but one conference fray left this weekend at home against Oklahoma State.

The Wildcats will face Emporia State at 7 tonight at Frank Myers Field. After using every member of his pitching staff over the weekend, Clark was undecided late Monday as to who the starting pitcher would be for the Wildcats against the Hornets.

Injury-laden 'Cats take Monday off

TODD FERTIG

Sports Reporter

Just one week away from the spring game, the football team is, above all else, trying to keep its play-

With three allotted practices left, the squad is taking precautions to limit injuries and allow time for recovery.

Because several players sustained minor injuries in Saturday's scrimmage, Coach Bill Snyder decided to give the team an additional day off. The team will use its usual day off, Wednesday, to make up for the workout postponed Monday.

"We're concerned about some guys getting banged around and missing three or four days of practice to recover," Snyder said. "Usually the ones who need it are held out by minor things. With such a short season, we can't afford to have guys miss a lot of practice.

Snyder blamed a portion of the injury problem on the new schedule teams are forced by NCAA regulations to follow.

'Somebody thought we were doing these kids a favor by making the season shorter, but that just produces situations like this," Snyder said.

The team will use one of its two days left that it can work out in pads today, Snyder said. He said the team would probably practice in full uniform Thursday as well, but said he was unsure to what extent they would allow contact.

Special teams

One of the primary concerns for the team entering spring training was the area of special teams, particularly the punting duties. The loss of two-year starter Chris Cobb, who averaged 40 yards per kick the past two seasons, left the role of punter open to competition. Not one of the squad's contenders for the position - senior Matt Argo, junior George Matsakis, and Sean Snyder, sophomore transfer from Iowa have kicked in a Wildcat contest.

"I think we're doing fine about filling that role for next year," Snyder said. "I think our punters are hitting the ball real well, and each has good range.

Snyder said the special teams squads have practiced under live conditions more than in the past, which may help prepare players who have been limited in their playing time. Snyder said he is not concerned by the lack of action seen by the "Obviously, you would always like to have experience at every position, and Sean did see some game experience when he was at Iowa as a freshman," Snyder said. "They each have courage and will stand in there. I don't think we need to be too concerned about the position, and I don't think they're worried either."

Switching sides

The migration of players from all positions on the field to the defensive end spot continues. Defensive back Derrick McBride joins linebacker Chris Patterson and fullback Curtis Madden in the experiments at the end

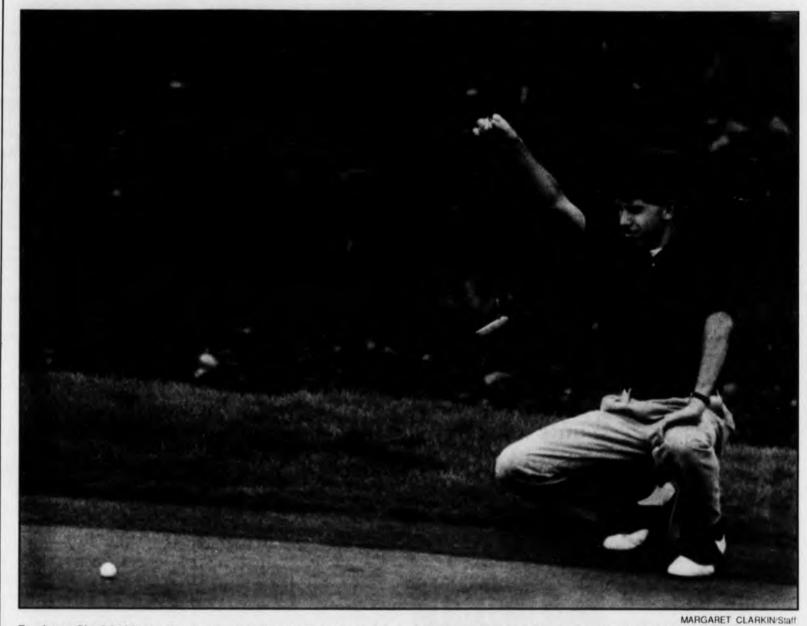

Looking to shore up the position, the team has added McBride to the group of players headed by returners Elijah Alexander, John Butler and Reggie Blackwell. Snyder said the additions have provided depth and a variety of skills to the group.

"We really feel a lot better about that position with the group we've got right now," Snyder said. "Derrick has proven to us that he's going to be a bonafide player at that position, and Curtis has really made a lot of progress."

McBride, a redshirt cornerback, is the smallest member of the competitors for the spot at 6-foot-2 and 200 pounds. Snyder, however, said he didn't feel his size would be a problem. "It's going to be tough for the learning aspect of moving from corner to defensive end, but no tougher than moving Curtis from offense," Snyder said.

Golf teams both next to last

Freshman Chad Judd eyes the alignment of his putt on the seventh hole at Hallbrook Monday. The men's team played 36 holes Monday, and will play another 18 today in an attempt to escape its long-term hold on the league cellar. The team is seventh through 36 holes.

Men battle conditions

ERIC BROWN Sports Reporter

LEAWOOD - If cool temperatures and strong winds weren't enough to hinder the K-State men's golfers, the fifth-toughest course in the nation - Hallbrook - was.

The Wildcats sit in seventh place in the Big Eight tourney, eight strokes ahead of Colorado and eight strokes behind Missouri.

"It was an awfully tough day," Coach Russ Bunker said. "It was a demanding course, and it wasn't easy to play. I'm disappointed because the kids are better than what they're showing.

Sophomore Richard Laing led the team with 159 strokes. He was followed by Jim Brenneman (162), Brett Vuillemin (166), Bill Graham (171) and Chad Judd (182).

"We're real disappointed because we were finally starting to come along," Laing said. "The weather obviously was terrible. All the scores show it. Even the best teams in the nation were well off of their averages.'

K-State's battle has been to rid itself of a 13-year streak of cellar finishes. Yet, the team was confident it could finish much higher.

"In everybody's mind, we've got to climb out of the cellar first, but we're not a sixth-place team," said Bunker."I've never thought this was a sixth-place team. They are a whole lot better than that. "We have to take it one step at a time," Laing said. "We wanted to get third, but the teams that we were equal to all had good rounds." Oklahoma State leads the meet with 599 strokes. Oklahoma is second with 617 and Nebraska third with 634. Kansas, Iowa State and Missouri sit at 637, 641, 650, respectively. K-State is at 658, followed by last-place Colorado at Brenneman was also upset with the team's first-round finish.

"We had the potential to finish fourth. We just didn't play well," Brenneman said. "I'm frustrated because we've got so much talent. We have gutty players, but we just didn't do it. Looking back at K-State history, our goal is now

The team is pleased to be looking down on another team in the standings, but feel there should be more than one team below.

"We beat Missouri every time we played them this year," Bunker said. "Not to take anything away from their kids, but we're disappointed that they're ahead of us."

K-State's lady linksters braved stiff wind and cold weather at Columbia, Mo., to finish the first round of the Big Eight Championships in sixth place. The Wildcats had a rough day, but are still in position to jump as high as fourth in the standings during today's final round.

Oklahoma is running away from the field with a score of 632. Second is Oklahoma State at 648 and Nebraska is next at 649. K-State shot a 667 and leads Iowa State, which sits at 668. Fifth-place Missouri is a stroke in front of K-State at 666. Kansas is within reach at 659, good for fourth after 36 holes.

"We survived out there today," Coach Mark Elliott said. "Even though we are in sixth, the wind affected all of our girls. We feel like fourth place is within reach."

The Wildcats will be matched up with Iowa State in today's final 18

Junior Adena Hagedorn led the Wildcats with a sixth-place finish on the strength of scores of 78 and

K-State sophomore Valerie Hahn, a Big Eight golfer-of-themonth, is 13th at 164 strokes. With a strong round, Hahn has an outside chance to move into the all-Big Eight range.

Other performers were senior Chris Adams at 168, Theresa Coyle at 18? and Denise Pottle at 184. Pottle was playing in the team's No. 1 spot after a brilliant showing in last week's Husker Spring Classic.

Nebraska's third-place position is on the strength of taking top two positions in the first day. Jackie Flood and Joanne Brooks are first and second with scores of 153 and

"We are disappointed with being in sixth place, but with the conditions and as poorly as we played, we feel lucky to even be where we are," Elliott said.

Punchless Royals lose to Detroit, 3-1

By the Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Sparky Anderson was not surprised to see Alan Trammell shake off the pain and stick around to drive in two runs Monday night in Detroit's 3-1 victory over Kansas City. 'That's the way he's always been ever since he's been in the big leagues," the Tigers manager said. He's not going to let something like that bother him. Emergency starter Steve Searcy combined with Paul Gibson to shut down Kansas City as Detroit got two run-scoring singles by Trammell and a home run from Mickey Tettleton. Bret Saberhagen let a breaking pitch get away in the first inning and the ball hit Trammell on the fingers of the left hand. He danced around in pain a few minutes, then went to first and later drove in Milt Cuyler twice.

"I know Bret Saberhagen is one of the best pitchers in the American League. It never occurred to me that it was intentional or anything like that," Trammell said. "Certainly, I respect him a great deal. I just had a couple of opportunities and I got a couple of base hits."

A large blood blister had formed on the little finger of the left hand. Trammell said one of the first thoughts that flashed through his mind was that Kansas City's Kevin Seitzer broke a hand while standing at the same plate a few days earlier.

"I knew what happened to Seitzer and that's always the first thing you think of - am I hurt?" Trammell said. "There was a numbless for about five minutes and then it went away. After that, I was fine. I'm lucky. Saberhagen (1-3), winless since opening day, has had only one run scored for him while he was in the game during his last three starts. Saberhagen allowed seven hits in seven innings and struck out five before Steve Crawford relieved.

"I'm frustrated that I went out and lost tonight but I've been frustrated that the team's been losing," he said. 'When you get good, quality-pitched baseball games like we've been getting, and we're just struggling a little bit offensively - it's frustrating for not just me but for the whole team."

Searcy (1-1), who failed to get out of the second inning in his previous start, pitched 5 1-3 innings in place of Dan Petry, who was scratched with back spasms.

Program provides services

Foster care provided

ERIN BURKE Collegian Reporter

Foster homes are not just for abused or neglected children. That is why the Kansas Children's Service League has several foster programs to serve different needs.

The agency was founded in 1893 and is a statewide, private, nonprofit United Way organization that provides services to children and sometimes the families, said Kim Menard, social worker supervisor at the agency.

Temporary foster care is one of the many programs available. It usually does not deal with cases of abuse, but applies mostly to parents who have been hospitalized and have no one to care for their child, Menard said. The hospital calls the agency when a child is left temporarily without the parent.

For children who have been abused or neglected or have behavior problems, there is the emergency foster care program. The agency works with Social Rehabilitation Services to find a licensed, trained, supervised foster home for the child, Menard said.

A child stays in the foster home until the courts decide when the environment is stable enough for the child to return to their own home, counseling the student.

"It is a team effort to make sure the child adjusts," Menard said. Also, an adoption program has been implemented to focus directly on black families. Joan Morales, social worker for the agency, said this program has been successful. The respite care program has people trained to care for disabled

"It can be as short as an hour, as long as a month," Menard said. Parents who need a break develop a partnership with the people who care for their child temporarily, Menard said. The providers are paid by the agency.

An unplanned pregnancy counseling service is also available to help with decision-making. For the people who choose to keep the baby. Follow-up case management services are provided, she said.

Parents are shown ways of handling children who are having problems. This program also covers the responsibilities of parenting, Me-

Menard said the majority of the children are not free for adoption; cases usually deal with family problems where the child is still connected with the parent.

Foster parent training is available at the agency, Menard said. Counselors from schools and mental health institutions lead discussions about problems children may be facing.

The foster parents are somewhat reimbursed by the agency. They are paid $11 per child, per day to offset some of the costs of having another child in the home, Menard said. Medical costs for the child from hospitals and prescription drugs are covered by the state.

"People can be as active or inactive as they want," Menard said.

April has been a busy month, Menard said. There are 26 children that have been placed in foster homes and 22 licensed foster care

Artists provide insights in exhibit

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reviewer

The Master/Apprentices and Konza Prairie Artist Exhibit is an oasis of insight. The exhibit will be on display through May 15 at the Riley County Historical Museum.

Provide

Roger Lane Routson, Judy Love,
Duane Noblett, Diana Moulds and Edward Sturr combine their talents and perceptions to create an aesthetic appreciation for a landscape too often taken for granted.

A research grant from the College of Arts and Sciences funds the Konza Prairie Artist and Scientist Mentor Program and allows artists to discuss their works with scientists in order to use the inspiration of this new knowledge to create impressions of the Konza Prairie.

Routson uses hand-cast paper for his prairie display. Abstract textures on bleached white surfaces and some acrylic coloring are a feast for the eyes and imagination, which is only limited by the titles of the works.

Love's work is back on display. The vastness of "Evening Sky," a work that moves left to right away from the setting sun, is typical of Love's work with pastels. The panoramic scene of the prairie is a tribute to the insignificant, conspicuous feeling such a landscape elicits.

Noblett works with graphite on paper using pieces of highway juxtaposed on hills, trees and other objects we can only assume to be natural.

The simple curves on top of angles combine with force like clouds on concrete.

Noblett's one-color work, "TS (The Secret)," is oil on linen. Strange shades of green, periwinkle and pale yellow combine the same geometric shapes with curves.

Noblett's work, "Landscape Recall," provides not only a definition of his works but of the rest of the artists' works on display as well. None of the works are either pure landscapes or pure recollection, but a simple combination of both, making pure pleasure out of this art.

Moulds, senior in art, has been working with Noblett, professor of art, on the Master/Apprentice Project. This has allowed her to study closely with the experienced artist.

Moulds' work is done in shades of black and white. All of the works are untitled. She uses photocopy wax pencil and pencil on paper to give her work the feeling of a scene with the look of abstraction. The works are loaded with partially hidden images of cats, skulls, faces, leaves, droplets, butterflies, skiers and balls.

Moulds uses shadows and space to create the depth and subtlety of the works, which are really pictures of

Finally, Sturr's medium is the hand-colored silver print photograph. Pictures of grass, creeks, trees and skies are intensified with colors vividly suggesting more than nature ever thought.

The pictures seem to have been taken through polaroid sunglasses. Sturr communicates both texture and flavor in the fascinating colors of the Manhattan, Fort Riley and Junction City communities are planning July celebrations to welcome home Fort Riley troops.

Manhattan Cares invited 96 surrounding communities to participate in the A Taste of Manhattan celebration on Saturday, July 13.

"The idea is not to come and be a spectator, but to be a participant in welcoming home the guys and ladies," said Chris Heavey, coordinator of the Manhattan Cares effort. The A Taste of Manhattan celebration will start at noon. Participants will receive a menu of the Saturday events, he said. Heavey said surveys were used to determine what the community wanted in a welcome home celebration.

A number of people suggested a ticker tape parade, arts, entertainment and educational features of Manhattan, he said.

"Last Friday, we learned some Fort Riley units will march in the ticker tape parade," he said. "It will, hopefully, be the longest parade in Manhattan's history.

Individuals and groups are invited to build floats to be in the Red, White and Blue Parade. Manhattan Cares encourages groups to contact them for further information. To help raise funds for the celebration, Manhattan Cares will have a Casino Night in Manhattan Town Center on May 19 from 7 to 11:30 p.m. The Casino Night has a $30-tax-deductible admission

In addition, the group is selling signs and posters and receiving contributions from Manhattan citizens. The "Welcome Home Heroes" yard signs are $5 and available at the Manhattan Town Center and will be available soon at other locations, he

Half of the proceeds from the signs and posters will help pay for the A Taste of Elegance celebration.

Heavey said it will bring many ideas together. Tentative plans include a softball tournament, band performances, local artists and the entire community inviting soldiers to a potluck lunch.

Everything we're talking about all happens within the community," Heavey said.

Heavey said Manhattan Cares first thought about planning homecoming events in early February without knowing how soon the troops would come home. The planning committee is the first and only one organized within Manhattan Cares. Manhattan Cares is a grassroots organization that does not have a specific leader, Heavey said.

"After deciding our mission statement, we are working out the 10,000 different details," he said.

The Fort Riley community is planning events for Friday, July 5.

Mike Zucca, community relations officer, said the plans are still in their

He said the July 4 celebration is usually in conjunction with Junction City's events.

A welcome home rally will include Gov. Joan Finney and area mayors congratulating the troops and their families, Raff said.

At 2 p.m., a variety of entertainment will be featured at Dedication Point near Milford Lake.

London Drive is tentatively scheduled to perform, Raff said. The committee is scheduling other bands from Kansas City. The 1st Infantry Band will also perform and fire cannons. "We are negotiating for a big-

Though the war raged overseas, there were other challenges on the home front.

Seath Miller's wife, Capt. Renee Miller, was sent to the gulf in December. Seath stayed behind to watch after their 6-month-old son. "I've grown up a lot," he said. "I've learned how to really become a parent."

Miller quit his job as a licensed practical nurse so he could spend more time with his son.

it may take longer, he said. "Having her over there has been

When Renee Miller comes home, the Millers plan to take off on what Seath calls the "Miller World Tour."

'We're going to go to Minnesota to visit family, then we're going to hit the east coast and then maybe take a cruise," he said.

After their trip, Seath Miller would like to get his old job back and start school again, he said.

1st Infantry museum to open soon Iraqi uniforms along with uniforms

DAVID FRESE Staff Reporter

Terry Van Meter almost didn't make it out of his second tour of duty in Vietnam alive.

On a routine patrol in 1968 with the 101st Airborne, Van Meter and his company were ambushed. He felt the first shot in his neck. The bullet spun him around, and he caught another in his spleen. Another shot ripped through his shoulder before grenade fragments sprayed his body. "I zigged where I should have zagged," he said, almost absent-mindedly glancing to his wheelchair that sat next to his desk. "It's a miracle I'm alive. The good Lord really took care of me.

Van Meter retired from active duty in 1969 because he was paralyzed. Now, instead of making military history, Van Meter spends his time preserving it as the curator and director for the two military museums in Fort

"This is the closest to military duty I can come," he said.

The U.S. Cavalry museum chronicles the history of the Cavalry from 1875 to 1950, when it was disbanded. The museum includes exhibits for both the regular Cavalry and the National Guard and Reserve units. The Cavalry museum has more than 8,500 different artifacts, several thousand documents and books, and more than 4,000 photos. The museum is at Fort Riley because the old U.S. Cavalry school used to be there.

The second museum Van Meter is in charge of is the soon-to-be-opened 1st Infantry Division museum. It will tell the story of the Big Red One from its inception in June 1917 to the present. Van Meter and his staff have accumulated between 700-800 artifacts, and he said the museum is coming along nicely.

The Big Red One was the first American Division to engage the enemy in World War I, Van Meter said. The 1st Division was also the first division to reach England during World War II. And though it sat out the Korean War, the 1st Division spent five years in Vietnam.

The Big Red One's museum speaks to this - or will, once it opens though the Vietnam portion of the museum had to be shrunk to accomodate the Big Red One's participation in Desert Storm. Van Meter said Fort Riley was the first museum to receive artifacts from Desert Storm. He has received from the British, French and Saudis from the operation. The museum has also received documents, maps and photos from the gulf. Van Meter said he has artillery pieces, small arms, anti-aircraft weaponry and even a couple of Iraqi tanks en route.

Though Van Meter said he feels good about his work chronicling the military's past, he said he is a little unsure about its future.

"The Army will be smaller than it was in 1939," he said. "It'll be the same Army with good people and good equipment.'

But there will be a downside to the downsizing of the military, Van Meter said.

"Desert Shield showed us that there are still a lot of dictators around," he said.

'In Vietnam, the Democratic leadership had no direct goal on exactly what they wanted to do," he said. "The difference is the objectives in Desert Shield were clearly stated.

"I think it is fortunate that we had clear objectives, and the population was informed as to what was happening," he said. "But that's just my own personal opinion as a taxpayer and a retired military man and a historian."

Coming home most thrilling part of war, returning veteran says

LAURA BIRRELL

Collegian Reporter

It was Easter Sunday when Fred Andrews strode down the 60-foot red carpet to a crowd of 400 people welcoming him home.

Andrews, a sergeant first class of the DISCOM unit from Fort Riley, was returning to the United States after serving in the Persian

Also a veteran of the Vietnam War, Andrews said getting on the chopper to come home was the most exciting part of the war.

"At the welcoming, you could tell the Vietnam veterans from the others - because it was more emotional for them," he said. "The better welcome made me wonder where these people were 21 years ago. The war was not that much different."

Andrews' wife Janna Andrews said memories of Vietnam occupied her thoughts while her husband was serving in the gulf.

'I was scared the actual day he left," she said. "I was thinking of his tour of Vietnam and if he would make it back this time.

"The unknown and the waiting was rough - not knowing was the hardest part."

Janna Andrews said she watched CNN 24 hours a day when the ground war started. "I would sleep a little while, then go back and watch more," she said.

The relative short time it took for the allied troops to defeat the Iraqi troops made her more optimistic that her husband would soon

"The ground war was only 100-hours long. It ended before we really had a chance to get mad," Fred Andrews said. "The Iraqi soldiers didn't want to fight. Saddam lied to them a lot - they didn't even know they were fighting the United States.

There was some resistance until they saw who they were fighting," he said. "They were on the run and didn't want to fight. They had already accomplished their task of demolishing the city."

Fred Andrews said the Iraqi sol-diers weren't fed properly and were barefoot.

"It was pitiful," he said, "and their fighting was comical - they liked to play cat and mouse across Fred Andrews said the Iraqi's started with 64 divisions and ended up with only 4 divisions left. 'Most Iraqis surrendered and left their equipment," he said. The hardest part for him was seeing the children who were suffering in Kuwait. "I'm a father of four children, and it was hard to see the children suffer," he said. "The children are the innocent victims.

"It was all worthwhile after seeing the children and the Kuwaiti flag flying over the city. Janna Andrews said it was hard for her husband to fight the Iraqis. "Fred wrote that the only thing beautiful about the desert was the night sky, which was filled with stars," Janna Andrews said. "The sand was so fine it went through the tents and into the sleeping bags. They had sand in their food and in their clothes. They could hardly sleep."

Fred Andrews said he was grateful to be back home and is looking forward to his expected retirement date, just about a month away.

"I'm getting too old for this game and am looking forward to retiring," Andrews said.

Professors make war part of discussion

Gulf topic pertains to different areas of study

CANDY MCNICKLE

Collegian Reporter

The situation in the Persian Gulf has been a common topic of classroom discussion the last few months. Even now that the war is over and the soldiers are on their way home, there are still discussions on campus about what is going on there. Professors say they are discussing current events in the gulf with their class whether it is relevant to the class or not, because they feel this is important and like to leave it open for class discussion. The plight of the Kurdish refugees, the Arab-Israeli conflict and the returning soldiers can be related to many different areas of study.

"I feel that the current situation in the gulf can be related to philosophical ideas," said John Exdell, associate professor of philosophy. "I am going to have a handout in class that will reflect what the war has meant to the people in Iraq.

"It is easy for the students to assent without thinking of the consequences

Even though the gulf isn't as hot a topic as it was earlier in the semester, teachers say they will discuss it if students have questions, or if it pertains to the subject matter being discussed in class.

Marlon Gray, professor in history, said he thinks history plays a big part in how the world is where it is today, as well as why we are here.

"My introduction to history class discusses U.S. involvement with Vietnam," Gray said. "I am using a book written by Frances Fitzgerald in relation to the situation with the

"I want the students to think in the patterns that human behavior takes, allowing them to further understand what is going on," he said.

Aruna Michie, professor of political science, said she discusses the situation as events unfold. The war and the current situation fit well into her discussions on diplomacy and economic sanctions.

landscape architecture, brings her personal experiences with her fiance into her environmental design studies class.

Wigfall's fiance, a social worker, is currently in the gulf area working with psychiatric canalties. Her class has come to know her fiance well. In turn, Wigfall is able to use the information she gets from him to aid in discussions with her students or to answer any questions they may have.

"There isn't much opportunity for discussion in a studio, but if we hear something on the radio I will stop and talk to the students," Wigfall said. The students are very vocal, and I want them to express themselves.

"Instead of discussing politics, I want to provide counseling and stability for my students," she said. "I want them to get a perspective different from that of just infantry."

A current contest for the design of Vietnam Memorial to go up at the Riley County Courthouse has some of Wigfall's students working on de-

Churches show soldiers support

Special services, picnics planned

SEAN MORAN

Collegian Reporter

Local churches have shown support for the soldiers fighting in the gulf since the war began. Some churches are also planning special activities, like picnics and special services, for the soldiers' return.

Churches remained active during the war. Chaplains in Fort Riley have been welcoming home soldiers upon their return and conducting many services.

Chapels were open all day long for Catholic meditation during the Desert Storm operation. There were also masses held five days a week for Catholics and Protestants.

Marion Pember, senior chaplain at Fort Riley, said the issue of the servicemen was the subject of special prayer services. He also said the chaplains were actively involved in working with family members and spouses of military members.

Manhattan churches also participated. The First Lutheran Church Elca, 930 Poyntz, had a prayer service every noon for about two months after the war began and had support groups for military families.

The Rev. Dave Beese said a picnic is planned for Father's Day to welcome home the soldiers of their con-gregation. Seventeen people from the First Lutheran Church are still

"We posted the names of all the Kansas soldiers in action," Sister Rose Walters said, "and we name about 45 of them every prayer service."

Area churches are pleased the casualty rate was low, and the war was over relatively quickly.

"I'm happy that the fatalities were at a minimum," Walters said. "I didn't approve of the way we went in and did it, but I was pleased it was a short duration and the casualties were limited."

Beese said, "We were hoping it would never have started. Once the troops were there, they got in and got out and we're pleased they're com-

Pember was also pleased with the war's results and said he thought it was part of the Army's job to be in Saudi Arabia.

"We're in the Army to do a job, and that job entitles deployment,' Pember said. "We can be nothing but pleased with the low number of Boocardi recently returned due to an injury after he fell from a tank. Boocardi suffered a concussion and was paralyzed for three days.

He attempted to return to the front line wearing a neck brace, but was quickly sent back to the hospital, and then home, because he was unable to put on his chemical warfare gear.

When asked about his friends remaining in the gulf, Boocardi spoke of his concern about a close friend who is still there.

"My best friend is like a brother figure to me and keeps me out of trouble," he said. "He is a close friend of my wife's parents, and I'm really worried about him."

Boocardi has pictures to remind him of the time he spent in the gulf. One particular photo is of a few refugee children who he said would stand along the road begging for food.

"It was hard to leave knowing that the refugees would not be getting food. It scares me to imagine what will happen to them after this is over, and the soldiers have all gone home," Boocardi said. He said a special bond is formed among the soldiers. The bond is necessary to keep spirits up and to handle what they are going through.

"I can't describe it, but the bond is important. It was a totally different feeling when I had to leave my friends," Boocardi said. "It hurts us all when that bond is broken.'

Donald Semple, resident of Wamego, was sent home for a different reason. He was originally assigned to go to a sergeant major academy in Fort Bliss, Texas, but he volunteered to go over to the gulf.

The date for his school was moved back to July, so when the war ended, Semple was sent back home to prepare for his school.

Semple describes his relationship with the other soldiers as being like a second family.

"I really miss them," Semple said. "A support group made up of spouses of married soldiers and friends of single soldiers is planning a reunion when they are all back.

Return raises school doubts

Soldiers confront admission dilemma | Students try to complete fall semester

LISA NOLL

Collegian Reporter

Now that soldiers are returning from the gulf, many face the dilemma of what to do about school and where they stand.

Some returning soldiers may encounter problems with financial aid and admittance back into the University.

Wendy Wilborn, assistant director of undergraduate admission, said K-State has not seen any problems so far with admissions because most of the soldiers who attended the University left before the spring semester

"If they were enrolled and had to withdraw, they are considered a re-turning student," Wilborn said.

She said if the student left in August, he or she will need to reapply because they have sat out an entire semester.

"Basically, we just need to reactivate their file," Wilborn said.

Wilborn said when the soldiers were called up for the war they were told by the administration to withdraw from their classes or take incompletes.

Those students who took incompletes need to work with their professors, once they get back, to make up the classes, Wilborn said.

Another problem returning soldiers may face concerns student financial assistance.

Lorene Dahm, veteran's coordinator, said the University and departments are understanding and are caring for the returning soldiers.

Dahm said that in the area of financial aid there have been no hardships for the soldiers.

"It is a case-by-case situation, and we have to work with each individual," Dahm said. "There are a number who have come back and are reenrolling. They can pick up where they left off."

There may be some problems for soldiers who have Stafford loans because of the six-month grace period.

"If the individual used the loan prior to the gulf conflict, when they get back in school the loans are deferred and are in immediate repayment," Dahm said.

With the outbreak of the war in the gulf, many students who were sent overseas to fight were unable to complete either the fall or spring semester of classes.

"I didn't get to take my last two finals in the fall semester," said Delton Brun, senior in hotel and restaurant management. "The teachers just gave me my grade up to that point with the benefit of the doubt that was how I would do on the final."

Kevin Miller, senior in physical science, said he didn't have any trouble with the fall semester because he didn't leave the United States until

"Rumors were started in September that our unit would be activated, but we didn't know when," he said. "I just went over to talk to my dean and he said he'd help me out if I had any problems because he went through the same thing during World War II.'

Brun said he knew on Aug. 2 that he would have to leave. He just didn't Arabia.'

He had already enrolled in classes for the spring semester, with only six hours left before graduation. He had also signed a new lease for an apartment for the next year.

"I got out of my lease by the Sol-dier and Sailor Relief Act," he said. This also drops loans and credit cards to a 6-percent interest rate, which is nice.'

Right now, Brun is still on active duty at Forbes Field and has duties there this summer. He said he will be gone for a month and won't be able to take summer school.

"I'm going to try to take three hours next fall at K-State and a correspondence class through the University of Kansas in the spring," Brun said. "I think it will probably end up taking me a year to finish these six hours, but I'm not mad about going over and spending time in Saudi

A long-awaited phone call was greeted with relief about two weeks ago.

Nadeem Kafity, sophomore in architecture, hadn't heard from his family in Kuwait since November. Then he received a letter from them that was followed shortly by the phone call.

"I was amazed when they called," Kafity said. "They woke me up Friday morning.

She said part of the problem is the inconsistent attack upon the basic infrastructure of Iraq during the air

While the United States and its allies claimed to be attacking only military targets during 80,000 air sorties, the coalition left intact a military structure able to inflict harm on the civilian population, Shields said.

Among the targets bombed, she said, were electrical turbines, water dumping stations and even a hospital.

Yet with the presence of TV crews and the impact on Turkey of the Kurds fleeing across its border, Bush chose to commit American troops, in association with British and French forces to setting up an enclave area in northern Iraq, deepening the American involvement in a conflict many Americans believe to be over.

Area students deal with realities of war

Grade schools keep things routine

PAULA BERGLUND Collegian Reporter

Maintaining a normal routine was a goal for many grade schools during the war in the gulf. Some schools in the Manhattan area had faculty who attended meetings with counselors at Fort Riley. Faculty learned how to help students cope with the crisis in the

The meetings also gave information on activities occurring in the gulf. This allowed teachers to prepare for events before they occurred, said Teresa Northern, Eugene Field School principal.

Bluemont School formed support groups at each grade level. The groups met once a week with a social worker, said Henrietta Bock, Bluemont principal. Now that most of the students' parents are coming home, the group meets once every

The groups participated in activities that included studying maps, writing letters and drawing pictures. These activities were used to promote discussion, Bock said.

The Eisenhower Elementary School opened its support group to anyone who had a significant other in the gulf, said Jan Fitzgerald, social worker.

Teachers at the schools worked to clarify information, educate students on world events and much more, Fitzgerald said.

Students at Bluemont lined the schoolyard fences with yellow bows made of ribbon donated by Bluemont Parent-Teacher Organization. The bows were not made for specific soldiers, Bock said.

A banner was made and signed by students at Bluemont, Bock said. It was then sent to Topeka for a cantina held before the soldiers deployed.

Eugene Field is making preparations for homecomings.

"We are trying to prepare students with problem-solving skills," Northern said.

At Eugene Field, the support groups are still active. Few students have parents home from the gulf.

At Eisenhower, students are preparing for homecomings with role play, Fitzgerald said. This is to help students understand how the person coming home feels.

Eugene Field is planning a celebration for the homecoming, as well as recognition in its weekly newsletter, Northern said.

"The groups talk about how to deal with problems that occur," Willey said. "We try to stay away from rumors.'

The high school support groups were conducted by the school counselors.

Manhattan High developed other activities to deal with the war in the gulf, Zoerink said.

Students Supporting Soldiers was formed during the war. Many students became involved in this group, she said.

Peer helpers became active during the crisis. These were students trained to help other students, Zoerink said. When the war in the gulf developed, these students expanded their skills to help students dealing with war-related problems.

After the war, Manhattan High hosted a "Lunch and Learn." Anyone interested was invited to attend a lecture given during the three open lunches. A military officer shared his experience in the gulf with those who attended.

Now that the war is over and troops are returning home, counselors will deal with problems on a one-to-one manner, Zoerink and Willey said.

Students will also continue to receive support from each other, Zoerink said.

Military wives pull together

KIMBERLY KOHLS

Staff Reporter

Caring and sharing is what Manhattan Military Wives is all about. Being military wives, some of the women in the group have experienced long separations from their husbands. Those with more experience dealing with separation from a spouse often help others cope.

"I think that everyone has something to offer, whether it be giving encouragement, leading programs or helping babysit," said Angie Fryer, coordinator. "Many life-long friendships have been made through this group.

"We've experienced some real tragedies, and everyone has rallied together to help each other," she said. "Everyone's always ready to help."

The group meets weekly on Wednesday afternoons. During the meetings, programs on topics - ranging from cooking and crafts to singleparenting - are given.

The group, which orginated in 1967, is sponsored by the Presbytery of Northern Kansas and two local Presbyterian churches.

Since January, the number of wives attending the meetings has increased slightly, Fryer said. Pre-sently, about 35 wives attend the meetings.

This year, the group had a mother of a soldier join.

"She had to come to take care of her grandkids while her son was away," Fryer said. "It's added a different twist to the group.

There have also been some new babies born," Fryer said. "Everyone does anything that they can to help the mother.'

Susan Lawson, whose husband is in Saudia Arabia, has been with the group about a year and has grown with the group, Fryer said. Lawson is the mother of five children, ranging in age from one to 16.

One of the non-military things about the group is there is no rank among the wives, Fryer said.

Most of the women in the group still have husbands in Saudia Arabia, and only about five of the husbands have came home. Many of the wives are expecting their spouses to be home by about May 20, Fryer said.

The group is active in Manhattan Cares and is working together on homecoming activities for the

Senate debates tax proposal

CHRISSY VENDEL

Staff Reporter

The tax or axe debate is progressing in Topeka as the wrap-up session winds down.

Tuesday, the Senate Tax Committee sent a bill to the Senate floor that would raise about $122 million. Also, the House Appropriations Committee passed a bill to cut $190 million if a tax package is not passed.

Rep. Marvin Smith, R-Topeka, said the Senate Tax Committee's bill is very similar to the one killed in the Senate Friday after having been approved earlier in the House.

"It's really hard to keep track of things going on in Topeka," he said. Both bills should be debated on the floors of the respective houses sometime today.

This means the House and the Senate have both tax-increase and budget-cutting bills that have been or will be on the floor. The budget cuts have been to prepared for lack of a tax increase.

With no tax package in sight, Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said the House Appropriations Committee cut $14.5 million from the Kansas Board of Regents budget as part of the $190 million it was forced to cut from the previously approved state budget.

The $14.5 million translates into no increases for enrollment adjustment, graduate teaching fee waivers, student salaries, other operating expenses and shrinkage.

'No agency was spared," she said. "It looks terrible for the regents. I tried everything I could to restore the regents' budget.'

Other budget cuts include at least $8 million from Social and Rehabilitation Services and $117 million from the Department of Education.

Hochhauser said subcommittees worked on separate budgets, and then all of the decisions were listed and discussed by the full Appropriations Committee.

The next step was to translate the contents of the list into a bill, so it may be debated by the full House.

"There is a lot of technical writing involved," Hochhauser said. "It will take six or eight hours to draft the bill because original budgets that have already passed must be included."

She said the debate of the bill on the floor of the House is predicted to be long and arduous.

Debate team to meet President Bush at White House

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

The national champion K-State debate team is scheduled to meet with President Bush at a White House reception May 9.

Charles Reagan, executive assistant to President Jon Wefald, said he received word from the White House Monday afternoon.

"Sen. Kassabaum's, R-Kan., of-from the White House. It finally came yesterday afternoon," Reagan said. "Since then, I've been trying to arrange travel plans for the trip."

The plans include the 14-member debate team, coach Susan Stanfield, graduate student assistant coaches, Department of Speech Head Harold Nichols, President Jon Wefald, Provost James Coffman, Vice President for Institutional Advancement Bob Krause, Interim Arts and Sciences fice called and said to expect a call Dean Marvin Kaiser and himself, Reagan said.

The group will leave Manhattan the morning of May 8 and return the afternoon of May 10.

Wefald's office had consulted with Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Kassabaum's offices trying to set-up the meeting. Both senators were receptive to the idea and contacted the White House about the visit.

"We thought it would be a great idea for the 'Education President' to meet the national champion debate

At 10:30 Tuesday morning, Riley County police arrested David McIntyre, senior in electrical engineering and former student body president candidate, for misdemeanor theft. McIntyre was released on a $500 bond. McIntyre said he was guilty of stealing a Pepsi machine from the Pepsi Cola Bottling Co. at 221 Colorado. He said he and a friend, who he met at Snookie's in Aggieville, took the machine Sunday at about 3

The former engineering senator was impeached last semester for allegedly using his position on the Athletic Ticket Sales Committee to improve his position in the basketball ticket line during the campout. A tribunal later exonerated him of the charges

Sgt. K.W. Padgett of the RCPD said an investigation is in progress to identify the other person McIntyre said he didn't know the name of the person who helped him. "Well, I know his first name, but I wouldn't tell you his name if I knew it," he said.

Riley County police confiscated the Pepsi vending machine from McIntyre's Marlatt Hall room. He is the second floor staff assistant at Marlatt.

The vending machine was returned to Pepsi Cola Tuesday McIntyre said he was going to fix up the Pepsi machine and put it in the apartment he plans to live in this summer.

"A friend and I didn't think it was a big deal," he said. "The machine is only worth about $40."

Tommy McNeese, service manager of Pepsi, said the particular vending machine McIntyre took, however, was worth about $175. McNeese said Pepsi has had people take vending machines from other locations in Manhattan, but this is the first time someone has taken a machine from behind the company building. Taking the vending machine was not a wise choice, McIntyre said, and by the time he is finished paying court costs he could have bought a nicer one.

"If you look back on something like that, you can say it's a stupid thing to do," he said. "I told them I took it, so I'll take the punishment."

Padgett said McIntyre will be arraigned at 1 p.m. May 6 in the Riley County Courthouse.

South African sactions to remain

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Bush administration will not lift economic sanctions against South Africa until the white-ruled government meets all conditions spelled out in a 1986 law, a State Department official said.

Herman Cohen, the assistant secretary of State, said Tuesday the South African government still falls short on two of five conditions for ending the sanctions — the release of political prisoners and all detainees held without trial, and repeal of a law restricting residency in areas by race.

Henson, Disney agree to settlement

NEW YORK (AP) - Kermit the Frog and his cohorts will be goofing around at Disney World with their owner's blessing this summer under an agreement between the producers of some of the world's most recognized animated characters.

The amicable settlement on Tuesday ends a bitter dispute between Muppet owner Henson Associates Inc. and Mickey Mouse producer Walt Disney Co. that began when merger talks fell apart

The two also agreed to dismiss federal lawsuits they had filed against each other. The case was due to go to court May 13.

Case turned over to local police

INDEPENDENCE, Mo. (AP) - A special squad of investigators turned over its probe of the killing and mutilation of 13-yearold Beverlie Tracy to local authorities Tuesday after pursuing the case as far as it could.

The investigation will now be headed by police in Grain Valley, where Beverlie lived and was last seen 11 days before her legless body was pulled from the Missouri River on April 15. She had been shot once in the chest and her legs were amputated at the Meanwhile, police released a sketch Tuesday of a man seen talking with Beverlie on April 4 in Grain Valley. The man, believed to be the last person seen speaking with the girl, had been described last week by one of about 100 people interviewed by the Metro Squad at a Grain Valley roadblock last week.

At least 200 leads were checked by the Metro Squad during its 10 days of work on the case, said police Sgt. Al Hainen.

Big Red One return begins tonight

The return of the Big Red One begins tonight. An advance party of about 370 soldiers from various division units are scheduled to arrive at Forbes Field in Topeka tonight around 8:30. The troops will then be bussed to Marshall Army Airfield for a short welcoming ceremony at 10:30.

Thursday, 375 more 1st Infantry Division troops will return to Fort Riley at about the same time. The soldiers returning tonight are members of Headquarters and Headquarters Company, 1st Infantry Division; 1st Military Police Company; 1st Personnel Services Company; 121st Signal Battalion; 2nd Battalion, 3rd Air Defense Artillery; 1st Engineer Battalion; 101st Military Intelligence Battalion; and Division Field Artillery.

This will bring the number of 1st Division troops that have returned to 1,600.

OFFUTT AIR FORCE BASE, Neb. (AP) - The Strategic Air Command will use $1.2 million in emergency funds for cleanup and repair of tomado damage that likely topped several million dollars at McConnell Air Force Base outside Wichita.

The command said Monday that the total for repairs at the B-1B bomber base from Friday's tornado probably will require a special appropriation by Congress.

"We're still going to determine the cost," said Col. Philip Stowell, an assistant deputy chief of staff for engineering and services at SAC's Offutt Air Force Base headquarters. "We'll work the funding back through Congress because of the funding levels

Exact location of train yet unkown

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) - A Union Pacific Railroad train carrying a load of contaminated soil destined for a Utah dump passed through a portion of eastern Oklahoma before leaving the state, a state Corporation Commission official said Tuesday.

Union Pacific and United States Pollution Control Inc. in Houston wouldn't disclose the location of the train Tuesday. But Bill Munger, manager of railroads for the state Corporation Commission, said he had been told the train moved out of Oklahoma into Parsons Monday night.

Neither the train's entry into nor route through Kansas could be confirmed. The railroad division of the Kansas Corporation Commission had no information about the train, a spokesman said.

Essential Edge to target faculty, staff with projects

MIKE VENSO

Collegian Reporter

The $100-million Essential Edge Campaign has two projects left before it concludes in 1993.

A campus campaign planned for next fall will target faculty, staff and students for contributions. In addition to the $100-million goal, there is a $25-million goal for deferred gifts.

President Jon Wefald said he is confident the campus campaign will be a success.

"We're going after faculty, staff and students. They can contribute mightily to the success of the Essential Edge Campaign by making a contribution themselves," Wefald said. "They can designate money to anything they want. Most will likely donate to their department or their college.

"We understand that students don't have enormous sums of money to invest in a campaign for the whole University," Wefald said. "But I think they will find ways to make their contributions.

Wefald said he is also confident the faculty, despite average salaries that are in jeopardy, will also

"We hope to get a very high response from the faculty because it's a way to help themselves," Wefald said.

"If the Legislature supported year three of the Margin of Excellence, it would be much easier to get the faculty and staff to contribute," Wefald said. "If we end up with zero or a reduction, it makes our job that much tougher."

Mark Moore, Essential Edge Campaign director, said he sees the campus campaign as a catalyst for further contributions to the campaign.

"I feel it would send positive signals to our alumni when they see the University family contribute to the campaign," Moore said. "We've had a large number of faculty express support for it.

"We're planning on having a salary deduction system where people can donate by deduction from their payroll."

Rusty Andrews, Essential Edge associate director, said the technical arrangements have already been made for a payroll deduction

"In cooperation with KU, we promoted and passed in the Legislature a payroll deduction bill enabling state employees to deduct campaign contributions directly from their paychecks," Andrews

Student Body President Todd Heitschmidt said he doesn't think raising a lot of money on campus will be possible.

"You're dealing with entirely different groups of people," Heitschmidt said. "We're not alumni, and we have low incomes.'

Besides the $100-million campaign, an effort has been made to acquire $25 million in gifts that will mature later than the end of the campaign.

"The total Essential Edge Campaign challenge is to raise $100 million cash and $25 million deferred," Wefald said. "The total campaign is $125 million; $72 million has already been raised in cash and at least $13 to $14 million of the deferred.

"It's a very important part of the campaign, because some people would prefer to work that way," he

The deferred campaign was created to avoid misconceptions about the amount of money actually raised in the campaign.

The campaign is going to return in the future, and the gifts we're working on today might not come out until 1994 or 1995," Moore said. "It's not just for the immediate future, but the total future."

K-State leads nation in Truman Scholars

Latest recipient hopes to do public service

ALISA DIETZ

Collegian Reporter

K-State is leading public universities in the nation in numbers of Truman scholars.

Jean Sonnenfield, junior in biology and pre-veterinary medicine, is K-State's latest Truman scholar. The Omaha, Neb., native competed in the Nebraska Truman scholarship competition.

There were 35 students from Nebraska who were eligible for the scholarship.

Sonnenfield filled out an application and went through interviews with the eight-member K-State Truman selection committee.

One finalist was chosen from each college. Sonnenfield was selected to interview at the national level in Washington, D.C., Monday.

Sonnenfield said to be eligible for this scholarship, she had to show commitment to a career in public service and demonstrate good leader-

She is also the vice president of the national American Pre-Veterinary Medical Association.

Sonnenfield served as the student chairwoman of the K-State blood drive; was a member of the Arts and Sciences Council and was vice president of the College of Arts and Sciences Ambassadors. She is active in the K-State Players drama group and is a member of Kappa Alpha Theta

She is a member of numerous honoraries, including Golden Key National Honor Society. In the Manhattan community, she has worked with the Big Brothers/Big Sisters and Special Olympics.

Sonnenfield said she would like to work in a federal agency someday.

"There are numerous possibilities people don't realize in public service," she said.

K-State has had 16 Truman winners and one alternate since 1980. Truman scholarships provide about $30,000 for up to four years of study leading to a career in public service, said Nancy Twiss, scholar adviser and assistant to the provost.

Sonnenfield is using her scholarship to attend K-State's College of Veterinary Medicine as a graduate student. She will also attend a leadership skills school this summer.

Students build environmentally, ecologically safe doghouses

CANDY MCNICKLE

Collegian Reporter

They took some empty beer bottles, a pile of old stone, driftwood and dirt, and they built a doghouse.

Design students in LaBarbara Wigfall and Robert Bullock's landscape architecture classes entered a contest sponsored by the Association of Collegiate Schools of Architecture for first- and third-year design

The guidelines of the contest require the students to design an environmentally and ecologically conscious doghouse suitable to the needs of a dog. The doghouse should be adaptable to any geographical sight and designed for that area's climate.

Materials used for the construction of the doghouse are anything recyclable or natural the students want, but the cost cannot exceed $6. "My students are using wood, stone and donated tires. We even have a house being built for a 100-pound English sheep dog," said Bullock, assistant professor of interior architecture.

Each design group has to draw up plans for the house and organize a presentation to include documentation of the process and proof the dog actually used the house in different weather types. The students look at the dog as a client. They have to measure the dog and study the dog's habits," said Wigfall, assistant professor of landscape architecture. Cam, a dog owned by architecture professor Gene Ernst, is the subject for a house being built by Wigfall's "Cam likes to lie on the porch where she can see the park and also know that Gene is there if she needs him. She also considers the basement to be her domain, so the students are designing a house to fit these needs," Wigfall said.

As a result of Cam's needs, the students have begun construction of a bi-level doghouse. There will be a basement made with cinder blocks and insulated with an air pocket created by the beer bottles. Dirt is being mounded on the top to form a mound, or "burm," so grass and plants can grow on top.

A gable made of driftwood and held together with rope and knots will be constructed on top of the mound to form a porch.

Students said they hope the plants from the base will also grow on top of the gable for shade and a more porchlike effect. The house has been placed near some trees to provide more shade and give Cam a good view of the park and Gene's house.

The students' presentations are due May 1 and judging will be May 24. Cash prizes will be awarded to the top three, along with numerous honorable mentions.

Chess game over Carter's role a stalemate

t the coffee house the other day, I overheard the conversation of a couple of guys who were playing chess. The place was pretty busy and, finding no table, the two had decided to sit in chairs facing each other with the chessboard balanced between them on their knees. They were several moves into the game before I heard them speak.

"Did you hear President Carter give the Landon Lecture last week, Roger?" one of them, who was shaped like a pop bottle, asked the other.

"Former President Carter, Gene," the other corrected, "Yes." He was shaped like a medicine ball and wore thick black-rimmed

"Me, too," Gene said. "I was moved." He swayed a little in the chair, then moved one of his pieces on the chessboard between them.

"Well," Roger said and scrutinized the chessboard through his glasses, "Carter seems to know his limits, I'll say that for him."

"What do you mean by that?" Gene asked. Roger had been about to make his move on the board, but he paused with his hand about to take one of the pieces and looked at his opponent instead.

"Only that," Roger said, completing the move and taking one of Gene's pieces from the board. "Carter had his chance to change the world, but now ...'

"I mean, Carter speaks his mind. He's a social critic, I'd say, but not much else." "Critic?" Gene questioned, his voice slightly more passionate. "How can you say so? You heard what he said about the work he does. Jimmy Carter's more of a social crusader than a critic."

"He criticized America's involvement in the war," Roger said.

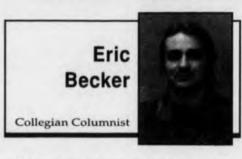

"He's working to change the world. What about everything that the Carter Center

"Carter's way of changing the world," Roger said, "is by criticizing the status quo and inspiring others to work for change.

"Isn't that a crusade?" Gene asked. "No, a crusade is direct action toward a

"Carter does that."

Roger shook his head. "Carter works to inspire others to do that. He points out what is wrong, urging others to take notice, and then hopes others will take direct action to change those things he criticizes.'

I noticed as each player spoke about Carter, he motioned to the chessboard, as if the man was standing right there between them.

"I don't agree," Gene said, crossing his

"That's because you don't understand," Roger criticized.

"I understand that President Carter -- " "Former President Carter."

"- that former President Carter, and his wife, too, works through the Carter Center to improve world conditions. Like his research on overpopulation."

'Carter doesn't do that research," Roger "Carter says that overpopulation is a problem and others do that research. When Carter criticizes, someone at the Carter Cen-

Roger leaned back in the chair, satisfied with his own argument. There was something final in the way he explained, and for a moment it looked as if he might try to return to the chess game. But I could see the crusade of Gene was not yet complete. "Don't you believe," Gene asked, "that Carter is directly involved in the work at the Carter Center?'

"It is the job of the critic to criticize," Roger said. "I said Carter knows his limitations; well, that is one of his limitations. Carter doesn't need to work directly in the reforms he advocates; his advocation is enough."

"Well," Gene tried, "isn't that direct involvement?"

"Not in the same sense that a crusade would be.'

They sat silently for a moment, their eyes absently on the chessboard, before Gene tried

"President — former President Carter has a pretty positive attitude for a critic. Isn't it more suited to a crusader?"

"Not necessarily," Roger went on. "It's not necessarily a matter of attitude that makes a man a critic; it's more a matter of method. Carter's method is through his speech. He talks, and others take it from there.' "Carter's not on the lecture circuit," Gene reminded.

"Well, the man's got to talk, am I right? You don't think the man sits at the breakfast table without saying a word to his wife, do

"Can't a crusader talk?" Gene asked. "Wouldn't a crusader talk to his wife at the breakfast table?"

"It's not the same thing," Roger said. "It's almost as if a critic and a crusader talk in different languages. They don't communicate in the same ways.'

"Not even with their wives?"

"No, not even with their wives." "I still say Carter's a crusader!" Gene insisted, accenting the word "crusader" by raising a fist and brining it down hard on his leg. The chessboard on his knees shook precariously with the blow.

"Carter's a critic!" Roger said, his own fist pounding. The chessboard bounced again.

hen the two of them sat facing each other, silent and at a stalemate, with only the chessboard between them, balanced on their knees, on which a game could still be won.

ATF Proposed U.S. tactical fighter too costly for nation's future

It is time for America to stop preparing for war and resolve a few of the many domestic problems plaguing the

The U.S. Air Force, planning for air superiority in the 21st century, is pushing to purchase 648 YF-22 Lightnings - the vaunted Advanced Tactical Fighter.

The ATFs are expected to cost $93 billion over a span of 24 years. If there are any problems with the aircraft, we can expect the price tag on each plane to double or triple.

Our B-2 Stealth Bomber is a prime example of ballooning price tags, rising 340 percent, from $250 million per plane to $850 million per plane in fiscal year 1992.

Where will the U.S. military find the money to pay for these cost-prohibitive aircraft, especially when their budget is being decreased every year in the foreseeable future?

Without installing new taxes, which will probably not occur, we can expect decreases in domestic spending to cover the aircrafts' cost. If funding for the aircraft can be found in the monstrous federal budget, and survive the U.S. Congress, we will undoubtedly have the best tactical fighter in the world for many decades.

The question is, do we really need it? The answer is no.

We can't expect any hostile enemies, who are willing to spend billions of dollars on similar equipment, to emerge. Therefore, we cannot justify the tremendous cost of this aircraft.

The U.S. military should seriously reconsider this contract and apply some of their wondrous technological expertise to our existing, and still formidable fighters, the F-14, F-15, F-16 and F-18.

Send a message

Again this week, our minds return to a blatant display of prejudice that occurred 22 months ago. Of course I'm referring to the 'Bushwacker's incident." I had the dubious honor of being there the night of the incident and trying to work with Don Ramey and Kriftewirth, who were then the owner and manager of the bar.

I can honestly say that I was even more disappointed by their behavior in the following months than I was that night. They were repeatedly inconsiderate, rude and disrespectful to the Puerto Rican students trying to negotiate with them

Unfortunately, this is just one incident representative of attitudes that still linger, and one court case won't change the minds of individuals still fostering these beliefs.

This hearing does, however, provide a valuable opportunity. It gives the students at K-State and the community of Manhattan the chance to support the Puerto Rican students and the rest of the minority community, while at the same time sending a strong message that discrimination will not be tolerated in

"go ahead" to other prejudiced individuals and groups.

It is too late to undo the hurt and damage caused by the owner and manager of Bushwacker's, but it is the perfect opportunity to discourage its repetition.

Open letter questions stance

This is an open letter to John Fairman, assistant vice president of institutional advancement.

Regarding your response to the question about the sale of pornography in the K-State Union Bookstore, I must say I agree. You say it is important to consider the marketplace and its purpose when thinking about the

The "marketplace" you mention is really nothing more than the economic security of the white male power elite. The purpose of the market is to keep the stranglehold that such fellows have on the wealth firmly in place, so that few of the rest of us can ever really become economically independent of them. (There seem to be many of these fellows here at K-State. They often wear the same style of clothing and are seen walking from to and from the same meetings between the same buildings in the same groups of two or more.)

But thought of another way, the issue of pornography on campus is much less complex. Pomography is about the objectification and harm of women for the gratification of men's desires to dominate and create hurt in the name of sexuality. The marketplace in this case is men, both men who consume pornography and men who benefit by its presence in our community. Its purpose is to ensure that men are constantly reminded of their right, power and duty to dominate and hurt women, and that women are continually and perpetually relegated to living in a system of sexual terrorism and fear. Pornography, my Manhattan. Failure to do so would give a tacit dear colleague, is all about (to use your words) the "proper display and handling" of women by a male-oriented culture. It is not a joke. It is not benign. And it hurts.

I am ashamed that a University official would take such a cavalier stance about this issue. Is this the message K-State wants to officially give women students here? Is this how we can best encourage incoming women students, their parents and loved ones to become a part of our University community? Is this "marketplace" or its "purpose" really the basis of our striving for excellence here at K-State? Are the "marketplace" and its "purpose" really what K-State is all about?

Good job, Senate

On behalf of the International Coordinating Council and the 18 international groups it represents, I would like to thank Student Senate and especially the Finance Committee for a job well done.

Being a council representing 1,200 students, budget allocation time is always very difficult for us. But this year we found the Finance Committee very helpful and committed to their job.

In particular, Tricia Thornton and Scott Truhlar met with us several times and made sure they understood our requests and the way our organization functions. Our Senate liaisons, Katrina Goering, Tim Rice and Kuppasamy Ravindran, did an excellent job preparing and presenting amendments to the recommendations of the Finance Committee and argued eloquently on our behalf. A special thanks to Camille Rohleder, Todd Heitschmidt and several others for their speeches supporting us. All in all, there is a fine group of people in Student Senate this year. As representatives for international students, we sensed a true commitment to diversity among the senators and an acceptance we have rarely felt before. Thank you.

Park Place will charge students for use of shuttle

Park Place Apartments are going to start charging students to use the bus shuttle service next Shelly Reves, manager of Park Place, said it is just getting too expensive to offer it as a free service.

"We pay the bus driver, maintenance, gas and insurance. People just don't realize how expensive it is," she said.

Park Place will charge $75 for the fall and spring semester. Students have the option to pay $10 monthly - excluding August, December, January and May, which will be $5 for the month.

Bob Tyson, who is the bus driver for Park Place, began the shuttle three years ago. He said he started out doing it as a favor to a friend for a couple of months in the winter, but ended up enjoying it so much he stayed with it.

"I really enjoy being around the students and watching them grow into their University over the years," Tyson said.

Tyson said the issue of charging students for the shuttle service has been brewing for about a year and a half.

"Shelly and I have been able to forestall this until now," he said. Tyson said the situation is not that bad for new residents, but "The free shuttle is a very positive tool for Park Place," Tyson said. "You need positive things to counterbalance the negative. I feel they could have cut corners some other ways without directly affecting the students who live

Greg Harkrader, sophomore in mechanical engineering who uses the service, said, "I feel it will distract from attracting residents; it is a good selling point to parents."

Harkrader said he relies on the bus a great deal in the winter and it was the main reason he signed a lease at Park Place. He also said he does not know if he will be resigning his lease for next year.

"I will have to put some thinking into it," he said.

Tyson said in cases of breakdowns, Park Place would probably refund the students the average daily charge, which would be about 50 cents.

Brittany Ridge Town Homes have also provided a free shuttle service this year. Dan Weir, manager of the complex, said they may be charging next year, but they are trying to avoid it.

Reves said she thinks $75 is not too much to ask because of the benefits the shuttle service provides for the students. The shuttle runs from 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, and students using it do not have to deal with the daily hassle of finding a parking been one or two complaints, and place on campus.

Folk singer best at performing

Gorka one of foremost new folk music artists, but latest album doesn't show it

REBECCA SACK Collegian Reviewer

John Gorka's new album, "Jack's Crows," has less of his awardwinning incite than previous recordings

Gorka is one of the best representatives of new folk music and has been recognized as such because of his previous work. But Gorka is essentially a performer, and as a folksinger, his work on "Jack's Crows" is a paltry example of the music he is capable of producing.

Bassist Michael Manring, drummer Brian MacLeod and the Turtle Island String Quartet all make their contributions to Gorka's latest album, but without saving the essenguitar accompanies most of the songs whose lyrics fail at salvaging the rehashed bits of folk melody in the Gorka's profundity stops just short of itself, creating a strangely ironic poetry in which his commentary on everyday life is nothing more. This is disappointing. We learn nothing from Gorka, who insists on repeating strangely shallow lines like, "There's houses in the fields," and "My new neighborhood/ I live here," in songs of the same names.

Gorka's observations of love, humanity, technology, history and home are simple enough to teeter on the edge of a greatness therein, but it is impossible to escape the unimtially dull work. Gorka's acoustic pressed feeling that is the most these songs can offer.

The best example of Gorka's failed attempt at being the people's poet is in the song, "Good." Gorka notes the song is, "A brief song about the things I'm good at." So? I kept wishing he would give me a reason to care, or something to understand from his experience. Even without these types of conclusions Gorka's imagery fails and certainly the music propped up behind these sophomoric lyrics is less than entertaining.

Reviewer says

There is no freshness in either voice drones on with that inherent quality of sadness. He has a certain quirky smile, which seems to suggest he knows more than he says. But like most silent people, this ain't necesarily so. Gorka proves this on the "Jack's Crows" album.

Perhaps I shouldn't dismiss the entire work, considering Gorka's past successes. Some of the poetry is interesting when it is not in the context of a song. The music never presents itself this way, however, and would be useless without the words.

In the poetry, Gorka makes easy and optimistic conclusions after stark and disastrous introductions. The album begins with, "Silence, a rare optimistic love song." Gorka seems to be optimistic because it's more fun, but he must include negative observations of life, a certain realism to Gorka's words or his music. His make his thoughts appear poetic.

Fishbone denounces politically correct issues

Since the release of its self-titled debut in 1985, Fishbone has been one of those bands that are virtually impossible to pin down. The group's newest album, "The Reality of my Surroundings," continues and expands that tradition, with mixed

The first album (actually a sixsong EP) fused reggae and ska together with a breakneck pace to create ultra-danceable tunes. "Truth and Soul" in 1988 found the band exploring harder guitar sounds, but also writing some incredible ballads. It was supposed to be the band's radio breakthrough album, but underadventurous programmers conspired to keep the public listening to Tiffany.

common themes. Fishbone denounces the usual politically correct issues of modern society, but with more conviction and fervor than most bands. When vocalist Angelo Moore croons about junkies and power-trip cops in New York, it's known he's singing from experience. "Fight the Youth" is an unusual title for the first track. A closer examination of the lyrics reveal that's not the idea at all. The chorus says, "Fight the youth with poisoned minds."

The song itself is not very exciting. It begins with a weird synthesized voice that says, "We will save you now." Luckily, that is about as corny as the album gets. The song's singalong chorus sounds more like something little kids might chant while jumping rope.

songs interspliced throughout the album that directly attack many aspects of America. This aggressiveness is what sets Fishbone apart from wishy-washy politi-rockers. Thus, the group can be better compared, message-wise, to urban rap. The four "If I Were A ... I'd" mixes were recorded live and hardly last a minute, although the music and lyrics differ slightly with each one.

"Housework" picks up the pace in traditional Fishbone form. It's a highly energetic ska song featuring some scat vocals at the beginning by Moore. Lyrically, it's also much lighter fare than the preceding tracks. There's no preaching on this one.

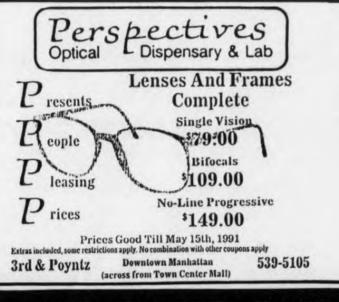

There are some throwaway songs, too. "Asswhippin" is merely the sound of a whip followed by some screaming with a bongo beat in the From here, "The Reality of my Surroundings" slowly gets better. The album wraps up with "Sunless Saturday," the standout song and first single. It encompasses all that is good Fishbone, featuring a catchy vocal with a heavy, crunchy guitar riff underlied by an odd keyboard part. Although the lyrics are somewhat dark, it retains an air of hopefulness with its upbeat acoustic guitar/horn ending.

Overall, "The Reality of my Surroundings" is an album with a lot of radiant bright spots and some obviously dim lows. If a listener has never heard Fishbone, this is a good introduction, although it's not as consistently great as "Truth and Soul."

Wildcat second baseman Van Torian makes the turn on an attempted double play against the Emporia State Hornets Tuesday at Frank Myers Field. The visiting Hornets took a 13-8 win over the Wildcats, who return to action at Frank Myers 7 tonight.

'Cats fall to Emporia State, 13-8

SCOTT PASKE Sports Reporter

K-State coach Mike Clark knew retired. the elements for a disaster were present at Frank Myers Field.

One day after completing a grueling Big Eight Conference series with Nebraska, the Wildcats entered Tuesday's matchup against Emporia ate University with an overworked pitching staff. Add a couple of subpar performances from substitutes placed into the starting lineup, and the disaster was real.

The Hornets, 16th in the current NAIA poll, outslugged the 'Cats 13-8. The game had no bearing on K-State's chances of getting into the Big Eight Tournament, but left both coaches and players bitter.

"This was a bad time to be playing a non-league game," Clark said. "We were basically throwing junior varsity pitchers, and (Emporia State) is too good to be doing that against."

Freshman Brian Hierholzer, 0-1, pitched into the sixth inning in his first career start before control problems forced him out of the game. The righthander struck out six, but hit a pair of batters to help Emporia State take the lead for good. Brian pitched pretty well for his first time out," Clark said. "But we knew we were going to have to play good defense to win. In some spots we did, and in others, we didn't."

K-State's biggest problems came when the Hornets batted with two outs: Emporia State scored 12 of its 13 runs just one out shy of being

"I really can't explain that," Clark said. "You've got to throw the ball over the plate whether there's one out or two outs, and we just didn't do that tonight."

The Hornets took their first lead with two outs in the top of the third inning. First baseman Mike Carter broke a 2-2 deadlock with a three-run shot off Hierholzer that hit Brandeberry Sports Complex behind the right field fence.

K-State fought back in the bottom of the inning with three runs on four hits. Junior Chris Hmielewski, who was 4-for-5, tied the game with a two-run single that scored Craig Wilson and Brian Culp.

Emporia State regained the lead at 6-5 in the fourth on consecutive twoout errors by K-State shortstop Scott McFall and third baseman Brad Rippelmeyer. But K-State tied the game again in the bottom of the frame on a solo home run by designated hitter Craig Wilson.

"Offense wasn't a problem to-night," Clark said. "Eight runs should normally win the game for us. If we did a better job of pitching, we would have won.

Miller gets honor; team signs runner

BILL LANG

On the public relations side of things for the K-State track team, it was all good news Tuesday. The Big Eight Conference announced that Angie Miller was named the league's female trackster-of-the-month, and Coach John Capriotti announced the signing of a junior college All-American.

"I was really surprised by it," said Miller after finding out about her honor Tuesday morning. "This year has been a real disappointment compared to last year. I didn't think I would win much."

The senior from Frankfort owns the Big Eight's top marks in both the discus and the shot put during the 1991 outdoor season. Miller threw at least 160 feet in the discus in all five of her meets during the month of April, including a season-best 170-6 at the prestigious Mt. Sac Relays.

At the KU Relays, Miller finished second with a throw of 168-11, but viewed her effort as a winning one as she finished second to Penny Neer, a former three-time all-Big Ten performer at the University of Michigan, who won the competition with a throw of 199-11.

"I was really having some good practices before that meet, and to lose to one of the top 10 people in the country isn't that bad," Miller

Miller also claimed a win at the Nebraska Invitational, placed third at the Texas Relays and fourth at the Drake Relays.

The three-time All-American also placed fourth in the shot at the Drake Relays and won the event at the Nebraska Invite during the month of April.

Capriotti's announcement was also big. Junior college All-American Tyrone Hunt signed a national letter of intent.

Hunt, a 6-21/2, 180-pounder, from Cuyahoga Community College in Cleveland was tabbed an All-American in the 600-yard dash at the 1989 NJCAA Championships. He owns a personal best of 1:10.5 in the 600 and 46.8 in the 400 and 51.3 in the 400-meter

Finally, members of K-State's women's 4x100-meter relay team have been invited to compete in the Mutual Life Games this Saturday in Kingston, Jamaica. The quartet of Verida Walker, Nikki Green, Markeya Jones and Latricia Joyner is coming off a third-place finish at last weekend's Drake Relays by running the 4x100 in a time of 45.25

Some exercisers stopped in to see exactly what was being played in the gymnasium, and if you would like to find out about the sport of team handball, check into it at the Rec Complex. The players love the game, and many different competitors said the sport is a "blast."

The game is played on a court about the size of a basketball court. Six members of a team play at a time plus a goalie, and teams score by throwing the ball from an area about the distance of a three-point line through a goal similar to a soccer goal.

"It is kind of a combination of soccer and basketball, but you throw the ball instead of kicking it," said John Walker, goalie for Phi Wacka Jacka. "The ball is a little smaller than a volleyball, and it is hard as a rock."

Year adds to rich athletic history at K-State

Sports Reporter

With only five K-State Collegians remaining in the 1990-91 school year, I thought I might give the student body a wrap-up of the year in sports at K-State.

The year, as in many other schools' competitive sports, had its many ups and downs.

The year began with football. Just as in any of the other previous seasons, the K-State football team was predicted to finish in the conference cellar. But second-year Coach Bill Snyder and his players had other things besides losing on their minds.

Perhaps the biggest accomplishment of the football squad was its two conference wins. It had been since 1986 that K-State fans had seen K-State win a Big Eight football game. The 23-17 win over Oklahoma State and the 28-14 win over Iowa State marked large strides for the

In the early season, K-State produced a rarely seen blowout victory, which resulted in the Wildcats to be talked about for bowl contention and led to Snyder being named Big Eight Coach of the Year. He became the first coach to accomplish this at K-State since 1982.

Another successful season was had by the K-State cross country teams under the direction of Coach John Capriotti. The men, under the experience of many returning runners and the addition of two junior college transfers, had their highest finish at the Big Eight Championships in 10 years. They were second only to the No. 1 team in the nation, Iowa State.

The women had to cope with the loss of three important contributing seniors, but accepted the challenge head on. The squad, which boasted not a single senior, nailed down another second-place finish in the conference championships. But the women didn't stop there. They followed with another second-place finish at the District V meet to qualify for the national meet.

The K-State volleyball team hit the season with a load of inexperience, which led to a not-so-overlysuccessful season. But a story developed around senior Valery Roberts, who was a walk-on player, and the season ended with Big Eight honors.

During the off-season for the volleyball team, Coach Scott Nelson resigned to pursue other interests. He had been the coach for 11 years.

The K-State tennis team's year sounds like a repeat of many other teams: the squad was loaded with inexperienced players who had to fill the shoes of four graduating seniors, and had to face a schedule dotted with nationally ranked teams. However, the team will return most of the squad, including No. 1 singles player Michele Riniker — who ran off an impressive first season in Big Eight

During the winter months, basketball came dancing into the heads of all purple-and-white-clad fans, but it was to no avail. The old saying, "Close, but no cigar," pertained well to the 'Cats basketball season, which marked the worst record since the 1982-83 season. Eight of K-State's 15 losses were decided by single digits, including six by five points or Coach Dana Altman took the reins, replacing Lon Kruger. It was Altman's first losing season as a head coach. But he did guide the 'Cats to two wins over Oklahoma, which had not happened since the 1977-78 season.

The Lady Cats basketball season also saw a new coach take over. Susan Yow came to K-State from Drake University, and quickly led the Lady Cats to a promising beginning and a spot atop the Big Eight. The run included a win over nationally ranked Oklahoma State and a victory over Kansas in Lawrence.

But then the problems set in, and led to the collapse of the season.

For the spring sports, I only wish I could remain to cover the finales of baseball, outdoor track, golf and the spring tennis season. Those sports, however, I will have to read about in other papers, and I wish them the best of luck.

That about wraps up the year in sports. There were some rough times and some good times, but all in all, it only added to the rich tradition that K-State boasts.

After last-place Big Eight finishes of 15 consecutive years for the women and 13 straight for the men, the Wildcat squads have nothing to show for this year's effort but one more year added to each streak.

Both squads were next-to-last heading into Tuesday's final 18 holes after battling cold and heavy wind during Monday's opening 36 holes. The men lost an eightstroke lead over Colorado to finish two strokes behind the Buffaloes. The women gave up a onestroke lead to Iowa State in the last round to finish 15 strokes out of wood, Oklahoma State won the men's tournament with 889 strokes on the strength of having all five team members earn all-big Eight honors. The rest of the field's results were Oklahoma (917), Kansas (937), Iowa State (941), Nebraska (955), Missouri (964), Colorado (970) and K-State (972).

On the women's side in Columbia, Mo., Oklahoma won the team title with a stroke total of 943, edging Oklahoma State which finished with 946. The other finishers were Nebraska (975), Kansas (981), Missouri (996), Iowa State (1001) and K-State

The K-State teams entered the Big Eight Championships after having the most successful spring seasons in Wildcat history. Both squads were confident and excited about their chances of ending the streaks as well as finishing toward the top of the pack.

But life has changed in the last five years for the K-State graduate in agricultural engineering.

Recently, Mai flew an F-16 on combat missions in the Persian Gulf

Before returning to Torregon Air Force Base in Spain, Mai stopped to have lunch yesterday with a childhood friend, James Hedstrom, sophomore in agricultural economics.

A captain for the U.S. Air Force, Mai is also an instructor pilot for the to-air, air-to-ground and nuclear weapons," he said. "We were hoping it wouldn't go nuclear."

He first learned about the Air Force as a K-State student Alumni Board member when he showed Air Force officers around campus.

He said he thought flying F-16s would be fun and did not want a typical engineering job. Although he interviewed with the Air Force, he accepted a job for Cessna Aircraft in Hutchinson. The Air Force called before he took the Cessna job.

"They said they would leave a spot open for me (for pilot training school)," he said.

His two-year training period started in officer training in San An-

"I'm fully qualified for flying air- tonio, Texas. Then, he went for three months to undergraduate pilot training in Del Rio, Texas. He was also trained as a fighter lead-in at Holloman Air Force Base.

His initial F-16 training was at MacDill Air Force Base in Tampa, Florida. It lasted about six months.

In December 1987, he was stationed at Torregon Air Force Base, Spain. He remained stationed there until Aug. 29, when his squadron of 25 planes and 35 pilots was called to Doha, Qatar.

About 1,000 support people were there. They were setting up the camp, building bombs, passing out sheets and cooking meals, he said.

"We stayed in a four-star hotel on the Persian Gulf," Mai said. "The food was incredible."

Nine days later, they had 24 hours to pack up and move to tents. They continued training and lived on meals ready to eat (MRE).

"Pilots and a few others eventually moved to small dormitory rooms," he said. "Everyone else was in tents." Once the war started, he said he spent more than 120 hours flying. "About 1303 missions in 32 days, which was about three hours a shot,' he said. "We cranked out a lot."

He dropped bombs on tanks and artillery day after day, he said. A pilot's day began at midnight, he said. Pilots woke up and went to a and the types of bombs they were carrying.

They also gathered intelligence and weather information from the computer.

He led groups of either three or seven planes on missions. As a leader, he discussed each mission's objective. 'We would take off before the light of dawn," he said. He said preparation for flying took the most time. He was on the ground for more than an hour.

"It took time getting the systems up and running," he said. After returning from a two-hour or four-hour flight, he stayed in the plane while ground crews armed the plane and checked for chemical contamination.

He flew for 32 days straight before he asked for a day off. He said many times pilots who were having luck hitting targets were asked to continue

"That day, I ran errands for the squadron commander, so it really wasn't a day off," he said. "After 25 to 35 days, you are harder on the peo-ple you're flying with."

The weather caused at least three flights to be canceled.

'You didn't want to get under the deck because you can't see what's coming," he said. "You have to be conservative."

He said it was important to remember what he did would affect fellow pilots and not just himself.

The training was excellent and made the flying automatic, he said. The main challenge about going to war was the fear of the unknown. "I knew how to fly, and when the first missile came, I learned I defeated it," he said. ■ See MAI, Page 12

K-State wins $145,000 research grant

Environmental concerns boost interest in electrical cars

CANDY MCNICKLE Collegian Reporter

K-State will soon have two electric cars in its motorpool as part of a research grant on the viability of such vehicles.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., announced April 12 that the Department of Energy is awarding K-State a $145,237 research grant for developing electric cars.

Federal funds from the Kansas Electric Utility Research Program will be used to purchase, operate, maintain and collect data on two electric-powered vehicles.

In his press release, Dole said he is pleased K-State was chosen, and the grant proves America is looking to Kansas to help develop 21st-century technology. He said Kansas talent, innovation and know-how are going to be a big part of America's future.

Jim Hague, assistant professor of electrical engineering, said there is new interest in electric cars.

The vehicles were introduced in the 1970s during the gas crisis but were soon forgotten," he said, "Now, with the increasing concern with the environment, these cars are ideal."

K-State's research will focus on two different vehicles: an electric/ hybrid vehicle powered by electricity and a natural gas extender and an allelectric drive vehicle, G-Van.

'The electric-powered vehicle only has a range of up to 60 miles compared to the EHV, which goes about 300 miles," he said.

The electric car will be introduced into K-State's motorpool when the vehicles are purchased, in 90 to 180 days. Data is to be collected and returned to the Department of Energy.

An EHV will also be purchased and loaned to a Kansas or Missouri company. Possible purchase of the vehicles in the future will depend on the interest of the company after this research is complete, Hague said.

Jan VerBrugge, owner of Goetsch-Irvine Motor Company Inc. of Manhattan, said his company will help in the purchase of the vehicles. K-State will be purchasing a 1991 Plymouth mini-van, which is the best van that can be converted to an electric vehicle," he said.

The vehicles were introduced in the 1970s during the gas crisis but were soon forgotten. Now, with the increasing concern with the environment, these cars are -Jim Hague

"Having an alternative energy source on the EHV will be like driving your car with a small electric company with you," he said.

The EHV only uses energy when the gas pedal is pushed as opposed to the continuous burning of fuel of a regular car, which will increase its range and decrease pollution.

Study area list to be given out at registration

ANDREW CAPPS Collegian Reporter

A list of study areas on campus will be distributed to students during the fall 1991 registration.

The list was compiled by the Student Senate Academic Affairs Committee and includes several buildings.

The location of the building, room number, occupancy and the hours the rooms will be open will be included.

Jeff Forkenbrock, chairman for AAC, said there has been a need for a list, and it should be useful to

"Hopefully, this will be helpful to the students," he said. "Students can now look at the list and plan, rather than just hit and

According to the Student Governing Association's constitution, the AAC is concerned with compiling and maintaining general academic information and facts concerning each college and school within the University.

It is also responsible for initiating programs for the general academic welfare and benefit of the student body.

Forkenbrock said entering freshmen will be sent an SGA brochure packet with a welcome letter from the student body president and the study area list.

"A supplement list of the study areas available in resident halls will be mailed to all incoming freshmen," Forkenbrock said.

Suzie Wisdom, SGA secretary, said the information in the brochures is important for both returning and new students and should prove to be beneficial.

"SGA has had many contacts from its constituents that this is a service that is greatly needed," Wisdom said. "We are just meeting the needs of our constituents."

Although AAC has been working on the list for about two weeks, Forkenbrock said he received a petition with 23 signatures asking for a list of available study spaces.

The petition says that because of the lack of information to students about the locations of study areas on campus, AAC should investigate the various study areas

Forkenbrock commended the initiative of the group and said he hopes the information will be helpful.

Sinatra's former lawyer sues Kitty Kelley

By the Associated Press

LOS ANGELES - Frank Sinatra's former lawyer sued author Kitty Kelley Monday, claiming the pop biographer defamed him in her best-selling book "Nancy Reagan: An Unauthorized Biography."

Beverly Hills attorney Milton Rudin seeks unspecified damages from Kelley and publisher Simon & Schuster.

The case was filed in U.S. District Court because Rudin alleged violation of a federal law that deals with misrepresentation of facts in interstate commerce.

Calls placed to Simon & Schuster after business hours Monday went unanswered.

Rudin's secretary said company policy prevented Rudin or anyone at the firm, which was handling the case, from discussing the suit.

Kelley's book lists Rudin as one of hundreds of her sources in the unflattering portrait of the former first lady.

The inquiries included at least one regarding personal meetings between Reagan and Sinatra.

Both Kelley's Sinatra and Nancy Reagan books refer to a romantic relationship between the two. Sinatra has denied it and former President Reagan has issued a statement saying the book is riddled with inaccuracies and falsehoods.

Tokach obtains position

Extension hires livestock expert

BETSY HIDALGO

Collegian Reporter

Mike Tokach is Kansas' new northeast area Extension livestock production specialist.

We look upon this young animal scientist as a rising star in the livestock industry. He was one of the country's top graduate students," said Jack Riley, head of the Department of Animal Science and

Tokach, who just received his Ph.D. in swine nutrition at the University of Minnesota, also recently received a professional organization's highest compliment during the Midwest sectional meeting of the American Society of Animal Science.

He won the graduate student award for the top scientific paper on lysine and energy intake in lactating sows, said Lee Jorgensen, associate professor of Extension Communications.

"Jim Nelssen, K-State Extension swine specialist, made a great impression on my choice to work in Extension," Tokach said. "He encouraged graduate students to work with Kansas producers and showed me how professionally rewarding it could be to help producers set goals and improve profitability in a swine enterprise."

Tokach was raised on a diversified livestock and crop farm near St. Anthony, N.D. His family's livestock enterprises were purebred Angus cattle with 300 mother cows and a 60-sow farrow-to-finish operation. His parents operate about 5,000 acres, including between 1,000 and 1,500 cultivated acres.

"Dad encouraged our family to participate in 4-H and FFA," Tokach

He won the FFA outstanding livestock judge award in high school, Jorgensen said.

Tokach was a 4-H member for 11 years and participated in beef and swine projects. Tokach was on the state 4-H and FFA livestock judging teams, and at North Dakota State University was 4-H ambassador and state FFA vice president.

Tokach met his wife, Lisa, when he was working on his Ph.D. at the University of Minnesota where she was studying to be a veterinarian.

The Tokachs often find themselves talking business at their Abilene home. Lisa Tokach is a veterinarian at the Abilene Animal Hospital, a specialized swine practice.

"When we talk about preventive health care, the focus of veterinary medicine and animal science begins to converge because nutrition is an important aspect of health," Mike Tokach said.

Mike Tokach earned his Ph.D. in the importance of metabolite and metabolic hormones on the reproductive function in lactating sows.

He said he does not have much time for hobbies, but finds recreation in judging county fairs, working with swine producers and listening to questions about his profession.

"Kansas is highly regarded and looked on by other states for leadership in animal science," Mike Tokach said.

He said he was drawn to Kansas because of the state's strong Extension tradition.

"Tokach was also interested in Kansas because he worked on his masters at K-State and liked it," Jorgensen said.

The opposition force travels camouflaged through the brush while moving from its first mission to the second during the Ranger's biannual field training exercise at Fort Riley Saturday.

K-State ROTC Ranger unit spends weekend at Fort Riley for field training excercise

KELLY BERG Campus Editor

While many students donned shorts and went to the park to enjoy dents had an entirely different mission for the day. Instead of shorts, they wore full camouflage gear, and instead of suntan lotion, they wore green camouflage grease paint. K-State's ROTC Ranger unit spent its weekend on a 12-square kilometer portion of Fort Riley's training area for its biannual field training

The weekend training started for the Rangers at 0600 hours (6 a.m.) Saturday, when they met at the Military Science building to make final preparations for their overnight stay

The 23 men and four women busily readied themselves for departure by inspecting their rucksacks (backpacks); camouflaging their skin; and checking out their weapons, meai rations and other necessary equipment.

The original estimated time of departure was 0730 (7:30 a.m.), but the group got a late start because this field-training exercise was a little different from all previous ones this time the unit would be using the Multiple Integrated Laser Engagement System.

The system uses a low-intensity laser transmitter attached to the end of each cadet's M-16 rifle and a laser reflector harness worn by each cadet.

"MILES is the Army's version of laser tag," said SSC Bruce Marvin, military science instructor and cosupervisor for the training exercise.

This is the first time any K-State ROTC has used MILES on a test case," Marvin said. "If the equipment is used right, it'll add a great deal of realism to the field-training."

The system is designed to make an annoying high-pitched noise when a person is shot accurately by one of the weapons.

"Once you hear that annoying buzz, you know you're dead," Marvin said. "No ifs, ands, or buts."

Despite some setbacks while issuing the MILES equipment to the cadets, the unit left for Fort Riley by 0900 hours (9 a.m.).

The Ranger cadets traveled on a bus while the designated opposition force (OPFOR) - the bad guys - traveled in a separate vehicle to be dropped off at an entirely different location and establish a patrol base

The exercise was conducted entirely by the students, although Master Sgt. Vernon Rayburn, Ranger adviser, and Marvin were there to supervise the weekend.

They do it all themselves," Marvin said. "We're the overall supervision and are there to ensure they conduct training safely and properly."

Rayburn and Marvin stayed with the tactical vehicle and were in constant contact by radio with both the Ranger and OPFOR units, and with Fort Riley's range control.

The Rangers' first mission was to find and attack the ORFOR's patrol base by 1400 hours (2:00 p.m.).

pre-determined area, and immediately began establishing a camouflaged patrol base in the shrubbery. This involved setting men up in security positions to watch for the enemy and sending out regular patrols to scout the area for the enemy Ranger unit.

At the same time, the Ranger unit. which was dropped about 1800 meters away - was moving toward the OPFOR unit to attempt their first mission: To conduct a raid on the OPFOR's patrol base.

At about 1230 hours (12:30 p.m.), the OPFOR had dug in its positions

> Because all communication in the field, both at the patrol base and on reconnaissance patrols, was done by hand signals and occasional whispers, there was little to no noise. The only thing hindering the men hiding in the foliage and tall grass from hearing an intruder advance was the buzzing of the large Kansas flies that swarmed around the heads of the crouched, hidden figures.

Health Resource Center opens

MELISSA SMITH

Collegian Reporter

The Health Resource Center at Lafene Health Center provides videos and pamphlets about a variety of different topics such as sunburn, contraceptives, AIDS and fitness.

The grand opening of the center was April 23, but it has been in use since the beginning of the semester, said Cindy Burke, registered nurse and director of health education and promotion.

She said the center has two basic purposes.

The first is to provide additional information for students working on speeches or papers about healthrelated topics.

The center also serves to give students who have recently been diagnosed with a disease a better understanding of that disease, she said.

Reita Currie, registered nurse and health educator, said a goal of the center is to have on-hand informational packets about specific diseases available to patients sent to the center

Currently, students can call and make an appointment to use the center, Burke said, or walk in and check in with one of the health educators.

The center was in the planning stage for about a year, she said, but it was a slow process because of the need to have video equipment and to build up a library of videos and pamphlets.

The room is lined on two sides with cupboards filled with pamphlets and videos, and there are two carrels with televisions, video cassette players and headphones.

It is also used for group meetings, such as for the eating disorder support group, Currie said.

Funding for the equipment, Burke said, came from two sources.

The March of Dimes awarded the center a grant for the machinery, she said, and Conrad Eriksen donated money to Lafene, part of which was used for the center.

It has cost several thousand dollars to equip the room to their specifications, she said.

The center is open any time the health educators are in the office, Currie said, which is usually from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., except when they are making presentations.

She said she encourages students to make use of the information available at the center, whether for a speech, paper or to better understand a disease with which they, or someone they know, has been diagnosed.

Student's family loses house

Forrester's father, brother escape injury from tornado

LORI STAUFFER Staff Reporter

The tornado that struck Andover Friday left at least one K-State student sifting through the debris of what used to be homes for members of his family.

According to Associated Press reports, as many as 200 were injured and 23 persons killed, including 14 in the Wichita suburb of Andover, before the winds subsided.

Paul Forrester, senior in history, got to see firsthand the destructive force of the tornado that hit Andover and demolished the Golden Spur Mobile Home Park. His father and his brother's family had homes in that park. Now, there is nothing

"It looked like a giant landfill," Forrester said. "There was trash laying everywhere."

Forrester said his family was lucky; none of them were injured. He said this was a welcome relief after Friday night's worry.

After weathering a storm in Topeka, Forrester arrived in Manhattan to see a TV news report about the tornadoes.

"I tried to call my brother, Wayne, in Andover first, but the phone lines were busy. So, I called my mom in Hays to find out what happened," he said. "She said my brother lost everything. My dad lost most of his stuff, too."

Forrester said his mother told him despite the property loss, they were all safe. His sister-in-law, Shawnie, and 13-month-old niece, Sydnie, made it to the storm shelter in time. His brother and dad, George, followed the tornado while driving home from work in Wichita.

Early Saturday morning, Forrester went to Andover with his brother, Matt, to help with the cleanup. Unfortunately, the day turned out to be frustrating for all of the mobile home park residents.

"They wouldn't let us in the area until 4 in the afternoon," he said. "They were going through the area with bulldozers trying to find bodies. We just sat around all day waiting at the entrances for them to finally let us in. We just sat and did not stay around to help with the cleanup. Forrester said that instead, she went to work at her hair salon in

"She didn't want to deal with it. It was probably good that she left," he said. "She didn't have to think about it all day.'

Now that the initial shock is gone, most of the families are trying to put their lives back in order.

Forrester said his family is staying with friends in Wichita and will probably look for a new home this week. He said they will also try to replace some of the things they lost.

"They found a lot of clothes and some stuff that was in the shed, like garden tools. All the furniture was destroyed," he said. "Basically, they lost everything but their

Earthquake kills 80 in Soviet Georgia; search continues

By the Associated Press

KUTAISI, U.S.S.R. - Rescuers on Tuesday dug through a mountain village that one official said was wiped off the map, hoping to find survivors among dozens of people buried alive in an earthquake.

Monday's quake in Soviet Georgia killed at least 80 people, injured 500, destroyed 40 schools and six hospitals, and left 80,000 homeless, said Georgian Prime Minister Tengiz

Sigua said after a helicopter tour of the site that he expected the death toll

He flew over the village of Khakhieti, which was destroyed when a mountainside collapsed and buried 40 people alive.
"It was awful," Sigua said in an interview with the Associated Press in Kutaisi, a city about 36 miles west of Khakhieti. "Simply put, it's a nightmare."

This village was wiped off the map," he said.

Rescuers searched collapsed homes and buildings in the towns and villages of north-central Georgia for any survivors.

The injured were being ferried out to hospitals in the mountainous republic, while officials were shipping in busloads of water, food and tents for the homeless.

About 80 percent of the housing was destroyed in the affected area, where about 250,000 people live, Sigua said.

Wednesday was declared a day of mourning in Georgia. Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev sent his condolences to relatives of the victims and he authorized his government to assist the stricken region.

Offers of aid have been received from Israel, France and Japan, Sigua

The American Red Cross in Washington said the League of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies sent an assessment team to Georgia and that the Armenian Red Cross also sent a 27-member rescue team.

The earthquake struck at 12:13 p.m. Monday among sparsely populated villages and towns and measured 7.1 on the Richter scale.

Aftershocks continued throughout Monday and early Tuesday.

Tremors were felt throughout much of the Caucasus Mountains. The area of greatest damage measured about 24 square miles around the epicenter, said Sergei Orefyev of the Institute of Physics and Earth

Also heavily damaged was Dzhava, a mountain town of 11,000 people near the epicenter, as well as nearby Ambrolauri, Oni and Sachkhere.

Sachkhere's railroad station was reported badly damaged, along with two churches in the town and a synagogue in Oni. The newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda reported damage to military airfields in northern Georgia.

In addition to those killed in Khakhieti, 10 died in Dzaha and 200 were injured, the independent Georgian news agency Iberia reported. It said four people were killed and 32 injured in Ambrolauri and about 25 people died in Sachkhere.

News reports said 100 two- and three-story buildings in Dzhava suffered extensive damage, including a department store and a boarding

Lawrence woman says police shot down her son

By the Associated Press

LAWRENCE — The mother of a 22-year-old Native American man shot to death by police in his bedroom testified Tuesday that officers ordered her son to drop a butcher knife he was holding then opened fire

Orene Sevier's testimony came in the first day of a coroner's inquest into the April 21 killing of her son, Gregory Sevier.

Meanwhile, U.S. Attorney Lee Thompson in Wichita asked the FBI to investigate whether any federal civil rights laws were violated in the shooting by Lawrence police officers James Phillips and Ted Bordman.

Sevier and her husband, Willie Sevier, testified at the inquest they summoned police out of concern for their son, who had taken a butcher knife and locked himself in his room.

Willie Sevier unlocked his son's bedroom door with a toothpick at the request of the first officer to arrive. The officer drew his gun and pushed the door open with a nightstick.

They said their son told the officer, "I didn't do anything," to which the officer did not respond.

However, Sevier said the officer yelled to the son, "Show me your hand. Show me your hand."

A second officer arrived, and Sevier and her husband were ordered away from the bedroom.

"I heard Greg say, 'Mom, I love you, Mom, I love you.' I said, 'Greg, I love you, too.' Then I heard two or three shots," Sevier said.

Willie Sevier testified that before the shooting he heard one of the officers shout, "Drop the knife, drop the knife," and heard his son tell the officers to shoot him.

The parents said their view into the son's bedroom was blocked and that they did not witness the shooting. The officers called for an ambulance, reporting Sevier was down, shot with a sucking chest wound.

Thirty minutes passed before the parents were told their son was dead. "That's when I went to pieces," Sevier testified. "I told the cops,

'You didn't have to shoot to kill."

Members of Lawrence's Indian community had demanded the district attorney remove himself from the inquest and turn it over to Thompson. They said District Attorney Jim Flory already had determined the shooting was justified.

But Thompson said Monday he had no jurisdiction to conduct the inquest, and Flory said he never suggested since the shooting that it was justified.

Flory told reporters the day after the shooting that Gregory Sevier had initiated an attack on one of the officers before the officer and a colleague opened fire.

"They respected a family man," Mai said.

He said he spent many nights when Tice was a POW thinking about Tice's family.

"I wondered about his daughters and what his wife was going through with those little girls," he said. "Tico lost 30 pounds in 30 days.

The Rangers weren't scheduled to execute the raid until Sunday morning between 0600 and 0900 hours (6-9 a.m.), so the OPFOR had plenty of time to get ready.

At least one person remained awake at all times throughout the night, and everyone was up by 0500 hours (5 a.m.) Sunday morning, preparing their stations for the raid.

Then they waited in silence again. The Ranger unit missed the time window for the raid, so Matt Keller, ROTC cadet commander and member of the OPFOR, and Sean Blundon, OPFOR commander, went out and bombarded the Ranger unit, just a few hundred meters off the objective, with artillery simulators. The Ranger unit didn't ever make it on to the objective.

At this point Rayburn and Marvin intervened and instructed the leaders of the Ranger platoon on how to execute an effective raid, and the Rangers tried again.

After a 30-minute step-by-step evaluation of the weekend training, conducted by Keller, both units trekked back to the vehicles several hundred meters away to head back to K-State.
